If the communicant to the Dispatch, who, as you state, objects to such prayers, on account of being religious, or introducing theology, with the evident purport of destroying the harmony of the lodge, was as tolerant and as charitable as he is anxious others should be, he would act more in conformity with the views of modern Judaism, and I predict that his "threats" will not elicit any encouragement from any of his co-religionists, among whom I am a member. Our irate brother may, however, have other potent reasons, and has probably under the excitement under which he evidently labored when he penned his communication to the Dispatch, forgot, or through fear neglected to inform the world that he is of the opinion that the principles of Masonry have been perverted by a few learned Masons, who, although pledged to follow the ancient landmarks, constantly introduce innovations; for instance; I know of an instance, where an eminent Master in Masonry, illustrated the work to suit his own religious views in theology, contrary and in direct violation of the spirit of the Order, opposed to the ancient usages, and to the guaranty the applicant received.

The brother, whoever he is, undoubtedly neglected to make out a "case," and like many other sprigs of the law, saw his best efforts scattered to the four winds of heaven. The difference in the use of theological prayers or expressions is a great one, and I hold that a Christian or Jewish prayer is entirely in order; while the use of theological doctrines, to either illustrate the work, or to inculcate the same to candidates, is opposed to the spirit of Masonry, and of the age we live in. You, my honored brother, acknowledge that certain phrases and expressions have been introduced, recognizing or alluding to Christianity; they were not wisely introduced, but to eradicate them, the prejudices of good men would be disturbed, conscientious convictions would be rudely assailed, and a club placed in the hands of our foes, that would be used with terrible effect. You declare then, that it would be wrong to correct an error, or rather, to uphold a wrong, in preference of eradicating an error.

Let us pray; Heavenly Father, return unto us the fellowship which Masonry proper extends, and which all good and true Masons should uphold.

Fraternally yours,
W. E. SADLER.

Selected Poetry.

Opening Hymn.

Air—"Old Hundred."

Upon Moriah's sacred hill,
  Peerless, the first great temple stood,
A trophy of "The Builder's" skill,
  And consecrated with his blood.

No tool of iron's jarring tone
  With deafening clangor rent the air;
Envy and discord were unknown,
  For fellowship and love were there.

Then, brothers, pray for heavenly aid
  While toiling in our temple's shrine,
That envious strife may not pervade,
  Or discord mar the grand design.

That all our works and words may prove
  That charity imbues each breast,
And that sincere fraternal love
  Is ever here a cherished guest.

And Thou, our God, who reign'st on high,
  Great source of love, and life, and light,
We humbly pray Thou wilt be nigh,
  And ever aid us in the right.

Peace between Hiram and Solomon.

EPICEDIUM.

The allegory of which has been copied from a talmudical MEDRASH on the Mystical Sense of I. Reg. V. 12, Al. 26.

How sweet this air! A CASSIA
  Gold-winged perfumes yon stones:
Dew-burning breathes ACACIA
  Her violets into bones.

Look BROTHER HIRAM'S tomb afar!
  His blood still smokes; his fears
Are gone; his moss-houses's sparkling star
  Shows not yet drained our tears.

God bless his soul! All SOLOMON
  Is BROTHER HIRAM now;
No more of Earth and Dust the son,
  The silk-worm's cover below.

What see I? Was this sorcery here?
  Was HIRAM still alive?
HE LIVES, HE STANDS, he speaks; my ear
  Says yes, HE STANDS ALIVE!

"Surely, I LIVE; I slept, I dreamed
  These seven short days IN PEACE:
Still seven short days, what THORN-PATHS seemed,
  By ROSE-PATHS leads to PEACE."

Grand Lodge of New York.

The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of the Ancient and Honorable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of New York assembled at Apollo Hall in annual convention. Nearly all the Grand Officers were present at the first session, and these, in full regalia, together with the representatives of subordinate lodges in the state, to the number of about 2,000, made the assemblage an imposing one. The lodge was opened in due form at 2 P. M., the respective Grand Officers taking their appropriate stations, and with prayer offered by R. W. and Rev. Bro. R. L. Schoonmaker, Grand Chaplain. After opening, an ode prepared for the occasion was finely rendered by a choir selected for the purpose, under the direction of W. Bro. W. F. Sherwin, of St. Cecile Lodge No. 568, of New York.

On motion of W. Bro. W. T. Woodruff, all Master Masons of subordinate lodges in good and regular standing were permitted to visit the Grand Lodge during the sessions.

The R. W. Bro. Rev. John G. Webster, Grand Chaplain, delivered the annual Chaplain's address—an address containing much of interest to the Craft, and which was listened to throughout with general attention.

On motion of W. Bro. Isaac L. Brown, it was ordered that the address be printed in full in the transactions.

The M. W. Bro. John H. Anthon, Grand Master, next delivered his address, during the reading of which he was frequently interrupted by applause, and particularly at the portion of it relating to French Masonry, and as to the attitude to be taken by the New York Grand Lodge towards the Grand Lodge of Quebec. The address, although much briefer than usual, is one of peculiar significance and of special importance. On motion, it was ordered that it be referred to a special committee for subdivision. The Deputy Grand Master, Senior and Junior Wardens were appointed as such committee.

R. W. Bro. James M. Austin, Grand Secretary, presented his annual report, which stated that the total amonnt of money received for the Masonic year ending May 31, 1871, was 63,854 dollars. The number of lodges making returns during the year has been 635, and in these bodies the following work has been accomplished: Initiations during the year, 6,778; affiliations, 1,081; total number of Masons registered, 7,859. The number of Masons admitted during the year has been 1,844; expelled, 47; suspended, 33; stricken from roll, 2,037: restored to membership, 349; died, 702; total number of Masons now in state in good standing, 75,262: total number of warranted lodges on roll, 649.

On Wednesday, R. W. Bro. Breed presented the report of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence, which, after some discussion, was, on motion, received. The report is a pamphlet of 100 printed pages, in which the status of Masonry throughout the world is given in detail. To the report a resolution was appended in relation to the Grand Lodge of Quebec, advising that the Grand Lodge of New York extend to the Grand Lodge of Quebec, in the province of Quebec, Canada, full and fraternal recognition as a regular Grand Lodge. The story of the differences existing between the two Grand Lodges of Canada extends over too long a period and would occupy too great a space for reproduction at this time. Suffice it to say that the whole question has been thoroughly reviewed by the Committee, and from the investigation made the above conclusion is arrived at. The Quebec Grand Lodge has heretofore been recognized by Grand Lodges in the United States, and by the Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia. Of the states bordering on Canada only New York and Vermont, as yet, withold recognition. Before acting in the matter, the main record of the facts bearing on the question was read by the Grand Master.

The resolution appended to the report was subsequently unanimously adopted, and the Grand Lodge, rising, received the new Grand Lodge of Quebec with the grand honors.

On Thursday, the third day of the session, the Grand Lodge proceeded with the annual election of officers, M. W. Bro. John H. Anthon retiring from the chair, while his place was occupied by M. W. Bro. Isaac Phillips. For the office of Grand Master for the ensuing year the name of the present incumbent was proposed by M. W. Bro. Stephen H. Johnson. R. W. Bro. William T. Woodruff, on the part of an opposition, offered as a candidate W. Bro. Gilbert E. Wood, Master of Pilgrim Lodge No. 204, of New York city. The Grand Master appointed R. W. Bros. G. Brody, and C. B. Wade, and Bro. C. Addoms, W. M., tellers, and balloting followed. The total number of votes cast was 2,272, of which the present Grand Master received 1,910, and Wood 356—scattering, 6. The result, on being declared, was received with great applause, whereupon M. W. Bro. John H. Anthon was presented to the Grand Lodge by a committee consisting of M. W. Bros. Johnson, Evans, and Jenkinson, and accepted the honor conferred in a few brief but appropriate words.

At the request of the Grand Master, M. W. Bro. Stephen H. Johnston took the East. when the following officers were re-elected by acclamation: R. W. Bros. Christopher G. Fox, Deputy G. Master; Edmund L. Judson, Senior Grand Warden; and James W. Husted, Junior Grand Warden. Each of the officers were in turn notified of their election by committees appointed for the purpose, and, upon being presented to the lodge, accepted the positions. M. W. Bro. John W. Simons, present Grand Treasurer, was re-elected by acclamation. The lodge then proceeded to the election of Grand Secretary, upon which something of a contest arose, the names of R. W. Bros. James M. Austin (now Secretary) and Frederick W. Herring being both presented. The election resulted as follows: total number of votes cast, 1,740—Austin, 1,509; Herring, 231. R. W. Bro. Austin was thereupon declared duly elected, and, being present, accepted the position in a feeling address. R. W. Bros. the Rev'ds. R. L. Schoonmaker, F. C Ewhr, and John G. Webster were next re-elected Grand Chaplains by acclamation. Also W. Bro. Johnston Fountain was re-elected Grand Pursuivant; W. Bro. John Hoole, Grand Tyler; and R. W. Bro. GeorgeH. Raymond, Grand Lecturer. The remaining Grand Officers holding their respective offices under appointment of the Grand Master, the election was declared closed and, on motion, the officers elected were all duly installed by M. W. Bro. James Gibson with the usual ceremonies.

The Grand Lodge concluded its communication on Friday' the 9th. After opening, a letter was read by the M. W. Grand Master Anthon, which had been recently received by M. W. Bro. Jenkinson, Representative of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, near this jurisdiction, giving an account of Masonry in that country. Among other matters mentioned, was that a new Masonic hall had recently been erected in Dublin at a cost of $80,000, and also that a new lodge had just been instituted in the University of Dublin, which was working well, many of the professors and students having already become members thereof.

W. Bro. Seaman, from Committee on Constitution and Laws, reported in favor of the resolution increasing the yearly Grand Lodge dues from fifty cents to seventy-five cents, twenty-five cents of which sum should be devoted to the Hall and Asylum Fund. The report occasioned debate, when Grand Master Anthon, passing the gavel to M. W. Bro. Stephen H. Johnson, addressed the Grand Lodge, making a stirring and eloquent appeal in aid of the great charitable enterprise in which the Fraternity is now engaged. It was the first time, he said, that he had publicly called upon the Craft for aid in the work, and he sincerely trusted it would never again become necessary that he should do so. A scene of much enthusiasm followed, the resolution was adopted unanimously and voluntary offerings were immediately made to a large amount. Although the exact sum is not known, it is estimated that nearly $6,000 were added to the fund. Nearly all the Grand Officers donated their fees for attendance and traveling expenses, about $30 each, and many of the representatives followed the example thus set. W. Bro. Robert H. Thomas, of Kane, and W. Bro. Henry D. Walker, of Independent Royal Arch, both lodges of this city, on behalf of those bodies, donated $1,000 each, and several other Masters of lodges pledged themselves in sums of $100 and upwards. W. Bro. Isaac H. Brown, Master of Puritan Lodge, individually donated $200. The result of the Grand Master's appeal was a most gratifying one.

When the enthusiasm had somewhat subsided, the Grand Master announced that the list of appointed Grand Officers, and that of District Deputies for the ensuing year, would be made out and announced after the Grand Lodge had ceased its labors. Also the Committee of five, authorized by the resolution providing for a revision of the Constitution. Prayer was then offered by R. W. Bro. the Rev. R. L. Schoonmaker, and the Grand Lodge was adjourned sine die.

Coming Events Cast their Shadows Before.

None can fail to see, every now and then, the out-cropping of an attempted anti-Masonic movement on the part of a certain class who are opposed to the institution of Masonry. At present it is like the speck on the horizon, no larger than a man's hand, but still increases with time. The distant mutterings of the storm denote that it is about to burst its confine, and spend its fury upon the walls of Masonry. Not in a day, however, nor perhaps a year, but still within our own time. The indications are seen in various sections of the country, in semi-religious papers, and sometimes in the newspapers of the day.

Behind all this there is a moving power, the object of which is the annihilation of Masonry. The component parts of this is formed of religious bigots, rejected applicants, and some few who are honest in their opinions, and who have not taken the trouble to inform themselves relative to the workings of Masonry, but have jumped at conclusions, or have inherited their ideas from anti-Masonic fathers. These fanatics are wise enough to know that individually they can do nothing, but think that by combining their forces they may accomplish their desired ends; and for this purpose they are working secretly and with a will worthy a better cause. Their main object is the formation of another anti-Masonic party, or to engraft their principles upon any side of politics that is open to receive their support.

This movement has been in existence several years. One of its purposes is to get control, or to enlist in their behalf, the secular press. To accomplish this, their leading members are scattered and located wherever the opportunity may best present itself. Many papers employ sub-editors and reporters, and in many instances these are composed of the very men, who in their capacity lose no opportunity to palm off their reports upon the public, and by this means endeavor to prostrate the columns of our large dailies to their views, and to turn the tide of public opinion to their way of thinking. Thus far, they have not accomplished much in this line, but as perseverance is one of their leading mottoes, they are looking forward to the time when it will be done.

In another direction they are using vigorous measures. They control two or three religious papers, and with this engine are using their best efforts to reach the religious community. One of their objects to be accomplished here is to exclude from membership with the church all that hold Masonic affinities. Clergymen are urged to impress upon their flocks the evils of Masonry and the dire affliction that it will entail upon their posterity. To still further this movement a convention of ministers and others who are favorable to their cause, is to be held in this city some time next fall. Its ostensible object is to bring into more perfect organization the members of their society; but its real object is to obtain a more perfect control of the ministry itself, by compelling all clergymen to leave the church or the Masonic lodge. How much can be accomplished in this way, time alone will tell.

Now these are questions that have got to be met squarely by the Fraternity. Ministers of every persuasion, and members of every denominatian; Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Unitarians, Episcopalians, Catholics and all who profess to believe in God, meet, as a common brotherhood in our lodge-rooms. We do not believe that these men can be turned as a pivot, at the will and beck of these fanatics; nor do we believe that the church will adopt any such fanatical policy. But should the governing powers of the church resolve upon such a course, then the ministerial portion of the Fraternity would be the first to suffer. They would be compelled either to leave their positions, dissolve all connections with their flocks, and be cast without the pale of the church, or leave the lodge.

This is the intended programme of these fanatical leaders who are shortly to congregate in convention. They think by these means they can compel ministers who are members of the Craft to leave it, and through them, mould the whole religious portion of the community to their views. After this is done, then another anti-Masonic excitement will be their next move.

We can safely say that a majority of ministers of the Gospel are Masons, especially among the Baptists and Methodists, and perhaps Episcopalians, together with a large sprinkling among nearly all denominations. Now, can the church afford to lose these earnest workers, who have labored hard in the cause of Christianity, and who have found no evil in the Mason's lodge? It cannot. And lose them they most assuredly would.

Aside from this it must be understood that large numbers of the congregation hold membership with the lodge, who, it is not to be supposed for an instant would tolerate such high-handed outrages upon their rights as individuals, and in the end the church would be much the heavier loser. Our brethren who are preaching God's Holy Word, will not want for the moral, or more substantial support of the Fraternity, nor will they swerve one moment from the right at the dictation of these fanatical lepers, who would be fit associates of Judas Iscariot.

As we have said before, these questions have got to be met squarely in the face, and the Fraternity may as well understand it now as at some future time. We cannot fashion events, but we can warn the Fraternity of impending danger, and they can govern themselves accordingly. We can now only repeat that coming events cast their shadows before.—Landmark.

Never Say Die.

Ever since we have been capable of forming and expressing our opinions, we have entertained an unchanging conviction that patient, persevering mantainance of the right must, sooner or later, eventuate in triumph. Were it not for the seeming egotism, we could point to numerous examples within our own experience where a given work has been accomplished, a principle established in the face of apathy and opposition, and after long delay and many repetitions of the same argument, which falling at first on dull ears, being treated with almost contempt, then with active enmity, has afteward come to be the unanimous expression of public sentiment. A notable instance may be found in the history of the Hall and Asylum Fund for the past few years. Readers of this journal will especially recollect the phases of opposition which have been publicly manifested, and the columns of patient iteration of the same idea by which that opposition has been finally put to death. Some years ago the Grand Lodge very cavalierly dropped a proposition to levy a tax of ten cents on the membership in aid of this fund—a tax, be it said, in passing, which would long since have furnished all the capital needed—it frequently refused to add twenty-five cents to the annual dues for a like purpose, and now it not only unanimously votes this tax, but with general acclaim gives to the fund every dollar in its treasury after the current expenses are paid. This act of the Grand Lodge, which is the representation of the entire Fraternity of the jurisdiction, is the triumph and reward of those who have long and earnestly labored for principle, and without other hope than that the principle might be established and the right finally triumph. Like the coral insect, these patient delvers have built up a wall from the depths of the sea, and now their work is crowned with light and approval, and the completion of the Temple secured.

The history of the people who founded and whose descendants and their allies, coming from every quarter of the globe, have perpetuated this great Republic, shows an undeviating devotion to that principle which has done and is doing more to revolutionize the ideas of men than any other—we mean the spirit of toleration. Slowly and patiently it has been interwoven with our principles of goverment and with the events of our social existence till people obey its behests

"As lightning does the will of God."

Nourished, and strengthened, and guarded by a nation of freemen, it has come to be a power before which every other must bend. The ukase of a despot, or the bulls of the Holy Father pale their ineffectual fires before its influence, and the least observing can now see that the time is marked on the dial when in every nation and kingdom on earth the right to civil and religious freedom, the right of every man to entertain and express opinions for himself, will be, of all others, the least questioned.

In this respect the events of the past week have a peculiar significance. They demonstrate in such plain terms as no man may possibly misunderstand, that in this country we will have no conscience-keepers; that here no man or body of men, shall have power to dictate to others what they shall believe, nor wherewith they shall be clothed. The press, which is at once the agent and leader of public opinion, never afforded a more sublime exhibition of its power than when it gave utterance to the unanimous verdict of all well disposed and law-abiding citizens, that the streets, of this metropolis should not be closed against one body of men at the dictation, and especially under the threats, of another body. However strong our individual prejudices may be, in the aggregate, we have no sympathy for, nor opposition to, any opinions our fellow-citizens may choose to entertain and it matters as little to us what occasions they may choose to celebrate. If our individual likes or dislikes make the occasion or the opinion distasteful to us, the city is large enough for us to get out of the way, and thus each may proceed without let or hindrance from the other. But this we have now demonstrated: that one body of peaceable citizens cannot be prevented from the enjoyment of the same right accorded to every other, while New York contains a man or a musket to defend the right. Every man who went down on Wednesday last before the bullets sped at the dictation of the public will, stands on record as a memento of the unfailing devotion of this people to the right of opinion and the inmortal principle of toleration; of their energetic determination that whatever force may be necessary to uphold it, will, at the proper time, be forthcoming.

This matter is of special interest to the Masonic institution, which is, in itself, the very embodiment of the spirit to which we refer; for if it could be established that the so-called Orangemen might not appear in public, because by so doing they would give offense to some other association having no greater rights in the community than the Orangemen, then it would be an easy matter to prevent us from appearing in public, should we be thus inclined. There are not a few who hold us no greater love than the "green" is supposed to entertain for the "orange," and they now have notice how utterly empty is their delusion if they suppose that they can ever succeed in drawing any considerable portion of the American people to indorse their narrow-minded bigotry.

There is still another lesson in this which should not be overlooked, for it is the underlying basis of the whole super-structure, and that is, that any subject or principle which is in itself intrinsically right, though it be hidden by scorn and contempt, choked by apathy and neglect, will, if its defenders have patience, and know how to wait, if they are consistent and determined in its advocacy, eventually overcome all opposition, and receive the acknowledgement which is due. We would rather be recorded among those whose lives have been spent in patiently laboring for the right, though it had never been given us to witness its smallest success, than to have a place among those more striking individuals who, like rockets, shoot brilliantly out into space, and then subside, leaving only the recollection of some fire, much smoke, and a burnt stick.

No disappointment or delay will ever defeat the man, who believing his cause to be just, puts his faith in God, keeps his powder dry and earnestly and patiently perseveres to the end. If he falls by the way side, the same Divine hand that smites him will raise up another to take his place. And, as surely as the sun rises and sets, and seed time and harvest fail not, the cause for which he has lived and labored will triumph.—Dispatch.

The Development of Speculative Masonry.

It is now generally conceded, even by the most enthusiastic members of the Craft, that the speculative science of our day bears the same relation to the Freemasonry of old that the giant oak bears to the pigmy acorn. For, whether we consider it as a lofty code of morality. or merely as a bond of union, most assuredly the symbolism of our Order has been the growth of time; and it is even yet receiving, through the sage researches of learned brethren, additional interpretations of wisdom, strength and beauty. The germ of modern Masonry was sown when men first gave proofs of that gregarious instinct which impelled them to build cities, and to dwell together in amicable and social communion. Freemasonry and solitude are not akin —the poet's sigh for "a lodge in the vast wilderness" finds no response in the Masonic breast. The very word "brother," suggests companionship, and is incompatible with the solitary gloom of the hermit. Freemasonry is, therefore, a twin with that human fellowship, of which it has since become the purest and most practical exemplar. But even as the laws of society were imperfectly understood and upheld in those primitive ages, so were the coeval teachings of Freemasonry equally crude and inoperative. The dream of fraternity faded before the fierce glow of ambition and the lurid glow of war. Tradition, which preserves the memory of Tubal Cain as a mighty worker in metal, also places on melancholy record his grief for having fashioned the sword and spear as well as the implements of husbandry. The same hands that built the house for protection, erected the fortress for annoyance or defense: and the lessons of order, and comfort, and happiness were forgotten in the thirst for power and fame. As time rolled on the passion of conquest spread—heroes, so-called, arose whose glory rests upon the disastrous triumphs they achieved. Blood flowed in torrents, and the will of one man—too frequently a tyrant—became the arbiter of life and death. But the work of Craft Masonry still went on, amid the turmoil and strife; obscured, but not destroyed. Nor can we doubt that the genius of architecture—reveling as it did in the creation of beautiful or stupendous forms—aided to a superlative degree the progress, while it directed the course, of enlightenment and civilization. Every temple was a landmark of thought and a monument of reason. Intellect shone through every pillar and illuminated every dome. The perfection of such kingly Masonry became to all a hope and an aspiration. Men gazed upon the structures they had reared, and exulted in the grandeur of the conception to which they had given such immortal shape and substance. It is also evident that the peaceful labors of those ancient Craftsmen must have banded them together in enormous masses. The Pyramids alone attest this fact, and the mighty ruins of ancient Greece and Rome speak eloquently of the vast Masonic confederations of old. What do we infer from all this? In the first place, that a common task begat a common sympathy, and that a common sympathy begat a common brotherhood. It may be said, and with great plausibility. that other classes of workmen were likewise called together in great numbers; but it must not be forgotten that the art of building was the centre upon which nearly all other useful trades depended. Without protection from the weather, the exquisite visions of the painter, and even the less delicate creations of the sculptor, must speedily have perished and decayed. Operative Masonry supplies this want; and as "Order is Heaven's first law, and this confessed. it is, and must be, greater than the rest" of the handicrafts, however useful or ornamental. In the second place, the tools or implements made use of by working Masons are far more susceptible of a hidden significance—an occult symbolism—than those of any other art or trade. The square, level, and plumb-rule—their uses? Taken both in an operative and speculative sense, the relationship is perfect, and the metaphorical connection complete. The pencil, the compasses, and, in other branches of Masonry, the mallet, the chisel, and the trowel, are apposite emblems of the highest moral truths, and forcibly inculcate the fulfilment of every social and religious duty. In this manner was built up, day by day and year by year, the wondrous system now called Freemasonry. Through the various stages of architecture,—amidst its proudest triumphs, graven in stone as everlasting memorials of the will and power of man —we can trace the operative leading to the speculative, the material to the immaterial and sublime. Not merely in the chef d' œuvres of ancient art, in the arches of the Colosseum or the high-domed temples of Greece, but in the mediæval cathedrals—the modern palaces and pavilions which gem many European lands. We have no need to look for a mysterious origin in the occult ceremonies of the Persian Magi or Pagan Cabiri.

The builder's science is ours, and if we no longer erect earthly temples, we are taught by the symbolism of the royal art to raise a spiritual structure, strong in good works and fashioned after the model of a perfect man. In short, we must realize the splendid imagery of our great Masonic poet, Bro. Augustine Duganne:

> "When the pillars of strength in our porch shall abide
> With the lillies of beauty above,
> And the vail of the Presence, encompassing wide,
> Overshadow the Ark of our love;
> And the peace of the blessed Shekinah
> Enfold, like the wings of a dove!

Vain disquisitions upon the antiquity of the Craft are not to the purpose; it is now, and has ever been to some extent at least, a school of morality and virtue. Let us profit by its lessons, and exemplify its real grandeur by deeds of charity and benificence. The man who acts as a Mason is the only true one, whether he be an Entered Apprentice or a Grand Master; and this fact is daily impressed upon our minds by sorrowful experience. But the symbolism of Masonry ever remains the same—a deathless code for man's instruction; a book of wisdom for all who choose to learn. Let us, therefore, ponder more and more its teachings, and illustrate its deep and mystic meaning; convinced that in the end we shall attain to such an exalted perception of the truth as was rarely vouchsafed even to the seers of old.—Freemason, London.

What Some People Think of Us.

Traveler—a correspondent of our good friend Reynolds' TROWEL—which everybody should subscribe for—says that "Rounseville is a heavy dog," and further remarks that he—Rounseville—"puts him in mind of Doctor Mott," who "could probe a wound, remove a tumor, or amputate a limb with such perfect ease and grace that for the time being the patient would almost forget he was the subject being operated upon."

Now, that was all very well so far as Rounseville was concerned, whom he had a right, if he liked, to make a pen and ink scalpel or anything else of; but why did he not let us of Pomeroy's Democrat alone? Hear what he says of us—when we catch Traveler, we'll punch his head for his insolence:

"Following close in the wake, and in good keeping, is that article from Pomeroy's Democrat (from the themeful pen of Bro. Tisdall, I suppose), on the selection of competent officers to fill the stations in our lodges. That article ought to be read by every Mason in the State. It is worthy of being printed on half-sheets, framed and hung up in every Lodge in the land, and be made part of the opening ceremony to have it read at every communication. It is as he says an outrage, a gross wrong and an insult to the Fraternity to elect brethren to office who are incompetent to discharge all their duties."—Pomeroy's Democrat.

The 24th June.

Last Saturday was the day of all days for the Masonic Fraternity—St. John's day—and was duly celebrated by the brethren of the mystic tie, in this section of country, by a grand basket picnic at Tallula.

Petersburg, Ashland and Greenview, sent down their delegations of the Free and Accepted, while Hospitaller Commandery of this city, escorted members of Harmony and Jacksonville Lodges to the place of gathering. Thanks to Superintendent and Sir Knight Morse, special railroad arrangements were made so that the Morgan county visitors could go up in the morning, and return early in the evening. The Jacksonville Silver Cornet Band accompanied them. The procession was formed about noon, at the Baptist Church, Tallula, and it moved promptly to the beautiful grove north of the town, where an abundance of refreshing shade and water was furnished to the weary travelers, and where a very large concourse of people was already assembled. The procession was constituted as follows:

Grand Marshall, Col. Judy.
Jacksonville Silver Cornet Band.
Hospitaller Commandery.
Orator of the day.
Visiting lodges from the north.
Visiting lodges from the south.

The platform, which, by the way, was large and tastefully decorated, having been reached, ranks were broken, and dinner announced, and it was no unwelcome sound, to the Jacksonvillians at least, judging from the manner in which they visited table after table, and accepted the urgent invitations of our kind hosts to partake of the abundant and appetizing viands provided. The ladies of Tallula and vicinity deserve the greatest credit for the bountiful manner in which they ministered to the wants of their guests. The number present in the grove at this time must have been nearly three thousand, yet all were feasted, and an abundance of food left untouched. After dinner, the exercises at the grand stand began with music, and then Dr. Newton Bateman delivered to the vast assembly a masterly address upon the growth and stability of Feeemasonry. I wish it were possible for me to give your readers even an outline of the eloquent speaker's oration, which was beyond all question the finest effort of the kind ever listened to in central Illinois, and received the deepest attention from all classes. It was vociferously applauded by the Craft. The learned orator referred at length to the antiquity, ubiquity, vitality and invulnerability of the Order, and eloquently portrayed what a lodge should be by dwelling upon what it is not, i. e. a Christian church, a political association, a financial or commercial institution, a mutual or endorsement society, or a merely social club. Born of Heaven-given feelings of human sympathy, the Order which ante-dates all other worldly organizations, should and will continue to develope among all men, and especially among Masons the world over, the Divine principles upon which it rests its foundation—charity. "So mote it be."

With music and rousing cheers for the speaker, our hosts, &c., the assemblage dispersed, the Fraternity returning to the depot in procession and the best of spirits over this orderly and in every respect delightful observance of the day we (Masons) celebrate.

Before separating a committe was appainted to request of Dr. Bateman a copy of his address for publication, and we learn that the application was successful. We hope that it will be given to the public through the Journal.—Jacksonville Journal.

Our good brethren at Eureka, Woodford Co., had a good time. R. W. Bro. Rounsville of Peoria delivered an address upon the Religion of Masonry.

From the Mirror.

CHICAGO, JUNE 24th, 1871.

Editors Mirror.

I should be ungrateful, were my heart to cease throbbing at the remembrance of the pleasant relations I have sustained to the brethren in San Francisco. Never have I enjoyed Masonry so much as in their midst. Would that my lot might be there!

Being somewhat a stranger in this city, I was fortunate enough to meet with my old friend—Ill. Bro. D. W. Thomson, 33°, who introduced me to many illustrious Brethren attending the Annual Council of Deliberation of the A. and A. Rite, which assembled on yesterday in the Hall of Occidental Consistory.

The Council was honored with the presence of Ill. Bro. Albert Pike, our Sovereign Grand Commander, to whom I was introduced by Ill. W. A. Stevens, 33°, the Deputy G. Commander. To meet with the venerable and distinguished Bro. Pike, was an episode in my present travels I shall ever remember. I had also the pleasure of an intoduction to Ill. Bro. H. G. Reynolds 33°, Past Grand Master of Illinois.

But what I especially desire at this time, is to give expression to those hallowed feelings, which crowded my soul at the exemplification of the 17th and 18th degrees, by Gourgas Chapter of Rose Croix. The work was admirably performed by Ill. Bro. H. F. Holcomb, M. W. and P. M., together with the other officers.

The scenery was gorgeons; and the sublimities revealed to my astonished vision were such, as can never be obliterated from memory's tablet. The great lesson I was taught was that of FAITH, HOPE, CHARITY.

When o'er the bright and variegated earth
  Showers are creeping,
And flowers bend to kiss the dewy turf,
  Like Angels weeping:—
A chord oft vibrates in my lonely breast,
  Touched by an unknown hand that breathes of rest—
I know 'tis FAITH!

And when the sad and mournful autumn winds,
  Are round me sighing,
And yellow leaves are borne upon its wings,
  All sere and dying:—
Methinks I hear a whisper soft and sweet,—
  "Thus loved ones fade, but soon in glory meet"—
I know 'tis HOPE!

When in the fairy realms of sleep I roam,
  Weary and toiling,
All burdened with life's bitter cares I moan,
  While tears are falling:—
An angel being beckons me so mild,—
  "Come to my bosom, tired and homesick child"—
I know 'tis CHARITY!

Convention of Foreign Correspondents at Baltimore.

In addition to the unusual attractions of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States, to be held in Baltimore, in September next, it is proposed to hold a convention of the Chairmen and members of the Committees on Foreign Correspondence of the several Grand Lodges, Chapters, Councils and Commanderies in the United States, together with those who have acted on such committees. It is believed that much good to the Fraternity will result from this meeting. The Asylum of Maryland Commandery, No. 1, in the Masonic Temple (topmost story), Charles near Saratoga streets, has been kindly furnished for the occasion by M. E. Comp. E. T. Schultz, Deputy Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter of Maryland. The meeting will be held at 8 o'clock on Monday evening, September 18, 1871. It is to be hoped that there will be a large representation present.—Keystone.

Circular.

Illinois Institution for the Education of Feeble Minded Children.

This institution, which was inaugurated in 1865 as an experimental school for the education of feeble minded children, has been so successful in training this unfortunate class that at the last session of the General Assembly it was organized upon an independent basis, and was incorporated as one of the permanent charitable institutions of the State, thus completing the noble circle of public charities of the commonwealth of Illinois.

The design and object of the institution is to furnish the means of education to children and youth of feeble minds, who are deprived of educational privileges elsewhere, and who are of a proper school attending age. It is designed for those so deficient in intelligence as to be incapable of being educated at common schools, who are not epileptic, insane or deformed.

The education furnished by the institution will include, not only the simple elements of instruction usually taught in common schools, where that is practicable, but will embrace a course of training in the more practical matters of every day life; the cultivation of habits of decency, propriety, self-reliance and development and enlargement of a capacity for useful occupation.

The combination which this institution presents, of practical medical care and proper physical and mental training, with efficient educational resources, will supply, it is hoped, a want which has long been felt and imperatively demanded by this unfortunate class of children and youth of the State.

The improvement and progress of the pupils have been very encouraging, and parents and friends in almost every instance have expressed satisfaction with what has been accomplished in the short time since the school was organized.

The institution is open to the inspection of the public at all reasonable hours; and all are not only cordially invited, but are earnestly requested to visit the school.

It is a State institution, and board and tuition are free during the school year of ten months.

It is the desire of the Trustees to ascertain accurately the number of this unfortunate class of persons in the State, and persons knowing the residence of any in Illinois will confer a favor by reporting the same to the undersigned, as it is desirable that reliable statistics may be gathered in order that proper legislation may be made in their behalf,

Those designing to apply for the admission of pupils should do so at once, as the accommodations are limited.

Applications for admission, information, etc., should be directed to

The Word and Ceremonies of the Early Christians.

"The secret word which the associated brethren used among themselves for purposes of mutual recgonition and confirmation was Maranatha, 'The Lord will come.' They fancied that they remembered a declaration of Jesus, according to which their preaching would not have time to reach all the towns of Israel before the Son of Man appeared in his Majesty. Baptism was the sign of entrance into the sect. The rite was the same in form as the baptism of John, but it was administered in the name of Jesus. Baptism was, however, considered an insufficient initiation into the Society. It should be followed by a conferring of tbe gifts of the Holy Spirit, which was produced by means of a prayer pronounced by the apostles over the head of the neophyte, with the imposition of hands. This imposition of hands,, already so familiar to Jesus (Matthew XIX. 13, Mark X. 16, Luke IV. 40,) was the crowning sacramental act."—Freemason, London.

COMPASS OF THE FEMALE VOICE.—In the "Magic Flute," Christina Nillson sings f above the staff. The youngest of the Sisters Sessi, with a compass of three and a half octaves, reached the same note. Catalina had the same wonderful compass, but pitched a third lower. The highest voice on record is that of Lucretia Ajugari, whom Mozart heard at Parma. With a voice as pure as a flute, she ascended to tripple c, trilling on the d above. A Madame Becker, who astonished St. Petersburg in 1823, reached the same note by accident. Dr. Marx, however, testifies to having heard a girl of twelve years reach the tripple or four-lined e, the seventh space above the g clef,—a major third above the c mentioned—with clearness and purity of intonation; and her lowest note was the little c, fourth space below the g clef, making a compass of four octaves. Jenny Lind's highest note was the third-lined f—the same as Nillson's; and Madame Malabran—Garcia—sang f sharp. But it must be remembered that the pitch has risen since the days of those great singers.

THE TROWEL.—We are glad to welcome Bro. Reynolds again, after his severe loss by fire. THE TROWEL looks as fresh and inviting as ever, and we trust it may have a long and successful career. It is one of our best exchanges, and Bro. Reynolds is one of the most experienced and scholarly Editors in the country.—Review.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

IS PUBLISHED BETWEEN THE FIRST AND FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH.

Price per year, - - - - - - $1.25.

THE TROWEL is the oldest Masonic journal in America now published in its present form, and is again presented to the Masonic Fraternity for renewed and generous support.

It has ever been the organ of the masonic people and their families—such it will remain. It has been the friend and advocate of law, order, morality, intelligence—of improvement, progress and toleration, and will continue so to be.

It is now printed on new type, superior paper, and will give the latest Masonic tidings.

But three pages of the paper will be given to advertisements; but, if sufficient inducement be offered, a cover will be added and made a part of the paper for that purpose.

Advertisements for one month, payable in advance; for three months, payable one-half in advance and the remainder after the first insertion; for six months or longer, payable one-third in advance, the remainder quarterly.

The space usually occupied by eight lines of nonpareil type, solid, will be regarded as one square, or, twelve squares to each column.

Equitable charges will be made for changes, alterations or withdrawals.

Orders for advertisements from abroad should state how much space is desired.

Editorial notices will in all cases be written by ourself, and charged for at the rate of one dollar for every ten words or less, payable in advance. The request for editorial notice should be accompanied by the money for the number of words desired, in no case exceeding fifty.

Any one who fails to pay bills when due without an acceptable excuse, will have his or their advertisement thrown out with an editorial notice to that effect. Suspension of business is a sufficient excuse.

No advertisement received from irresponsible houses nor for an immoral or disreputable business, and I reserve to myself the right to reject all such.

No one is authorized to receive any advertisement for me except by my written authority, nor will any advertisement be received without the written authority of the party ordering it.

The Duty of the Hour.

From returns already received, it appears to be quite certain that the new constitution proposed by the Grand Lodge and submitted to the subordinates to be passed upon will be adopted:—it will be, if the returns to come bear any proportion to those received. In that event the instability in legislation, and the fretful, peevish changing of the few past years, will give place to order, system, healthy discipline, uniform decisions, high-toned jurisprudence, and a courteous, conservative spirit in the Grand Lodge. Of course, by-laws rules of order, a trial code, and judicial statutes will be framed in harmony with the constitution. This being so, our annual gatherings will become more formal, and will give opportunity to do something in accordance with the genuine principles of Freemasonry. The late civil war has made many widows, orphans, invalids and mutilated brethren, who are entitled in addition to the ordinary demands of humanity, to the special sympathy and assistance of the Craft. What has been, may be, will be again. If we do not have wars, we may have devastating pestilence, drouth, famine, flood, fire or other calamities to make objects of charity and commisseration. Let us not forget that now is our day of prosperity; let us remember the vows we have taken; let us ever bear in mind that what one may be unable to do, can be done by two; that individual or isolated expenses are much larger in proportion than aggregates. Hence if a charge cannot well be borne by one lodge, it may easily be borne by two, and that the expense of one charge, when combined with several, and borne by a large number of lodges, is lessened in proportion, and lessened to each lodge.

We were about to say that the enemies of Freemasonry charge us with being untrue to our professions of charity and relief. No one should be, in the least degree, influenced by any such senseless clamor, but should act upon his voluntary pledges, from a sense of duty, and from the high and noble promptings of a generous heart. But we stop to deny the charge, for among Masons, Christians, Jews, infidels and heathen, there are millions who shrink from any display of their charities, their gifts, or their good deeds—which are numerous, and like the dew of Hermon—God bless them, is our earnest prayer.

To resume our theme. The old veteran Mason, faulty though he may have been, should not suffer in his old age for want of the necessaries of life. The invalid unable to labor, should not pine in want; the widow should not reproach us in her poverty, that her husband was a worthy Mason, nor should his orphan child be suffered to waste his youth in idleness, only to be worthless as a man. What is to be done? We will only shadow it now. A valuable property might be secured in the equable climate of Southern Illinois, where the aged, decayed and invalid Freemason, and the wives or widows of such in similar condition, might be amply provided for, at less than half the present cost in single lodges. A home, founded by the munificence of opulent Freemasons, and the lesser contributions of the Craftsmen, might be established in or near Chicago, where learning might be acquired, and trades learned to perfection.

The same means might establish a farm in some favored locality, where the boy may learn the manly art of agriculture in all its varied branches. The most profitable mode of horticulture, the highest art of stock raising, with all the arts taught around the farm-house by the husbandman or housewife, might be learned to such an extent as not only to secure a competency to the orphan boy or girl, but to send them forth as blessings to mankind.

Brethren! can this be done? We answer, what has been done by England can be done by Illinois. THE TROWEL is open to plans, suggestions and discussions upon this topic.

Fathers Provoke not your Children to Anger.

The greatest judge of the passions, motives, infirmities and weaknesses of human nature, who has written for the benefit of his fellow men, was St. Paul. Setting aside his mere Christian character, and even then it must be admitted that no human writer has ever given so many excellent maxims, or so much pure instruction for the goverment of society, or the regulation of human conduct. Every deviation from his rules, leads to loose morals, disregard of law, injustice in society, or oppression of individuals. That St. Paul was a Freemason, like most of his countrymen of distinction, is beyond cavil. His writings prove it. We want no other proof than what his writings afford. The very basis of a Freemason's character is his promise to try to subdue his passions. If the professed trust in the Great I Am be sincere, as we have no doubt it generally is, and he keeps his promise fairly, then such Freemason will subdue his passions, and will force them to contribute in their appropriate use to the good of his race.

We are led to this theme through Masonic instruction, and desire to impress upon the minds of Fathers, especially Masons, the injunction of St. Paul, given at the head of this article. But in giving the injunction he gives a reason for it, aside from the manifest impolicy of provoking children to anger, in this, "lest they be discouraged." How many men, and even Masons are there whose government has been so absolute, whose commands have been so imperative, and whose wills have been so inflexible, that disobedience has been punished without reason, that impossible performance has met discipline without explanation, and submission to parental will has made the child a mere machine. Do not let us be misunderstood. We wish to enforce the doctrine that the passions are to be subdued; that anger is unmanly; that children are not to be discouraged. We wish also to enforce the doctrine that the man is the head and governor of the family; that his goverment is to be guided by reason and based upon love. That force is the exception, and not the rule. Love is peace, and a peaceful family is a blessing to itself and community. Force is war, and constant force in a family is the parent of contention, vice and crime. Force being the exception is to be used only in cases of necessity, and then with reason and efectively.

It is the duty of every father to train up his children to usefulness, so that they may be able to take care of themselves, and be useful in society. No man can do this who is not industrious himself, who is immoral, who vents his spleen upon his wife and children, who drives and storms and brings all in subjection to a tyrannical and imperious will. The Meara affair is a terrible warning to fathers. Anger lashed to fury, reason dethroned, murder the result. Contemplate it brethren, and then resolve to govern in love; never to speak, act or punish in anger, but to give reasonable commands, investigate carefully, and never punish without reason, and in such a spirit that a child may see that it is a grief to yourself enforced to secure obedience as a duty. Acting in this spirit, children will love and obey their parents as a rule, and will be encouraged.

Pride of Character.

The term "pride of character," in its general acceptation means self-respect. In reality it includes much more, for character may be good or bad, and as applied to persons, embraces the qualities which distinguish one from another.

The reputation of a man may be good, simply because he avoids evil, does nothing wrong, and scarcely does anything. When asked what you know of such a man, you are forced to say even after a daily acquaintance, that you know nothing bad of him. This is negative, and it is better to have negative praise than none.

But such men are unfit for the Masonic temple, because advancements with them is neither desirable or possible, while if they should commit errors, their foolishness would be manifested to the chagrin of every true Freemason.

Pride of character, embraces only good qualities, and the exclusion of bad ones. A man who is the very soul of generous principles, who has honorable impulses, and whose words are music and actions eloquence, destroys all his legitimate pride in the flowing bowl, in the gambling house, in the refuge of sin, or by his profane or obscene words.

He alone has pride of character who possesses qualities that may make him useful and honored, and exerts himself in the use of such qualities, and who keeps himself so pure, that his good is not evil spoken of.

None but such men should be permitted even to aspire to the honors of Freemasonry, by any sort of encouragement whatever. In other words, an aspirant for initiation should be of good report, and then have a character for some useful qualities, which make him what in common parlance is somebody instead of a nobody.

The Grand Lodge of North Carolina

Held its Centennial Anniversary at Raleigh, Jan. 14, when an eloquent oration was delivered by Rev. Numa F. Reid D. D. Henry Somerset, Duke of Beaufort, Gr. Master of England, on the 14th of January, 1771, granted his authority to Joseph Montfort, as Provincial Grand Master of America, to make Masons, and constitute lodges.

Resuscitated.

The M. W. Grand Master has restored the charter of Bromwell Lodge No. 351, at Assumption, Christian Co., on the I. C. R. R. Jas. R. Milligan, W. M., Jas. W. Aldrich, S. W., Peter J. Potts, J. W., Charles Piercy, Sec. The Lodge is in good working order, with fair prospects.

Missouri.

October 7, 1870, there were 387 lodges, and 18,000 Master Masons, 70 chapters, and 2800 Royal Arch Masons in Missouri, while there were but 7 councils, and about 400 Royal and Select Masters. New life seems to be infused into the organization. Recently through the working of St. Joseph Council, over which our esteemed Comp. W. R. Penick presides at St. Joseph, Holt Council was set to work by Comp. Penick, and under the direction of Comp. E. L. Allen, will thrive and prosper.

National Masonic Welcome.

We are indebted we suppose, to M. W. Bro. C. F. Stansbury, for a beautiful pamphlet containing a circumstantial account of the welcome, banquet and ceremonies of the reception of the Right Honorable Earl De Grey and Ripon, Chairman of the British Joint Commissioners, one of the Cabinet of the Queen, and M. W. Grand Master of Masons in England, held by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, April 8. Sir John A. MacDonald of Canada, a member of the Commission, Lord Tenterden, of England, Secretary of the Commission, and Styleman Le Grange of the British Legation, were also in attendance as distinguished visitors. Brethren Burchard, McNeely and Logan of the Illinois delegation were present. Everything was worthy of the fame of the Grand Lodge of the Seat of Empire, and gratifying to its noble and meritorious guests.

The Great Central Fair

At the beautiful city of St. Joseph, Mo., will commence on Tuesday, the 22d inst., and continue five days. The premiums amount to $5,000. Large arrangements are made to accommodate stock and visitors, and the rail roads and river craft grant liberal terms to shippers and travelers. St. Joseph is at the termination of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Rail Road, and is much the largest city in northwestern Missouri. It has a rail road to St. Louis, one to Kansas City, via Atchison, and one west to Marysville, Kansas, one running northeast, one north into central Iowa, and one up the river to Council Bluffs, and not the least, is the river itself.

ON the 23d June, R. W. Bro. Geo. W. Lininger, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, installed the officers of Hospitable Lodge, at Dunlap, and on the 24th he constituted Mt. Nebo Lodge, No, 297, at Avoca, and installed its officers. P. B. Hunt, W. M.; J. True, S. W.; John Cool, J. W.

Trade and Commerce of Chicago.

We are indebted to some one or two—thanks for same—for the Annual Review, by the Chicago Tribune, of the Trade and Commerce of Chicago for 1870. The Review is a pamphlet of 152 pages, and displays the enterprise of the publishers.

The receipts of grain and flour alone were as follows: flour, 1,766,037 barrels; corn, 20,189,775 bushels; wheat, 17,394,409 do; oats 10,472,078 do.; rye, 1,093,493 do.; barley, 3,335,653 do.

The wheat of Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa is set down at 260,147,000 bushels, and this is but a specimen of the products generally. The transactions in grain, are a fair index to the lumber, cattle and pork trade, and the manufactures of the wonderful city of Chicago. The Central; Chicago & Alton; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Chicago & North Western; Chicago, R. I. & Pacific; Michigan Southern; Michigan Central; Chicago, Danville and Vincennes; Chicago & Iowa; Chicago & South Western; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago; and several new ones, with their numerous branches and connections, carry directly to Chicago, enlarging its boundaries, increasing its immense shipping, and adding to its teeming, busy, enterprising population. Competition and rivalry only stimulate it to still vaster and giant-like undertakings.

The Landmark,

Published by our worthy brother, Geo. F. Ilsley, at 40 Fulton street, N. Y., from small beginnings has become one of the best Masonic papers published.

Loomis' Musical and Masonic Journal,

299 Chapel Street, New Haven, Conn. by C. M. Loomis; $1 per annum, improves with its years.

The Song Messenger

Is published by Root & Cady, 67 Washington St., Chicago. It is good. $1 per year.

Good Health

Is a charming health journal. Removed now to 2, Hamilton Place, Boston, where Alexander Moore will take your two dollars from hand or letter, and give you an honest return.

Home and Health,

Almost indispensable. By W. R. De Puy, 805 Broadway, N. Y.; $1.50 per year.

Herald of Health

Has good sensible articles and is published by Wood & Holbrook, 13 and 15 Laight St., N. Y. $2 per year.

The Mother's Journal,

Edited by Mrs. Mary G. Clark, is now published at 239 Broadway, N. Y., at $2 per year. It maintains its old character for good, motherly, high-toned articles, and is what every mother should have.

The Little Corporal,

For August has come. It is the first number we have seen for more than a year, although noticed more than twenty times its commercial value, yet we freely notice it again, expecting precisely similar treatment. It is now in magazine form, full of fresh, cheery, nice reading for girls and boys from five years and onward, and no one can rise from its perusal without feeling purer and younger. $1.50 per year. John E. Miller, 6 Custom House Place, Chicago, Publisher; Emily Huntington Miller, Editor. Private Queer is queer surely: Aunt Prudy isn't prudish a bit.

The reception of the Allegheny Crusaders in London, was cordial and elegant.

The Mt. Pulaski Observer.

The first number of a paper bearing the above title, has come to our table, from the hands of our late foreman, Bro. Frank Sloan, neutral in politics, and devoted to the interests of Mt. Pulaski, and Logan County. Our good friends at that burg may rest assured that if they treat Frank well, he will serve them well. And we would advise our wholesale neighbors about here, with whom the Pulaskians must soon come in contact, to remember the Observer in the way of liberal pre-paid advertising. Help a young man to start, and it will pay you ten-fold.

The Political Crisis

Is a new eight page paper published by Geo. R. Weber and Geo. W. Weber & Co. The veteran, Geo. R. Weber, commenced the publication of the Illinois Republican in Springfield in 1835, which was subsequently merged in the Register, and published by Walters & Weber for many years. Always temperate, fearless and honest, he starts out again with an independent political paper, untrammelled by party, uncontrolled by rings, and strongly in support of temperance and labor. The paper itself is full of vigorous, plain spoken articles, reminiscences of the olden times, discussions in regard to money, and has a decidedly moral and religious aroma.

In 1847, we visited Springfield Lodge No. 4, Wm. Lavely in the East; Geo. R. Weber in the West; John S. Vredenburg in the South, all strong, worthy men.

Rob. Morris, Jr. was married at the residence of his father, at La Grange, Ky., on the thirtieth anniversary of the father's marriage, and the twenty-fifth of his Masonic initiation.

THE September number will be delayed purposely until the 15th, so as to give the latest news possible from returns, and information in relation to the coming meetings in the first week in October.

THE views of Dr. Darrah, as set forth in his communication in this number, agree with ours precisely.

THE TROWEL.—We were exceedingly gratified a few days since on receiving the second number (the first failing to reach us), of the new series of this, one of the most popular and able of the Masonic periodicals of the country. Our readers have already been informed of the great loss which its estimable editor R. W. Bro. H. G, Reynolds, sustained by the calamitous fire at Springfield, in which his office, including printing materials and his valuable library, was destroyed, together with the books, records, regalia and furniture of the Grand and subordinate lodges which held their meetings in the same building. The loss to Bro. Reynolds personally was ruinous. It swept away the fruits of years of hard labor, and left him with little else than his own commanding abilities and untiring perseverance and industry for the future. His brethren have generously sympathized in his misfortune, and he starts off again in the battle of life with renewed energies, and we most sincerely trust with brighter and better prospects before him.—Magazine, Boston.

Selected Poetry.

Joseph Warren, the Patriot Grand Master.

When the war-cry of liberty rang through the land,
To arms sprang our fathers, the foe to withstand.
On old Bunker Hill their intrenchments they rear,
When the army is joined by a young volunteer.
"Tempt not death!" cried his friends! but he bade them good-bye,
Saying—"Oh! it is sweet for our country to die."

The tempest of battle now rages and swells,
'Mid the thunder of cannon, and the pealing of bells,
And a light not of battle illumines yonder spire—
Scene of woe—scene of woe; 'tis Charlestown on fire!
The young volunteer heedeth not the sad cry,
But murmurs, "'tis sweet for our country to die."

With trumpets and banners the foe draweth near;
A volley of musketry checks their career!
With the dead and the dying the hill-side is strown,
And the shout through our line is, "the day is our own."
"Not yet," cries the young volunteer, "do they fly?
Stand firm! oh! 'tis sweet for our country to die!"

Now our powder is spent and they rally again;
"Retreat!" says our chief, "since unarmed we remain."
But the young volunteer lingers yet on the field,
Reluctant to fly and disdaining to yield.
A shot! ah!—he falls! but his life's latest sigh
Is, "'tis sweet, oh! 'tis sweet for our country to die!

And thus WARREN fell! happy death! noble fall!
To perish for country at Liberty's call!
Should the flag of invasion profane ever more
The blue of our seas, or the green of our shore,
May the hearts of our people re-echo that cry,
"'Tis sweet, oh! 'tis sweet for our country to die!"

Old Grandfather Graybeard's Corner.

Dear Bro. Reynolds:

It is only when we undertake to do certain things that we find we are no longer young; in fact, that we are growing old; and, however reluctantly, yet we must retire from the more active duties of life and leave them to the boys.

I have been led to this reflection, from the fact that the other night I undertook to confer the Master's degree. The Worshipful was gone, and so the boys insisted that I should try my hand once more; I could not well refuse, for you see, I had organized their Lodge and Chapter, and was for many years their W. M. and H. P.; so I took hold and did the best I could; they all said it was first rate, but I know it was not as good as I could work twenty years ago. I am growing old; I can't get up and get around as I used to do, I can't go to lodge every night as I used to, and work sometimes till late at night. I have to ask to be excused after the regular busi-is over, and go home for rest and refreshment. But this I can do; I can sit in my easy chair and think the old times over, and memory brings around me the old brethren who have passed the square, and for their rewards repaired to that C. L. A. W. T. S. A. O. T. U. P., and whose works have been approved as they had gone on before them.

I don't believe in ghosts, but having nothing to do I have to think, and thinking brings up, not only those I was personally acquainted with, but those whose writings I love; so I often sit and talk with my favorite authors, such as Anderson, Preston, Oliver, Ashe, Calcott, De Vertot, Smith and a host of others; why bless you, I never read the Great Light of Masonry but I have the scene and all the characters before me, and Tubal Cain, Moses, Aholiab, Bezaleel, Solomon, the Hirams, and all the old worthies are just as familiar as my own household.

Yes, we,(that is the old authors and I) often meet in this cosy room and talk over the past, the present, and the future of our beloved Order, and our criticisms might not be considered very complimentary to you and the boys, if you should hear them; we fear that you are going too fast, making too many Masons, making it too popular, and that by and by there will have to be another brush, just to purge the wheat from the chaff.

Then again, we have rich times, old reminiscences that come up fresh as new, with jest, and toast, and song, till the old room almost shakes again with the glee; till Stell, (that's my grand-daughter,) sometimes puts her head into the door to ask what grandpa's laughing at; but they have got used to us, and don't often trouble us now. Then, there are lots of the new-fangled things we don't half like; the literature is soapy; a great deal of broth, and but little meat; so unlike the old authors I have named; then the poetry for the most part is awful, and by the by, that's what I started out to talk about, and had almost forgotten about till this moment; it was in this wise: the other night, while turning the leaves of one of the old authors, I came across a song by Bro. Oliver, which led to a discussion on poetry, and we came to the conclusion that there is but very little Masonic poetry now-a-days; no such poetry as we used to have; poetry with Masonic sentiment, and with a song in it that you could not help singing; such songs as our boys now-a-days never heard, and I thought to write to you to ask if I could have a place in the N. E. corner, just to show the boys what the old folks used to call poetry; in short, to give you and them some of the old Masonic songs that are now becoming almost obsolete.

And if you will be so kind it may interest some of your readers, at any rate it will please

Yours Fraternally,

OLD FATHER GRAYBEARD.

The first old song that I will give you is one of Dr. Oliver's, and first sung by him at one of their monthly convivialities, for you must know that in the English Lodges, even at the present day, after the business of the lodge is over, the brethren retire to their club-room, or oftener convert the lodge room into a club-room, and spend an hour or two in real social pleasure; at such a meeting the record said, that "Bro. Oliver, though a very indifferent singer, at the request of the R. W. M. favored the lodge with an original song of his own composition which was highly applauded:"

"SONG.

"As journeying in darkness through life's toilsome way,
The cheerful light darting not one feeble ray,
No friendly companion, my sorrows to smother,
Kind fortune at last sent a true-hearted brother.

A good rousing chorus was then sung, in which all joined.

"Sing Balinamora, ora, ora, (repeat three times)
A Mason's the guardian for me.

"His words smooth as oil, and as honey as sweet,
He guided my path, and directed my feet,
He mysteries and dangers with me did explore,
Through a labyrinth of horrors I ne'er trod before,

"The terrors of darkness encompassed me round,
But light, truth, and friendship, I speedily found.
No suspicion of falsehood can ever appear
To proceed from a Mason who acts on the square,

"By signs and words, guarded like Argus' eyes,
All guile and deceit a Freemason defies,
He lives within compass, and works with his tools,
And levels his way with the Grand Master's rules.

"At length quite enlightened, experience and truth,
Beamed rays of refulgence from east, west, and south.
I never beheld so resplendent a scene;
And none but a Mason can tell what I mean.

"No longer in darkness I now grope my way,
Illum'd by the beauty and glory of day,
The dense mists of error that clouded my sight,
Are dispersed and destroyed by the science of light.

"So now being fearful I trespass too long,
I beg to conclude with my thanks and my song,
Your praises, dear brethren, I'll sing while I've breath;
May we meet in the Grand Lodge above after death."

Reminicences.

BY A PAST GRAND LECTURER.

Freemasonry is a moral order, instituted by virtuous men, with the praiseworthy design of recalling to our remembrance the most sublime truths, in the midst of the most innocent and social pleasures. So say the fathers, and so, no doubt, it was fifty or sixty years ago, and in some localities even yet, the social character of our order is not wholly ignored.

Others, believing that our fathers (poor old fogies), spent too much time at the social pleasures, and too little in the teaching the sublime truths, have undertaken to work a reformation by running into the other extreme, and discarding almost wholly the social feature of our Institution. They consider it true Masonry to spend three mortal hours, and sometimes more, in teaching sublime knowledge, and when the hour of closing arrives, the Master issues his order, brings down his gavel, and in less than five minutes, the visitor who has stopped for a few moments for some friendly greeting, finds that

> "He treads alone the lodge-room now deserted,
> The lights have fled: their friendship's dead,
> And all but he departed,

unless it be the Tyler, who stands jingling the keys as much as to say that if you don't leave pretty soon you will get coaxed out as Pat Murphy did, with the poker.

These reflections passed through my mind the other day, as looking over my papers, I came across some fine tissue-paper on which was written some verses; they were quaint old Masonic verses, and they brought back to my mind one of the many good social times that I have seen, and with those too who were able to teach truth, sublime truth, old truth, truth that like wine grows better by age. The time of which I speak, was some twenty odd years ago; the place, Lower Mystic, Conn.; the occasion, the resuscitation of their lodge and the installation of their officers.

But I would have you distinctly understand that the lodge had not died. No, no. There were and are among them many who never say "die," but at the time when the anti-Masonic excitement stalked through the land, when the best and the wisest were persecuted for conscience' sake, they, in the true spirit of the Gospel and of Masonry, which forbids contention or returning evil for evil, quietly closed their lodge, and retired to their closets, there to pray for those who had "despitefully" used them and persecuted them, knowing that > "Truth crushed to earth will rise again."

But to the story. Bro. E. G. Storer, the veteran of Connecticut Masonry, was the officer to whom the duty of resuscitating and installing was confided. The services were to be public, and it brought together, not only the old Masons of the surrounding district, but many of their wives and daughters.

After the exercises were concluded, we were happily surprised by being called from labor to refreshment, by the ladies, who had made every preparation for the building up of the inner man, and to their entertainment we did ample justice.

During the festival we had toasts, sentiments, songs, etc.

Bro. S. drew tears from many eyes by his recital of the history of an orphan boy and his little sister, who by that awful scourge, yellow fever, had lost both father and mother.

After the last mournful rites had been paid to the departed, the boy took his little sister by the hand, to walk fifteen miles to try and find an uncle residing in an adjoining city.

Every weary mile of the road was walked in hope, in bright hope of finda home and a friend. They arrived at their destination, but alas! death had been there before them; the uncle was dead, and the world had lost one to whom the "burdened heart" never come to pour out its sorrows, or distress preferred its suit in vain. The hand that had been "guided by justice" was palsied, and the heart that had been expanded by benevolence, had ceased to beat, and the orphans' hope had been buried in the grave of the uncle.

Tired, hungry and discouraged, he sat down on the door-step, and taking his little sister in his arms, he wept, yes, wept as those who have no hope.

A stranger passing along, asked the little boy the cause of his grief, and with many sobs he told his simple tale. The death of father—mother—uncle—all to whom he could look for protection, or even a crust of bread. The stranger told him that he knew his father and his uncle, and for the friendship he bore them, he would take him and his little sister to his own home, and if he would endeavor to be a good boy, they should find in him an uncle and a father too. The boy strove to be a good boy—the stranger kept his promise, for he adopted them into his own family, giving the girl an education, and the boy a trade.

Years passed on—happy years; for by the kindness of the foster-parents, the orphans almost forgot that they had been orphans, or if they remembered it, it was only to shed tears of gratitude, and bless their Heavenly Father who had raised up kind friends, through whose instrumentality they had been saved from starvation, and perhaps disgrace. And the foster-parents were happy in the love and affection of the orphan children as they filled the place in their hearts of those whom death had taken from them. Years passed; the girl grew to be a woman, and was about to be married to one of the most prosperous merchants of the city, and only awaited an event of much interest in the family, viz.; when brother George should come of age. The long-looked-for day arrived; Emma was married, and George declared his own master. His kind benefactor called him into his office and remarked, "George, you have been with me more than ten years, and have proved an affectionate son and companion, and I bless God that it was my good-fortune to find you and your dear sister in your loneliness and distress, and offer you an asylum and home, and for this act I have been repaid a thousand-fold. And now, George, if you are satisfied with what I have done for you, and you will yet remain with us, my cup of joy would be full, for I dread the idea of your leaving us." George did not answer; he could not; his heart was too full for utterance. Memory was running back ten years, to the little friendless boy and girl, to all the kindness and fatherly love, to the love and affection that had been showered upon them, when the kind benefactor again asked, "George, will you stay with us?" the orphan grasped his hand, and exclaimed "stay, yes, where else can I go? is not this my home? Are you not my father, yes, more than father? for all I have and am I owe to you; and the orphan's prayer, and the blessing of God shall ever attend you for all your kindness to me, for God only knows what I would have been to-day, had it not been for you. How often I have thought of the strange providence that threw me in your way, and many times I have wondered at the peculiar interest you have ever taken in me. Why was this?" "I will tell you why," was the ready reply. "You know that I am a Freemason, and the tenets of our Order are Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth. Your father and your uncle were both Masons, and it was your father who initiated me into the Order, and raised me to the sublime degree of a Master Mason; from his lips I received my first instructions, and as soon as I found that you were the orphans of my dear brother, my heart went out in affection towards you for the love that had existed between your father and myself, because our hearts were knit together like those of David and Jonathan, and I knew that if he had been alive, he would have done the same to my children. This, George, is the reason why I adopted you, and for the peculiar interest you speak of."

The speaker stopped; the moisture had gathered in his eyes; a big sob choked his utterance; a bright smile suffused his manly face as looking kindly around him, he added: "Brothers and friends, the orphan George has told his own story."

This article being of sufficient length I will stop, but in a subsequent number will continue the story, and give the poetry which brought these incidents to mind. T.

If You Can't Praise Your Neighbor, Don't Name him at all.

BY FRANCIS S. SMITH.

In our judgment of others, we mortals are prone
To talk of their faults without heeding our own;
And this little rule should be treasured by all:
"If you can't praise your neighbor, don't name him at all."

Men's deeds are compounded of glory and shame,
And surely 'tis sweeter to praise than to blame—
Perfection has never been known since the Fall—
"If you can't praise your neighbor, don't name him at all."

Remember, ye cynics, the mote and the beam—
Pause in your fault-finding and ponder the theme—
Who has the least charity, quickest will fall—
"If you can't praise your neighbor, don't name him at all."

If we would but endeavor our own faults to mend,
We'd have all the work to which we could attend.
Then let us be open to Charity's call—
"If you can't praise your neighbor, don't name him at all."

Important Conversation About Eating.

BY A DOCTOR.—THIRD PAPER.

"I am glad to have further conversation with you, Doctor, on the subject of eating."

"I am at your service."

"Well, Doctor, is it injurious to eat between meals?"

"That depends on the length of the interval."

"I mean the ordinary or usual meals of the day as observed in communities generally."

"It is; the stomach after being taxed with the work of digestion after the ordinary meals needs rest, and must have it, or it will suffer sooner or later."

"Then you think the eating of fruits between meals is not well?"

"I do. The only proper rule is to give the stomach its necessary rest; rob it of that and soon the penalty must come."

"What about fruit at meals?"

"Most fruits are healthful, and as a rule I heartily recommend them. Let the eating, however, be done in connection with the regular meals and as a part of them."

"What fruits do you consider most healthful?"

"Apples, tomatoes, strawberries, peaches, the raspberry, whortleberry, common blackberry are especially healthful for most people dwelling in the latitude of the United States. These are all hardy fruits, and a wise Providence supplies them in comparative abundance."

"You do not mention grapes."

"Fresh grapes are certainly healthful to most persons, yet there are many exceptions. In eating them care should be taken not to swallow the seeds; the latter are difficult of digestion, and should be eschewed."

"What of pears and currants, are they not healthful?"

"They are not to be refused. They are relishable, and often serviceable, but less so than the fruits first named. Much also depends on the varieties. I was present a few weeks since at a gathering of some of my medical friends when this whole question of fruits came up, and some of those present were men of very extensive and careful observation. After protracted and free conversation all present agreed that the common fruits of the latitude and climate (the best varieties being selected) are the best for us, and that each should be eaten in its own season, that is, when it reaches its maturity."

"Of course you advise that the fruit should be ripe?"

"Assuredly; unripe fruit, unless thoroughly cooked, is always harmful. Parents cannot be too careful to guard their children against it."

"Well, Doctor, what do you say of nuts?"

"Most of them are suited only to persons of strong powers of digestion, while others are positively baneful. A good rule is to eat them sparingly, and only those which our own experience indicates as best suited to our comfort. If eating any variety of nuts is followed with discomfort, avoid it in the future. Health is too precious to be trifled with. But I must bid you good-bye for to-day. At our next interview, should you desire it, I will continue this subject, and make some suggestions about the eating of different 'courses' at meals, and the best variety."

"Thank you Doctor; I shall be delighted to hear you."—Home and Health.

EATING too fast generally involves eating too much—more than is needed for the support and nutrition of the body, the organs of taste, which are our guides in this matter, not being allowed sufficient voice or time to take cognizance of the presence of food ere it is pushed past them into the recesses of the stomach. They do not, therefore, have opportunity to represent the real needs of the system, and hence allow the crowding of the stomach. Thirty minutes should be spent at each meal—and spent, too, in chewing the food a good portion of the time—and not in continued putting in and swallowing, but in pleasant chat and laugh, instead of a continuance of the intense nervous pressure of the office or library. If you spend thirty minutes in this way at your meals, you may rest assured you will not eat too much, and that what you do eat will be in the best condition for appropriation to the needs of your system.—Dr. J. H. Jackson.

DOCTOR AND PATIENT BOTH DRUNK. Dr. Fordyce somtimes drank a good deal at dinner. He was summoned one evening to see a lady patient, when he was more than "half sea's over," and conscious that he was so. Feeling her pulse, and finding himself unable to count its beats, he muttered:

"Drunk, by Jove!"

Next morning, recollecting the circumstance, he was greatly vexed; and just as he was thinking what explanation he should offer to the lady, a letter from her was put in his hand.

"She too well knew," said the letter," that he had discovered the unfortunate condition in which she was when he last visited her; and she entreated him to keep the matter a secret, in consideration of the enclosed,"—a hundred pound bank-note.

Drinking Ice-Water.

"Drink ice-water sparingly" is an important maxim to every person in summer. Experience shows that in order to quench the thirst a little cool drink accomplishes quite as much as a large quantity. The hotter the day the less should the stomach be loaded either with food or drink. A little observation will show the rule to be a good one both in respect of comfort and health. Let any one who doubts this try the following experiments, each for the six working days of a week of hot weather:

1. Every other day eat largely and drink moderately, and on the alternate days eat and drink sparingly.
2. Every other day drink largely and eat moderately, and on alternate days, as before, eat and drink sparingly.
3. Every other day eat and drink largely, and on the alternate days do both sparingly. The result of the experiments will show that in each case the alternate days when the stomach is least burdened the comfort is greatest, and the days when the stomach is loaded with the full meal and the largest amount of drink, the greatest discomfort is experienced.

"But what shall be done to quench the thirst in the hot days?" Drink only a little at a time. If the water is cold a swallow or two will generally prove sufficient. When the sense of thirst returns take another swallow, and so on. Bits of ice kept in the mouth or chewed until they melt are much better than copious draughts of water. When the sensation of thirst is felt delay quenching it as long as may be conveniently done. Try all this and test it for yourselves.—Home and Health.

PUBLIC SPIRIT.—The New York Times states that Mr. Sol. Sanborn, of Medford, Massachusetts, described as a hatter by trade, has made and recorded a will by which he bequeathes his body to Professors Louis Agassiz and Oliver Wendell Holmes, of Harvard University, with the request that it shall be prepared "in the most scientific and skillful manner known to the anatomical art," and placed in the museum of anatomy attached to the aforesaid institution. Of his skin, however, Mr Sanborn requires two drum-heads to be made, which are to be presented to his "distinguished friend and patriotic fellow-citizen, Warren Simpson, drummer, of Cohasset," on condition that he shall beat, or cause to be beaten, on the said drum-heads, the national air of "Yankee Doodle," at the base of the monument on Bunker's Hill, "at sunrise on the 17th of June, annually." Moreover, on one of the drum-heads is to be inscribed "Pope's Universal Prayer," and on the other, "the Declaration of Independence," as it "originated in the brain of its illustrious author, Thomas Jefferson." The parts of his body useless for anatomical purposes Mr. Sanborn desires, to quote his own words, to be "composted for a fertilizer for the purpose of nourishing the growth of an American elm to be planted, or set out, in some rural public thoroughfare, that the weary wayfaring man may rest, and innocent children playfully sport beneath the shadow of its umbrageous branches rendered luxuriant by my carcass."

A Good Answer.

"Sir," said a lad coming down a wharf in Boston and addressing a well known merchant—"sir, have you any berth for me on your ship? I want to earn something."

"What can you do?" asked the gentleman.

"I can try my best to do whatever I am put to," answered the boy.

"What have you done?"

"I have sawed and split all mother's wood for nigh two years."

"What have you not done?" asked the gentleman, which was a queer sort of a question.

"Well, sir," answered the boy, after a moments pause, "I have not whispered once in school for a whole year."

"That's enough," said the gentleman, "you may ship aboard this vessel, and I hope to see you master of her some day. A boy who can master a wood pile and bridle his tongue must be made of good stuff."

BROILED LOBSTER.—"Bridget, what did your mistress say she would have for dinner?" "Broil the lobster!" "Are you sure, Bridget?" Entirely; get the gridiron." Mary got the gridiron and placed it on the fire. She then placed the live lobster on the gridiron. Intermission of five minutes, after which the dialogue was resumed as follows: "Did you broil that lobster Mary?" "Divil the broil! The more I poked the fire, the more he walked off. The baste's haunted; I'll try no more. No good will come from cooking a straddle bug like that." "And where is the lobster?" "Divil know I. The last I saw of him he was going out of the door with his tail at half mast, like a wild maniac that he was."

GOOD NIGHT!—Send your little child to bed happy. Whatever cares press, give it a warm good night kiss as it goes to its pillow. The memory of this, in the stormy years which may be in store for the little one, will be like Bethlehem's star to the bewildered shepherds. —"My father —my mother loved me!" Nothing can take away that blessed heart-balm. Lips parched with the world's fever will become dewy again at this thrill of youthful memories. Kiss your little child before it goes to sleep.—Home Words.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

DOTY'S WASHING MACHINE,

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER

Improved with ROWEL'S PATENT DOUBLE COG-WHEELS, and the PATENT STOP, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

PRICES—A Fair Offer.

If the Merchants in your place will not furnish, or send for the Machines, send us the retail price, Washer, $14; Extra Wringer, $9; and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial, according to directions.

No husband, father, or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

VOL. X. WHOLE NO. 115. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, SEPTEMBER, 1871. NEW SERIES NO. 5.

Poetry.

The following sparkling and witty poetical effusion was delivered by our worthy brother George R. Moore, Esq., of Lincoln, Nebraska, formerly of Blandenville, in this State, upon his retirement from the Orient of Blandenville Lodge, No. 233.

You have called for a song, or an epic, I'm told,
As you think that for me all the muses of old
Will step forth as I bid them; and order and tune
Come forth in their beauty like roses in June;
But my pegasus limps and oft halts by the way,
And the muses are coyer than maidens to day;
Or perhaps 'tis the wooer whose quick beating heart
Lets the moment auspicious forever depart.

The thought must be caught as it flies on the wing,
For once touched to the earth 'tis a soiled worthless thing,
And the bright scintillations of poesy's fire
Must be caught in mid-heaven and pulsed as the wire
Till humanity read with the magnet of soul
From the magnet of spirit.

No magnet have I
Unless inspiration comes from your well wishes
As appetite sharpens at clatter of dishes,
Still one thinks you are not to the critic inclined,
Or captious, I hope, having recently dined,
So I will proceed with my story in prose,
'Tis bad at beginning and farther on worse,
As "Pat said of Purgatory."

For the story is old, and the setting not new,
The hero is only a wandering Jew,
Yet that wandering Jew is a link in the chain
Of those beautiful symbols which severed in twain
Cuts the past from the present, completely asunder,
And leaves us adrift on the vague sea of wonder;
For one link when 'tis broken as much breaks the chain
As if not a single sound link should remain,
So when man breaks a link which to virtue does bind
He is lost as complete as tho' none had confined,
Yet the link may be welded, if passed thro' the fire,
And the weld be the strongest; but the break will require
Hard labor, long waiting, and consummate skill,
True courage, and earnest determinate will.

Looking back o'er the pathway humanity trod
We note man oft wandering away from his God,
The mementoes of follies are strewn by the way,
And Lot's wife's not alone, in the halt and delay;
Whited sepulchres rise as our vision we cast
O'er the mists and the halo's surrounding the past,
And the corpses of error lay mouldering in sight
Where Jehovah's bare arm seized the emblem of right.

But come, turn from this Sodom, its ashes and thirst,
To the glittering ripples of sunlight that burst
From the clouds of the past; there are lights on the wall;
They are lights that tradition hands down from the fall;
Just look at the light that reflects from the square;
'Tis of virtue, and justice, and dignity rare,
And its light is far brighter in beauty and worth
Than the gaudiest crowns of the monarchs of earth.

And the light from the Level is ever the same,
Teaching beggar and king in Equality's name,
Of the low narrow house where we soon must repose,
Each relieved of his burden of sorrows and woes.
And the light from the Plumb, teaches each one to bear,
Erect of the burdens of others a share
To Eternity's brink, turning not from the path
For "Lo Heres" and "Lo Theres," for the tares and the chaff,
But bearing aloft the bright golden grain
Which the harvest of thought has not ripened in vain.

O! the Level and Plumb make united a Square,
And the teachings united are justice, so rare
That he who will leave with lowly and poor,
And stand plumb-line in hand at temptation's bright door,
Is fitted the gown or the ermine to wear,
And to sit above kings only crowned with a Square.

And the wandering Jew, tho' he won not a crown,
Still the oil of High Priesthood his temples ran down
And o'er camel hair clothing, it was honor to wear
As he baptized Christ Jesus, his jewel—a Square.
For John Baptist, the Jew, we this festival keep,
And another for John the Evangel.

They cemented with mystical trowels in love,
The Christian and Jew, and taught us above
The leave of time, in the Grand Lodge on high
Opinions will vanish like motes from the eye,
And the bigots of earth, with their cloaks thrown aside,
Will gladly like Eve in their fig leaves them hide.

Yea, more, though the centuries roll o'er their clay,
Their evergreen teachings are brighter to day;
With a cordon of love they have gathered us in
To the sheep fold of faith from the portals of sin.

But hark another chord is sounding—
It seems the harp in Patmos angels played—
With rests and swells, quick set or slowly sounding,
As human joys or sorrows are displayed:
'Tis some Masonic guardian angel pleading
For charity to erring man,
Him over sloughs desponding ever leading,
With eye of faith our God to scan,
The stones upon our pathway wreathing
With Hope's immortal flowers,
Or by the bed of sickness breathing
A prayer at midnight's hours.
And now where some lone widow sitting,
Her weary vigils she doth keep,
This angel by her window flitting
Lulls all her woman fears to sleep.
Since with his scythe and hour-glass striding,
And cutting down both youth and age,
Is followed by an angel gliding
To plant Acacias at the grave.
There pointing to the gates all shining,
That entrance to the Lodge above,
The Angel lifts the curtain's silver lining,
And to the women whispers, "God is love."
Hark! in the distance every sound is dying,
Look where her pointing fingers move
'Tis eager, universal nature trying,
To echo whisper, "God is Love."

The Tabernacle.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW.

The tabernacle which Moses made in the wilderness, by special appointment of the God of Israel, was the first religious structure in which the Eternal Majesty vouchsafed to dwell on earth. It was a sort of portable temple, and not unfitly esteemed the centre of ceremonial worship. The materials of it were collected by the voluntary contributions of the children of Israel. The pattern of it was minutely described to Moses by God Himself, who ordered him to be very exact in executing the heavenly plan. Two famous artists, whose names were Bezaleel and Aholiab, were inspired with most exquisite and masterly skill, to finish the holy fabric and its utensils, according to the Divine plan.

First of all, there was a spacious court, one hundred cubits long, and fifty broad. It was hung round with curtains of fine-twined linen, that were fastened with silver hooks to pillars with sockets of brass filleted with silver. The gate by which they entered to this wide area, was a hanging of twenty cubits, of blue, purple and scarlet, and fine linen, wrought with needle work, and suspended by four pillars. This outward court the whole nation might enter on their solemn festivals, as it is said—"Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise." Here, under the open sky, stood the altar of burnt-offering, and the brazen laver.

Within the circumference of this wide and open court, was the tabernacle itself, into which none but the tribe of Levi were allowed to enter, to accomplish the service of God. It was a close tent, twenty cubits long, ten cubits broad, and its height equal to its breadth. It was constructed of boards of shittim-wood of regular dimensions, running into one another. These boards were supported beneath with sockets of silver, and corroborated behind with bars of the same wood overlaid with gold, and fastened by golden rings through which they passed.

And what was the roof of this magnificent tent? First it was covered with ten curtains of equal measure, of fine-twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, embroidered with cherubims, and coupled with loops of blue, and taches of gold. Then it was covered with eleven curtains of goats hair, hung together by taches of brass. Next, it was covered with rams skins dyed red. And above all, there was a covering of badgers skins, to protect the tabernacle and its coverings, from the injuries of the weather.

But though these boards and curtains, thus joined together, made but one tabernacle, this one tabernacle was divided into two apartments. The first was called the Holy Place, into which you entered through a vail, or hanging of blue, purple and scarlet, and fine linen, curiously embroidered, supported with five pillars of shittim-wood, overlaid with gold, and their bases of brass, and fastened with golden hooks. Here stood the golden table, the golden candlestick, and the golden altar. The second was called the Most Holy Place, into which the High Priest, and none but he, did enter once in the year, through a second vail, of the same materials with the first, broidered with cherubims. In this secret chamber of the Deity, were deposited the most sacred symbols of the Divine presence. Here was the Ark of the Covenant, covered by the Mercy Seat, and over it the cherubims of glory, between which, Jehovah Himself was said to dwell. Here was the golden pot that had manna, and the miraculous rod of Aaron, that budded. And here the appearance of the glory of the Lord is supposed to have resided, and been seen on special occasions.

Such was the structure of this holy tent, which was built in the taste of Heaven, reared up by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and consecrated by Moses. And we must not forget, that it was a movable pavillion, so contrived as to be easily taken down, and set up again. While the peculiar people sojourned in the wilderness, the tabernacle shared the same fate, being transported from place to place by the ministry of the Levites. When they possessed the promised land, at first it rested at Gilgal, afterwards in Shiloh; and when Solomon began to reign over Israel, it was pitched in Gibeon. But at the last, it was altogether superseded by the magnificent temple built by that glorious monarch; and probably the costly materials of it were lodged among the treasures of the house of the Lord.

Now, what shall we say to these things? Did the High and Holy One—whose dwelling is not with flesh, who resides not in temples made with hands—did He stand in need of this movable habitation? Glorious as it was, can we reasonably think it to have been a meet apartment for the Deity, or at all adequate to the inconceivably glorious, immense and eternal Spirit? Oh, no! Such a groveling thought, so unworthy of God, and shocking to reason herself, we cannot entertain. But if we suppose that these holy places made with hands were figures of heaven, then we shall be able to account for that ardent affection with which the tabernacle of the Lord of Hosts is cherished in symbolic Masonry.

Oh, death! it is thine to pull aside the vail of mortality that interposes between the holy and the most holy place. Happy they who enter by faith, and not a visible procession only, into HIS sanctuary, which HE has sanctified forever.

Reminicences by a Past Grand Lecturer.

THE SECOND ARTICLE.

When the excitement caused by the announcement of Brother E. that he was the veritable orphan had subsided, Brother Brown was called upon to give us something in his line. Now all knew Brother B.; he was the Tubal Cain of those parts, a worker in metals, an old Mason, and rather an old man, although you could not have told his age by twenty years, for, as he used to say, he was "well kept."

All expected something good from Brother B., for he had a rich experience, and belonged to one of the best lodges in the State, (Asylum, 57). I do not say this because I was initiated, passed, and raised there, but because it turned out some of the brightest Masons in the State, among whom I can name Dr. Wm. Hyde, Past Grand Commander of that State, General Sanford, Capt. Amey, Capt. Pendleton, and lots of others, "hewed squared and numbered in the quarry where they were raised." It was likewise one of the first Lodges called upon to stand the test in that awful anti-Masonic tornado that swept over the whole country, and nowhere with more force than in Connecticut.

At that time this lodge was large in its numbers, great in its influence, and strong in Masonic worth. But the time came which "tried Masons' souls;" many wavered and fell out by the way, yet many stood firm to the end. Asylum Lodge had both in the membership.

Some did not think it their duty to brave the wrath of public opinion, but chose rather to stop at home than to come to the lodge, but what lodge in the country but had some such? Yes, some lodges were composed almost wholly of such material. Not so with Asylum. A regular meeting came, and Dr. Hyde then the W. M. repaired as usual to the room; three others besides himself!

The Doctor walked up and down, up and down, and what thoughts and resolves passed through that great head and good heart none ever knew. After walking for some time, he quietly placed the great lights upon the altar, and loud and clear was heard the congregating knock! All knew what it meant. The officers to their places; the door was closed, and all became perfectly silent. The Doctor with slowness, dignity, and precision, advanced to the east of the altar; a wave of his hand brought the other three, one on each side of the altar; the Master knelt, the others the same. Not a word was spoken; they knew their Master too well to ask questions, and where he led they were willing to follow. A moment's pause as if in prayer, and the silence was broken by the Master saying, "Repeat your name and say after me;" they obeyed, and he continued, "I, Wm. Hyde, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and these brethern, do solemnly swear that there shall be a working lodge of Masons in Stonington, Connecticut, as long as we four live, so help me God."

They arose from their knees, resolved to do and die if need be for the society they so much loved. They moved the records, charter, and such things as they needed, from the lodge room, locked the door, and the iron bolt as it clicked into its place, sent a chill to their very hearts, for there they had been initiated, passed, and raised; there they had spent many happy hours. Now it was locked, and when and by whom it should be opened, God only knew; in His hands they left it.

They took the articles to the Doctor's. Over his office he had a room, a kind of curiosity shop, in which dead men's bones, herbs, drugs, etc., were scattered promiscuously around. This was cleared up, and after all things had been arranged to their liking they there set up their altar and proceeded to open their lodge. They had a W. M., S. W., J. W., and Secretary, but no Tyler, and the Doctor would as soon thought of opening lodge without a charter as without a Tyler, so down stairs he goes to find one. Now you must know the Doctor was blessed with a wife, a real wife, none of your anti-Masonic wives who can't bear to have their husband know anything they do not, not to go to any place they cannot go with them. She was a woman, and that in Scripture and Masonry means more than fifty times the modern lady. She was a woman of sense, and loved her husband, and loved Masonry because her husband was, as she said, "full of it." Well to this good wife he went and told his troubles, and she was ever ready to help him. He told her to take her seat at the foot of the stairs, outside, but close to the door, and putting the instrument of her office (the Tyler's sword) into her hands, proceeded to install her by this singular address:

"Mrs. Hyde I am going up stairs to open the lodge. I wish you to remain here and guard this entrance. If any one wishes to see me, knock on the door and I will come down, but if any one attempt to pass you, without my consent cut them down."

The Doctor went up stairs, opened and closed the lodge; and there they continued to hold their meetings, not for work, for there was none, but to rehearse the ritual and to keep their arms bright against the time they should again open and resume labor. The Grand Lodge record shows that No. 57 had a representative there every year.

But the sequel of the story is yet to be told. One of the four, Bro. Sanford was taken sick. Dr. Hyde imformed him that his work was almost done, and he believed he was called to receive his wages. The old man knew it and only answered, "It is well, there are no stains on my apron, thank God." Then placing his hand on his heart, he added, "My mark has been redeemed by the blood of the Lion of the tribe of Judah. I am ready to go. I have two requests to make, the first is bury me as a Mason should be buried; the next is to see the other two; you know, Doctor, the other two; you bring them, Doctor, we four must be alone once more; yes, once more."

In the afternoon the three entered the chamber of the dying brother. He was going faster than they expected, his breath was short; his eyes were closed, and but for the feeble respiration you would have thought him dead. But the familiar steps of the Doctor seemed to arouse all his energies. He ordered the room to be cleared, and at his request he was raised up. "Now, brethren, gather around me and put your hands in mine." The three advanced and put their hands in the now cold hands of the almost departed brother. "Say I, repeat your name, and say after me," The old man passed his hand over his forehead as if in doubt, but rallying again, said, "No, no, I have not forgotten it. I have repeated it a thousand times, every time I have passed the old room I have stopped and repeated it. No, no, I have not forgotten it. Say I, repeat your name, and say after me; I, Joshua Sanford, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and these brethren, do solemnly swear that there shall be a working lodge of Masons in Stonington, Connecticut as long as you three live, so help me God." The effect was too much. The old man sunk back on his pillows, and ere the sun went down he had gone to his reward. He was buried as a Mason should be, and although the anti-Masons thought they had crushed out Masonry, one hundred white aprons told they were not dead, but sleeping."

That day the old lodge-room was opened, and continues open to give a welcome to all who knock aright. Such is the history of No. 57 as I received it from the Doctor himself. But I have got off the track again, and not given you that poetry promised in my last. I will try and do better next time. T.

Communication.

Judaism and Christianity.

As this question has again come up for discussion, I would like to call the attention of our Jewish brethren to an able discussion of this subject by Dr. Oliver in his "Revelations of a Square," pages 50 to 60.

He puts in the mouth of one of his characters (Dr. Dodd), the assertion that at the time named in the book (1771) "there were not a dozen Jewish Masons in England, and at the revival in 1717 there was not one in all the world."

He adds, "the Jews never practised Masonry themselves or encouraged it in others."

Bro. Dunkerley is then described as expressing his concurrence in the sentiments of Dr. Dodd, and says, "among the many hundreds of Christian lodges which are spread over the four quarters of the globe, it is very doubtful whether there be a single Jewish lodge in existence." We give these expressions as we find them, not vouching for their correctness, but should be glad to have some of our Jewish brethren say how nearly they come to the truth.

Selected Poetry.

Light.

BY WILLIAM PITT PALMER.

From the quickened womb of the primal gloom,
The sun rolled bleak and bare,
Till I wove him a vest for his Ethiop breast,
Of the threads of my golden hair;
And when the broad tent of the firmament
Arose on its airy bars,
I pencilled the hue of the matchless blue
And spangled it round the stars.

I painted the flowers of Eden bowers
And their leaves of living green,
And mine were the dyes in the sinless eyes,
Of Eden's virgin queen.
And when the fiend's art on the trustful heart,
Had fastened its mortal spell.
In the silvery sphere of the first-born tear
To the trembling earth I fell.

When the waves that burst o'er a world accursed
Their work of wrath had sped,
And the Ark's lone few, the tried and true,
Came forth amongst the dead,
With the wondrous gleams of my bridal beams
I bade their terrors cease,
As I wrote on the roll of the storm's dark scroll
God's covenant of Peace.

Like a pall at rest on a senseless breast,
Night's funeral shadow slept—
When shepherd swains, on Bethlehem's plains,
Their lonely vigils kept—
When I flashed on their sight the heralds bright
Of Heaven's redeeming plan,
As they chanted the morn of a Savior born—
Joy, joy to the outcast man!

Equal favor I show to the lofty and low,
On the just and unjust I descend;
E'en the blind, whose vain spheres roll in darkness and tears,
Feel my smile, the best smile of a friend;
Nay, the flower of the waste by my love is embraced
As the rose in the garden of kings,
At the chrysalis bier of the worm I appear.
And, lo! the gay butterfly wings.

The desolate Morn, like a mourner forlorn,
Conceals all the pride of her charms,
Till I bid the bright hours chase the night from her flowers,
And lead her young day to her arms!
And when the gay rover seeks Eve for his lover
And sinks to her balmy repose,
I wrap the soft rest by the zephyr-fanned west,
In curtains of amber and rose!

From my sentinel sleep by the night-dreaded deep,
I gaze with unslumbering eye,
When the cynosure star of the mariner,
Is blotted from out the sky!
And guided by me through the merciless sea,
Though sped by the hurricane's wing,
His compassless, dark, lone, weltering bark
To the haven home safely he brings.

I waken the flowers in their dew-spangled bowers,
The birds in their chambers of green,
And mountain and plain glow with beauty again,
As they bask in the manual sheen.
Or, if such the glad worth of my presence on earth,
Though fretful and fleeting the while,
What glories must rest on the home of the blest,
Ever bright with the Deity's smile!

THE Grand Lodge of Frankfort was founded March 18, 1783, and constituted as a Grand Lodge, in 1823. It has ten subordinate lodges, three of which are in Frankfort, and two in Hamburg. The legal status of the Grand Lodge of Frankfort and its subordinates is as yet unsettled. Pursuant to a royal decree of 1798, still in force, all secret societies are prohibited in the Prussian States, with the exception of the Masonic lodges hailing from either of the three Grand Lodges of "Germany," "Royal York" and the "Three Globes." The existence of lodges working under constitutions from the Grand Lodge of Frankfort is tolerated by the goverment of King William I., but has not yet been legalized.—Tidings.

Anti-Masonry.

We take great interest in reading the history of the anti-Masonic excitement existing in the United States in the year 1826 to 1834. Political and religious ostracism was attempted on the Fraternity by church and politician, and it required considerable manhood and moral courage to acknowledge fealty to the Order at that day. In 1830 the excitement reached its height, and that year the "United States Anti-Masonic Convention" assembled at Philadelphia. As this was the first and most formidable attempt at a national combination of the elements of opposition to Freemasonry, we bestow more space upon its proceedings than it would otherwise deserve. There were ninety-six members of the convention, representing the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Rhode Island, Ohio, New Jersey, Michigan, Maryland and Delaware; but few were men of any prominence, though several of them, by attaching themselves to other "isms," and abandoning political anti-Masonry when it ceased to be profitable, subsequently achieved eminence. Among them may be named Francis Granger, Henry Dana Ward, Frederick Whittlesey and William H. Seward, New York; and Pliny Merrick, Massachusetts. The cement that bound such minds, for even so short a time, to men like David Bernard, Moses Thatcher, Thaddeus Stevens and Joseph Ritner, must have possessed magic virtues; but it had no endurance.

Francis Granger was made President of the Convention, seconded by six Vice-Presidents. It is pleasing to see that no state farther west than Ohio, and south than Maryland, had a delegate. Of New England, Maine and New Hampshire refused the part assigned them, and sent no representatives. Fourteen prominent committees were appointed, among whom were divided all the questions likely to arise relative to Masonic rituals, history and jurisprudence. Seward's part was to report resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the convention. A proposition to inquire into the pecuniary circumstances of the widow and children of Wm. Morgan, was rejected with commendable dispatch; that was not the purpose for which these ninety-six delegates had assembled. Three gentlemen from North Carolina took their seats as honorary members. The committee "on the effects of Masonic ties and obligations on the commerce and revenue of the United States," were discharged without making a report: this was a real loss of interest to the proceedings.

In the report of the influence of Masonry upon the public press, it was reported, that, between 1826 to 1830, there had been 124 anti-Masonic papers established, viz: in Pennsylvania, 53; New York, 46; Connecticut, 2; Rhode Island, 1; Massachusetts, 5; Vermont, 4; New Jersey; 2; Ohio, 9; Indiana, 1; Michigan, 1: but their statements are, doubtless, exaggerated.

The conclusion presented by the convention may be thus briefly expressed: 1. That the various expositions of Masonic secrets are true. 2. That Freemasonry originated early in the eighteenth century. 3. That its oaths are not obligatory. 4. That adhering Masons are disqualified for public office. 5. That Masonry and its principles are inconsistent with the genius of American institutions. 6. That Masonry should be extinguished at the ballot-box. 7. That Masonry is a political institution 8. That its effects upon the public press are evil.

It was agreed to assemble at Baltimore September 26, 1831, and nominate candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States.

This convention assembled the following year, and William Wirt accepted the nomination as President of the United States, and Amos Ellmaker the nomination as Vice-President. This ticket received the electoral vote of one state, viz: Vermont.

So outrageous and abusive were the charges made against the Order, that the Grand Lodges of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont and other States, made and published a protest against such actions. We insert the declaration as made by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island, which is similar to those made by the other states above mentioned:

Fellow-citizens: In making this declaration, the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island confidently appeal to the Great Searcher of Hearts to test their truth and sincerity. And we will not hesitate, when legally called upon to appear before any constitutional body, clothed with competent authority, to substantiate the facts herein set forth. And for the public decision we are satisfied to cast ourselves on your calm, sober and deliberate judgment, requiring only to be believed, if in charity we can be supposed to be honest; and to be disbelieved, if you can make up your minds to think that we have unanimously agreed to become guilty of wilful and premeditated perjury. We make this appeal to you in the spirit of candor and frankness, and invoke the same spirit on your part. Deprecating strife and contention, and wishing to promote peace and quietness, we have heretofore remained silent. But finding this spirit of no avail, and ourselves and our motives continually assailed with seeming rancor, we are impelled, by feelings of honor and self-respect, to step forth in our own defense. In doing so, we have been frank and open in our communications, and believe we have held up to the public gaze, as respects ourselves, all that the public require to know; and have sanctioned our expositions by solemn appeals to God himself. Under this awful sanction we have declared ourselves free from any obligations that require us to act, in any case, in contempt of the civil authority, or in opposition to the demands of common justice to all mankind. And we have further forbidden the observance of any such obligation by all and any under our jurisdiction.

Have we not done all that can be reasonably demanded of us as Masons and as men, to quiet the fears of the community respecting us and our Institution? And if so we would cordially inquire, why we, more than other bodies, should be driven to dissolution in defiance of our rights as freemen? As to political rights as a body, we have none, nor never had any; and we challenge our opponents to point to a fact that will invalidate what we say. As men have ever, we have political rights, and driven to the necessity, if we find ourselves impelled to act to prevent disfranchisement, we shall claim the same right to do so, as our opponents claim to carry on a cruel and exterminating warfare against us. We call the world to witness that we have sought no quarrel with our foes, we have given no just cause of offense, and if they drive us to desperation, the fault will be theirs, and the sin must rest upon their own shoulders. All concessions, consistent with our own feelings as men of honor, we are at all times ready to make for the public good. More than that we deem derogatory to the character of American freemen. And if we must be disfranchised, we will never make a voluntary surrender of our rights; for we value them too highly as the legacy bequeathed us by our fathers, to resign them; and never will part with them till they shall be wrested from us by the strong arm of arbitrary power.

IN Joaquin Miller's poem on "Burns and Byron," two or three lines occur in which the author develops himself as a brother Mason, and hails his fellow craft. The passage is an effective one, and evinces the true Masonic spirit. It runs as follows:

> "The poet's passion, sense of pride,
> His sentiment, the wooing throng
> Of sweet temptations that betide
> The wild and wayward child of song,
> The world knows not; I lift a hand
> To those who know, who understand."

THE present civic title of the M. W. Grand Master of England is "Marquis of Ripon," conferred in recognition as Chief of the late High Commission to this country from Great Britain.

The Grand Lodges of Canada and Quebec.

As many of our readers may be interested in the action of the Grand Lodge of Canada in relation to the Quebec difficulty, at its last communication, we give the several propositions. The Board of General Purposes, having had the matter referred to them, reported the following resolutions, the adoption of which was moved by R. W. Bro. Thos. White and seconded by R. W. Bro. Montgomery:

"1. That the Grand Lodge desires to re-assert the principles of Masonic law, adopted at the special communication, held in the city of Montreal, in December, 1869, and subsequently re-affirmed by unanimous vote of Grand Lodge at the last annual communication, held in the city of Ottawa, as to the 'extent of its jurisdiction,' comprising the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

"2. That while it has no reason to alter its views, thus formally propounced, this Grand Lodge regrets the continuance of the difficulties which have arisen in the Province of Quebec, and that no approach has been made to a restoration of the Masonic harmony in that Province, as Grand Lodge had reason to hope would have taken place.

"3. That an unanimous desire on the part of the lodges in Quebec to have that Province set apart as a separate Masonic territory, would at all times have been favorably considered by Grand Lodge.

"4. That Grand Lodge most earnestly desires the removal of all difficulties amongst Masons in the Province of Quebec, and with that view resolves that a committee be appointed by Grand Lodge to confer with a committee of the lodges of Quebec which have ceased to work under the authority of Grand Lodge, with a view to the restoration of Masonic harmony in that Province.

"5. That the suspension by edict of the Masters of lodges and Masons in that Province, subsequently confirmed, be removed.

"6. That the committee so appointed shall, with all convenient speed, report the result of their conference to the Grand Master, and that he be requested to take immediate action upon such report."

In amendment, it was moved by R. W. Bro. B. McKechnie, seconded by R. W. Bro. N. B. Falkner:

"That having in view the true interests of Freemasonry, the maintainance of harmony, and the avoidance of scandal, be it

"Resolved, That the suspension of the adherents of the so-called Grand Lodge of Quebec be and is hereby withdrawn.

"That the Grand Lodge of Quebec be and is hereby recognized as a duly constituted Grand Lodge.

"That we hereby cede to the Grand Lodge of Quebec the whole of the Province of Quebec, subject to the following conditions, viz.: That all lodges therein now in connection with the Grand Lodge, and that are desirous of maintaining that connection, may do so.

"That this Grand Lodge do strongly, and with the most fraternal feelings, recommend that all the lodges in the Province of Quebec, and now in allegiance to this Grand Lodge, do take into serious consideration the necessity of sinking all differences, and cordially uniting themselves to the Grand Lodge of that Province.

And in amendment to the amendment it was moved by V. W. Bro. Racicot, and seconded by R. W. Bro. Gutman:

"That this Grand Lodge, while re-affirming its former opinion expressed at the Montreal and Toronto meetings, December, 1869, and July, 1870, as to the illegality of the organization of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, and although no valid reason has ever existed for the disruption of this Grand Lodge in the manner attempted by the so-called Grand Lodge of Quebec, but being desirous of re-establishing peace and good will and harmony amongst all the Masons of Canada, and of preventing further trouble and complications, and being now of opinion that these objects can best be obtained by the existence of a Grand Lodge for the Province of Quebec, properly organized, with the same unanimous assent, if possible, and good feeling of all the Masons in that Province; while at the same time the duties and obligations of this Grand Lodge towards the same loyal Masons should not be disregarded; this Grand Lodge will give up and cede all the territory which it has occupied since 1855 in that part of Canada constituting the Province of Quebec, make all just and financial settlements, remove all suspensions and do all such things as may become necessary, so soon as this Grand Lodge receives notice that a settlement or compromise, mutually satisfactory, shall have been effected between the Masons residing in the Province of Quebec, who have been and are now loyal and faithful to this Grand Lodge on the one side, and the members of the so-called Grand Lodge on the other, in such manner as they may decide among themselves whilst acting in a true Masonic spirit; and this Grand Lodge will not, forthe present, take any further step or action of any kind whatever concerning the said so-called Grand Lodge of Quebec."

This last amendment was carried by a very large majority.—Freemason (London).

Masonic Editorial Notes.

DESTRUCTION OF GEN. WASHINGTON'S LODGE ROOM.

Among the old colonial houses consumed in the conflagration at Alexandria, Va., on Friday, 19th of May, were the Masonic Lodge of which George Washington was the Master, and the old Colonial Court-house, in which Washington's provincial troops were quartered in 1754, and from the door of which Braddock marched to his defeat in 1755, and in which ex-President Washington gave his last vote in 1790.

INITIATION OF A MOHAMMEDAN.

The Grand Lodge of Saxony displayed a more enlightened and true Masonic spirit than the three Prussian Grand Lodges, and those of Sweden and Denmark. A Lodge in Dresden, says the Louisiana report, has initiated a Mohammedan by the name of Gattha Sadick, a merchant of that city. True to the faith of his fathers, the candidate appeared in his national dress, and, after answering the questions propounded in a satisfactory manner, in the Arabic language, he was initiated. Commenting on this, the New York Committee gave a similar instance which occured in their jurisdiction, in 1839, when a Mohammedan named Mahamed Jumah, first lieutenant of a frigate of the Imaum of Muscat, lying at anchor in the harbor of New York, petitioned St. John's Lodge No. 1, of that city, to be made a Mason. On the occasion of his initiation, it was impossible to procure a Koran, and the candidate, on being informed of this, inquired whether the book used by the lodge contained the doctrine of a belief in the Supreme Being. Assured of this, he expressed himself satisfied, and was accordingly initiated, remarking that that was a good enough Koran for him.

THE CRAFT IN IRELAND.

The Irish "Ahiman Rezon," or Book of Constitutions, is full of interest. A cursory glance has brought two curious facts to our attention. Article 18 of the Grand Lodge regulations requires all brethren attending the Grand Lodge to appear dressed in full evening costume, with the appropriate full-dress apron, and collar, and jewel, if any, of the respective stations to which they belong. And the Irish brethren claim a greater antiquity than any other of our corresponding Grand Bodies, as is evinced by the following: 2736 Anno Mundi. The Phœnicians are supposed to have settled, before Christ 1264, in Ireland, and Masonry to have been introduced by Heber and Heremon, sons of Milesius, succeeded by Eochaid, styled the Ollamh Fodhla, or Learned Doctor, who (B. C. 769) constituted triennial meetings at Tara in Meath. The constant warfare and aggressions of the Danes destroyed the ancient records, and discouraged all sciences; nevertheless several structures still exist which testify the labors of the era. In A. D. 306, St. Alban obtained the first royal charter for "Assemblies or Huttes of Masons to be holden in England."

OUR PORTUGESE BRETHREN.

The title of the Master of a lodge in Portugal is "the Venerable." Lodges are represented in the Grand Orient by their Venerable and delegates—one delegate for twenty members. In case of sickness, the place of the Venerable may be taken by one of the Wardens, provided he is a Knight Rose Croix, and if the Venerable and delegates have not attained that rank they must receive it before taking their seats in the Grand Orient. All propositions must be made in writing. On the receipt of a proposition for initiation, the Venerable privately requests three brethren to make inquiry as to the morality, etc., of the candidate. At the next meeting they each report in writing the result of their investigations. Should two of these reports be favorable to the candidate, the ballot is proceeded with as in Tennessee; but if two of the reports are unfavorable, the candidate is rejected without recourse to the ballot, and his name and description are immediately sent to the Grand Orient for circulation, to prevent his gaining admission into another lodge.

MASONIC GRAND BODIES IN PRUSSIA.

There are four Grand Masonic Bodies in this kingdom. These are all under the protectorate of Brother His Majesty William I., King of Prussia. His Royal Highness, the Crown Prince, Brother Frederick William, is Deputy Protector.

GRAND LODGE OF GERMANY.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN.—Eclectic Grand Lodge.—This body was founded March 18, 1783, and constituted as a Grand Lodge in 1823. The Grand Master is Bro. H. Hoerster, and Grand Secretary Bro. C. Paul. It has ten subordinate lodges, three of which are in Frankfort, and two in Hamburg. The legal status of the Grand Lodge of Frankfort and its subordinates, is as yet unsettled. Pursuant to a royal decree of 1798, still in force, all secret societies are prohibited in the Prussian States, with the exceptions of the Masonic lodges hailing from either of the three Grand Lodges of "Germany," "Royal York," and the "Three Globes." The existence of lodges working under constitutions from the Grand Lodge of Frankfort is tolerated by the goverment of Bro. King William I., but has not yet been legalized. Most of the twenty-three lodges heretofore hailing from the Grand Lodge of the ex-kingdom of Hanover, dissolved March 28th, 1868, have joined the Grand Lodge of Prussia.

In the Grand Lodge of Hamburg, the three degrees of Craft Masonry only are worked, the Royal Arch not being recognized. Bro. Charles Edward Buck is the Grand Master, and Bro. Volkers the Grand Secretary. Entered Apprentices serve one year before they become Fellow Crafts, and Fellow Crafts labor for one year before they are raised to the sublime degree of Master. The brethren wear their hats in the lodge, but take them off whenever the name of the Great Architect of the Universe is mentioned.

In the St. George's Lodge, in Hamburg city, initiations are conducted in the English, French, Italian and Spanish languages, as well as in German.

Since 1865 the Grand Lodge has adopted the system of direct representation, and it is said to answer remarkably well. The deputies forming the Grand Lodge are elected for the purpose by the members of the respective subordinate lodges.

HANOVER—GRAND LODGE.

After the active existence of forty years, the Grand Lodge of Hanover has ceased to exist. It held its last session March 28, 1868. The war of 1866, between Austria and Prussia, resulted in the annexation of the kingdom of Hanover to Prussia, and in its train followed the question of the future existence of the Grand Lodge. According to an edict issued by a former King of Prussia, October 20, 1798, three Grand Lodges only are permitted to exist in his dominions. It was supposed by many, however, that inasmuch as Hanover possessed an independent Grand Lodge before its annexation to Prussia, its quiet continuance would be permitted, particularly as the edict before alluded to seemed to have been modified in 1848, by the enactment of a law which permitted Prussian subjects to assemble without arms in a closed room, and form societies not prohibited by law. This anticipation was not realized. The Grand Lodge of Hanover was swept away by a cabinet order, Febuary 17, 1867, whether justly or otherwise we cannot say, nor how much the dissentions which sprung up in the Grand Lodge itself contributed to this result.

MASONRY IN HAYTI.

Grand Orient, established in 1823. A. T. Boucheran is the Grand Master, and Gen. E. Bourjolly, of Port-au-Prince, Grand Secretary. There are eighteen subordinate Lodges.

MASONRY IN DENMARK

The Grand Lodge of Denmark was instituted in 1747, and derives its existence from the Grand Lodge of Scotland. It is situated in Copenhagen, is recognized by the State, and the reigning King is Patron of the Order. The Grand Master is Bro. C. J. Brastrup, Privy Counsellor, the Minister of Justice and Public Worship. Recently, its two lodges in Altona joined the Grand Lodge of Germany, Schleswig-Holstein having become a possession of Prussia. These leave but one, St. Andrew's and four St. John's Lodges.—Keystone.

Renunciation of Masonry.

The Rev. Dr. B. T. Kavanaugh, of Galveston, Texas, gives the Family Visitor the following episode in his pastoral and Masonic life:

When comparatively a young Mason, and young preacher, we met with an old minister, whose prejudices ran very high against our time-honored Order. Being an old and venerable Father in Israel, he took liberties with the younger members of the sacred office, and in a very imperious manner accosted us as follows:

"Brother K., I understand you belong to the Freemasons; is that possible?"

"Yes sir, I have the honor to be a member of that honorable Order."

"Well, sir, I am opposed to the whole thing, and I require you to renounce it! It is no place for a young minister to be, and I expect you to give it up at once."

"Well, Father M.," we replied, "I would certainly go as far, in a departure from my own sense of right and duty for you, as I would go for any other man or minister I know of as I have a profound respect for your age and position in the church; but I must act conscientiously, and in accordance with what I believe to be right. Will you assist me in my effort to conform to your wishes? Let us take up the matter understandingly, and renounce one thing at a time. In the first place I want to know if you would have me to renounce the Mason's God, the Great Creator of the Universe?"

"Oh no, of course you cannot renounce God."

"Well, sir, will you have me to renounce the Holy Scriptures, the great light in Masonry?"

"Certainly not; they are the light of the world."

"Then I would like to know if I must renounce Masonic charity, and the brotherly kindness it teaches?"

"Oh no; charity is a great Christian virtue, and you could not be a Christian without it."

"Well, sir, will you please to tell me where I shall begin to renounce, and what I shall renounce?"

"Why, yes; I think you should renounce those secret lodges, and the keeping company with those wicked men; that is where the danger lies."

"The secret lodges! Why, sir, we are obliged to have secret lodges. We have great treasure in store in our Order, and we are bound to keep them under the lock of our secrets, and allow no one to possess the mystic key until we have tried him and found him to be a good man and true."

"Wicked company! If you think a lodge wicked company, where we keep the Bible and open our meetings with prayer, why then I think you had better close the churches, too, for wicked men go there; and, indeed, I cannot tell where you will go and not find what you call wicked men. You will certainly have to get out of the world."

"Yes; but what I mean is, that you should not associate as companions."

"Then you mean that I am not to follow the example and teachings of Christ, who was noted for his kindness to sinners—declared that he came to seek no others."

"Oh, well, I do not see how you are to renounce the principles of Masonry; I mean to say I have never joined them. I do not think it right."

"Well, sir, I have joined them and profess to know a great deal more about them than you can know, and I think it is right."

Here the conversation ended, and here ended any further effort to "require us to renounce Masonry."

After a few months, men who made our acquaintance in the lodge, who had never visited the church, owing to prejudice against our old Father M., now followed us to the church, were converted and became zealous Christians. After this the old Father became zealous for the Order, and thought it a great blessing.

How many of this class, who oppose our Order, are still left, we cannot say, but we are certain if they knew more about it they would find no cause for objection.

Pleasant Mention.

R. W. Breth. Daniel Sickels and Albert G. Goodall, who have been sojourning in Europe during the summer, returned home in the steamer Russia last week, and received a hearty welcome from their friends and acquaintances who number legion. Bro. Goodall, whose health we are happy to say is always good, looks a little fresher than when he left our shores, and seems to have renewed his youth in a remarkable degree. Bro. Sickels, who was quite out of health when he left us, has returned fully recovered, and is just as good as new, and his peculiar charm in conversation is more delightful than ever, because his travels has added so much more to his already well-stored mind. The reception of these brethren in the Old World was most cordial and fraternal, and nothing was wanting on the part of our foreign brethren, especially in England, to make their sojourn pleasant and agreeable. Breth. S. and G. speak in the highest terms of the genial and generous hospitality extended to them wherever they went; they also inform us that Masonry is held in high regard by the people generally, and is in a sound and healthy condition. Brethren, we welcome you home, and trust you may be long spared to recount the pleasures and enjoy the memory of your journey.—Landmark.

The American Knights Templar.

We are pleased to be able to place on record that the reception of the American Templars by the brethren of Great Britain has been most cordial and fraternal, and we regret that our space will not permit us to give an account in detail of the various entertainments to which they were invited. We have already chronicled at considerable length the meetings held in their honor at Belfast and Glasgow, and may now add that we learn from the Perthshire Constitutional that the Knights were feted at Perth upon their visit to that ancient burgh. From the Derbyshire Advertiser we condense a report of the proceedings at Alton Towers, where the R. W. Bro. the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, P. G. M. Staffordshire, received our transatlantic brethren. On their arrival in London, several of the Knights were chaperoned to the various sights of the metropolis by our esteemed Bro. Hughan, who came up from Truro expressly to meet and greet them. The Knights Templar of England, we are glad to say, likewise welcomed their brother Knights and an abridged report of the proceedings will be found in another column. We hope, however, that the Craft Masons of England will not allow their American brethren to return home without offering them a reception worthy of the Grand Lodge of England, and of the great cause of universal brotherhood.—London Freemason.

THE MASONIC TROWEL, Springfield, Ill., for July, is at hand, filled with sparkling gems of thought from the open heart and treasured mind of Brother Reynolds. If THE TROWEL pursues the course indicated by the number before us, we believe that it will be ever welcome to the brethren and their families wherever it goes.—Ritual.

Order of the Eastern Star.

This institution has taken root and grown up in the shadow of the Masonic Temple, until it has attracted the attention of many of the Craft, and caused various opinions to be formed in regard to it. Some look with favor upon it, others with suspicion and distrust, and others still with decided opposition.

One of the great landmarks of the Masonic Fraternity, and which must forever remain unalterable, is, that woman cannot enter the sacred pale of a Masonic lodge and be made a Mason. There are many reasons for this which it is unnecessary for us to mention. The origin of this landmark is derived from the Jewish laws and regulations in the worship of the Deity and the doctrines of their faith. Only the men could become priests, and as the Abrahamic Covenant could only be entered into and its ceremonials performed and the distinctive mark of their faith be preserved and perpetuated by the sons of Israel who were the chosen people of God, so the Hebrew women could be partakers and enjoy the blessings and privileges of the covenant made between Jehovah and Abraham only by adoption.

The first question that may be asked is: Is the Order of the Eastern Star either spurious or legitimate Freemasonry? To this we answer emphatically, No. Secondly: Is the Masonic Fraternity generally, or the Grand Lodge in particular, in any wise affected or compromised by its acts in any way, and is it under their control? To which we also say, No. The next question is: Does the institution rest upon a Masonic basis, and is it worthy of our consideration as individual Masons? To which we answer, Yes.

Adoptive Freemasonry, in various forms has existed for more than a century and a half. In America, female degrees, as they are termed, have been practiced from time immemorial and conferred upon Mason's wives and daughters. The degree of the "Masons' Daughter" has been conferred upon Master Masons and their wives, whenever a sufficient number have met to confer it upon worthy applicants. The "Good Samaritan" and "Heroine of Jericho" have long been conferred upon the wives of Royal Arch Masons, all of which indirectly and without opposition to the various grand bodies which legislate for these different graded organizations of the Fraternity. But this broken system of adoptive Freemasonry, as it is termed, has had no regular head or organization to govern it or systematize its action, for co-operative movement, as an AUXILLARY so as to render it practical and efficient in the dispensing of Masonic relief and charity, until the revival and remodelling of the Order of the Eastern Star, which was established in this country in 1778, and which has taken the place of those others. The success of this Order, therefore, corresponds in its beneficence and usefulness with the extent of Freemasonry. Its obligations are based upon the honor of the female sex, and framed upon the principles of Equality and Justice, and whatever benefits are due by the Masonic Fraternity to the wives, widows, mothers, daughters, and sisters of Masons, corresponding benefits are due FROM them to the members of the "Masonic Fraternity," while only ties of the closest consanguinity will admit any lady to the Order, and WHO IS NOT ALREADY entitled to the protection, shelter, support and charity of every Mason.

The only persons who are entitled to become members of the Order of the Eastern Star are, first, MASTER MASONS in good standing; second, the WIVES of Master Masons in good standing; third, the WIDOWS of Master Masons who died in good standing; fourth, the SISTERS; fifth, the DAUGHTERS, and sixth, the MOTHERS of Master Masons in good standing.—The Square.

Behind the Age.

J. W. Phelps, President of the anti-Masonic Society, living at Brattleboro, Vt., has just learned that there is a secret society known as Odd-Fellows. He writes to the Secretary of the United States Navy informing him that there is a person visiting his State called Frederick D. Stuart, for the purpose of establishing a so-called Grand Encampment of Odd-Fellows, of which association he claims to be Grand Sire. He says that under high-sounding names he encourages the violation of one of the most essential laws of his State for the preservation of liberties. Said Stuart is sometimes called Commodore, and writes to know if such a person is in the United States Navy, and thinks it very extraordinary that an officer of the General Government should be engaged in such business. The Heart and Hand informs President Phelps that 325,000 members of the Society can inform him of the existence of the institution, and that Vice-President Colfax could give him detailed information about it.—Jewel.

Bro. R. Guichard of Walla Walla, Washington Territory, has our thanks for a copy of the survey of the Walla Walla and Columbia River Railroad, made by Gen. James Tilton.

We take the following extracts from the report:

"In speaking of Walla Walla Valley, we include all the country drained by the Walla Walla River. This valley comprises the greater portion of Walla Walla county, W. T., and a considerable part of Umatilla county, Oregon, and is divided by the line of the forty-sixth parallel of North Latitude, or the boundary between Oregon and Washington Territory. It is bounded on the north by the river Touchet and its tributaries, on the east by the Blue Mountains, on the south by Pine Creek and its valley, and on the west by the Columbia river. From north to south the Valley is about fifty miles; from east to west about forty miles. The Walla Walla River, with its numberous tributaries, has its sources in the Blue Mountains, and after flowing in a general westerly direction for about forty miles in a direct line, but nearer sixty, following the sinuosities of the river, empties into the Columbia River about twelve miles below the mouth of Snake River, near Wallula. For the first fifteen miles from the mouth of Walla Walla river, the farming lands upon the bottoms are narrow, only wide enough for one tier of farms; but the gently undulating hills, on either side, are covered with the famous nutritious bunch grass, and are justly entitled the Stockraiser's Paradise. At fifteen miles from Wallula, the Touchet empties into the Walla Walla, and the valleys of both become much broader; one and a half miles east, Pine Creek puts in from the southeast; at the junction of these streams the valley widens out very rapidly. The source of the Touchet is in a northeasterly direction; that of Pine Creek in a southeasterly. These two streams rising in the Blue Mountains, perhaps forty miles apart form two sides, while the Blue Mountains form the third side of the irregular, triangular shaped agricultural portion of the valley. All the length of the Touchet, and especially the upper part of it, is excellent farming land.

The prosperous and well situated town of Waitsburg, is in this fine valley, about thirty-five miles by the river from the confluence of the Touchet and Walla Walla. Towards the upper part of this valley the farming land is not confined to the broad valley of the river, but the gentle slopes of the hill-lands are justly esteemed the best and most productive agricultural lands in the valley. It is certainly a fact that the foot-hills and westerly slopes of the Blue Mountains, even at one thousand or fifteen hundred feet elevation above the city of Walla Walla, and from fifteen to twenty miles distant, are admirably adapted to farming, and produce the finest wheat, Indian corn, and all the cereals.

RENOUNCING MASONRY.—The only fruit of Bro. Blanchard's discussion, so far as we have heard, is related in the following from a Fort Dodge paper. Mr. He Goat has retired from the lodge in disgust and gone to the church. "A few Sundays since, while the Rector of the Episcopal church in Fort Dodge was in the act of opening service, a young goat came bouncing in and made its way up to the altar, where, delivering itself of a bl-a-at, it stood eyeing the Rector, who seemed overwhelmed with astonishment at the strange intruder. The ladies gave a suppressed shriek, the children tittered, the gentlemen sprang to their feet, while Dr. McNulty quickly poked his goatship in the rear with his cane and sent him scampering out."—Evergreen.

But three pages of the paper will be given to advertisements; but, if sufficient inducement be offered, a cover will be added and made a part of the paper for that purpose.

Advertisements for one month, payable in advance; for three months, payable one-half in advance and the remainder after the first insertion; for six months or longer, payable one-third in advance, the remainder quarterly.

The space usually occupied by eight lines of nonpareil type, solid, will be regarded as one square, or, twelve squares to each column.

Equitable charges will be made for changes, alterations or withdrawals.

Orders for advertisements from abroad should state how much space is desired.

Editorial notices will in all cases be written by ourself, and charged for at the rate of one dollar for every ten words or less, payable in advance. The request for editorial notice should be accompanied by the money for the number of words desired, in no case exceeding fifty.

Any one who fails to pay bills when due without an acceptable excuse, will have his or their advertisement thrown out with an editorial notice to that effect. Suspension of business is a sufficient excuse.

No advertisement received from irresponsible houses nor for an immoral or disreputable business, and I reserve to myself the right to reject all such.

No one is authorized to receive any advertisement for me except by my written authority, nor will any advertisement be received without the written authority of the party ordering it.

EXPULSIONS.

In our first issue after the fire we published an article in regard to publication of expulsions, suspensions, impositions, &c., but for all our decision in that case, notices have been sent earnestly requesting publication. We must, however, adhere to our decision as published in the May TROWEL in the following article. Our own safety requires it, and good policy demands it. The law already provides the only legitimate and proper mode of publication.

Publication of Expulsions, Suspensions, Obituary Notices and Impositions.

We have had no little experience in these matters. In this number we publish one expulsion and two sets of obituary resolutions. We now say unequivocally, that hereafter, no supensions, expulsions or restorations will be published in THE TROWEL. Some of these publications may have been useful, but as a whole, the evil is three-fold greater than the good. Oftentimes, sentences of expulsion are inflicted where it should be suspension, and when the feeling attending such a sentence has cooled down, regret follows, and the offender, who should be punished somewhat, is restored before he should be. One extreme begets another. When such notices are sent us, we cannot know the circumstances surrounding the case, and relying upon the judgment and candor of our brethren, we insert their notice, sometimes to find ourself imposed upon, and more frequently to our regret. Suspensions never should be published, and if our brethren will reflect, they will see that nine-tenths of such notices are sent in haste, and when passion had too much control of the mind.

In regard to obituary resolutions, we remark that it is natural and even creditable to the humane and brotherly feelings of members to wish to do justice and honor to the memory of a brother, and to give evidence of such feelings in every laudable way. But an editor is to consider fitness and propriety in the management of his columns; take Illinois for a sample: there are 650 lodges in the State: the deaths will average annually one, perhaps two, to a lodge. A set of resolutions, such as a lodge ought to pass, from each lodge, would leave no room for aught else.

We desire our brethren to send us notices of the marriage of a brother, or of the daughter of a brother, in or about this form:

"Married, at H——, by Rev.——, Bro. N. M., to Miss O. P., daughter of Bro. Q. R."

In cases of death we want our brethren, in all cases to send us notice, whenever it is for a brother, his wife or child, in about this form:

"Died, at A., March 13, Bro. B. C., a member of Isham Lodge No. 10, aged 37 years."

If a brother is or has been an officer it is well to mention it. If there are any peculiar circumstances mention them briefly.

In regard to impostors and impositions it is difficult to fix a rule. A great deal of good has been done in publishing them, but the harm is by no means inconsiderable. None will be published unless certified to under seal, and we reserve to ourself the right to decide upon the propriety of publication in every instance.

In conclusion, we wish to please our brethren, do justice to all, and to make enemies of none. To avoid all cause for ill-feeling, and with no sort of disposition to be censorious, we take this early occasion to state our rule, so that all may have due notice and may govern themselves accordingly.

M. W. Bro. DeWitt C. Cregier.

It is well that every department of honorable life should be represented in the chief places of honor among the Craft. The subject of this brief notice has largely made his own way, conquered impediments, and proven his ability to stand erect and proudly among the honorable and able men who have presided in the east of the renowned Grand Lodge of Illinois.

Bro. Cregier was born in New York City, June 1, 1829, and thoroughly educated a mechanical engineer. The Board of Public Works in Chicago, when it was resolved to take water from Lake Michigan displayed marked judgment in selecting him to take charge of their pumping works and machinery, for in addition to his perfect knowledge of every detail and every principle relating to engineering, he has that subtle power of will which commands unanswering obedience and subordination. This trait was a distinctive feature of his character as Master of Blaney Lodge, and has shown itself in difficult positions as Grand Master.

Of his domestic matters we know little. He has a wife and six children, a nice country seat at Elgin, and we presume that he has a comfortable home in the city.

He was initiated at Blaney Lodge No. 271, June 20, passed July 18 and raised July 26, 1860.

He was Senior Warden, a representative in Grand Lodge, and a member of the Committee on Appeals and Grievances in 1863; W. M. and a member of the Committee on Petitions in Grand Lodge in 1864; W. M. and Chairman of the Committee on Chartered Lodges in 1865; W. M. and a member of the Committee on Masonic Correspondence in 1866; W. M., Chairman of the Committee on Chartered Lodges, and elected Senior Grand Warden in 1867; elected Deputy Grand Master in 1868 and 1869, and Grand Master in 1870. It is most cheerfully admitted so far as we know, that he has labored faithfully, acted impartially, and evinced good governing power in his present position. It has been the custom for many years, to approve a good administration by a re-election, which we presume will be conceded in this case without objection, and, of course, the present incumbents subject to election will naturally retain their present positions.

WE are now sending THE TROWEL to Rev. Francis Mason, D. D., at Toungoo, Burmah. This distinguished missionary is the author of the "Story of a Working Man's Life," now published by Oakey, Mason & Co., 142 and 144 Grand street, New York.

On Obituaries.—E. T. Hollister, Alton; H. G. Dearborn, Augusta; J. C. Smith, Galena; Tuesday, Oct. 3. Place of Committee meetings, Library Hall, and at ten o'clock A. M.

We are authorized by the M. W. Grand Master to say, that the fare at the Sherman and Tremont Houses, will be $3.50 per day, and at the Briggs $3.00 per day. Being a reduction of fifty cents. He also expects to secure substantial reduction at other hotels.

We know by experience, how difficult it is to select committees and secure a proper representation in each, impartially selected from six hundred lodges, and fairly distributed over the surface of the State; the Grand Master has done his duty well in this, as will be seen by careful examination.

Live Thoughts, Ideas and Opinions of Correspondents.

Grammar is necessary, and spelling ought to be correct, but some men have valuable ideas who are deficient in both, while others are correct in expression and orthography, who have no ideas.

Hot weather, a dirty room, no ventilation, poor furniture, but few brethren, and those unsocial, are poor incentives to a lecturer. Faith, will and persistence are necessary in all such cases.

I can get along with a busy man; can reach a haughty one, and can endure a silent one, but from a mean one, "Good Lord deliver us."

If one thinks he has a monopoly, and finds he has not, and abuses somebody, people naturally inquire, "Where is the steal?"

Every member of the lodge in Galena is a subscriber for THE TROWEL. It is pretty nearly, if not quite the same, in Petersburg.

In a certain lodge are two Past Masters who never speak to each other, and who meet each other regularly in lodge. They never should put on their aprons until they are reconciled to each other, and the Master knowing such to be the case, should not open lodge while both are present and unreconciled.

One brother said that he would subscribe for THE TROWEL, if it would help on the way to heaven. Subscribe then, by all means.

Why should women have the means of recognition? Because they are entitled to them by every consideration of honor, obligation, and delicacy, for their protection, for counsel, advice and relief.

Can a Master Mason's wife, mother, daughter, sister or widow be made a Mason? No. But every M. M. knows his duty to aid, shield, assist and protect them, and how can he do that when neither have any means of recognition?

Masons must unite and persist in maintaining the laws of the land: they must not, on any pretense, violate them. They must not take the law into their own hands.

Thanks.

To Bro. Albert Pike, M. P. Sov. G. Commander of the Supreme Council, S. J., and to Em. Sir John Frizzell, Grand Recorder of Templars, Tennessee, for obituary notices of Sir John Jennings Worsham, Past Grand Commander of Templars and Treasurer General of the Supreme Council.

To Bro. Ira Berry for his Christmas Poem canonizing Santa Claus.

To Rev. W. J. Chaplin, editor Michigan Freemason, for two copies of his able periodical for July and August.

Eastern Star Information.

Those desiring information in regard to the Eastern Star in Indiana, will please address Dr. James Crookes, Deputy for that State, at Bridgeton, Parke County, Indiana.

R. W. Breth. D. W. Thomson, Fulton, R. D. Hammond, Macomb, and H. W. Hubbard, Centralia, are Deputies-at-Large.

It is expected that Rev. W. J. Chaplin will soon take charge of Michigan, but, until further advised, parties in Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Nebraska and Dakotah, will address us direct.

H. G. REYNOLDS,
Deputy Grand Patron for the Northwest.

Eastern Star in Illinois.

August 11: Charter issued to Belvidere Chapter No. 77, at Belvidere, Boone Co; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: Bro. Nijah Hotchkiss, W. P.; Mrs. C. Hotchkiss, W. M.; Mrs. M. Downs, A. M. This Chapter is planted among virulent and persecuting Anti-Masons, but it will "go on and prosper."

August 10: Charter issued to Cherry Valley Chapter No. 78, at Cherry Valley, Winnebago Co.; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: Dr. L. M. Van Buren, W. P.; Mrs. A. B. Stetson, W. M.; Mrs. Jane Horton, A. M. No more loyal Masons can be found than are to be found here.

Aug. 15: Charter issued to Rose Croix Chapter No. 79, at Pecatonica Winnebago Co.; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson; Bro. O. C. Town, W. P.; Mrs. Clara Shummin, W. M.; Mrs. Aurelia Town, A. M. The Lodge at Pecatonica is a good one, and this will be a strong Chapter.

Sept. 2: Charter issued to Vesta Chapter No. 80, Fulton Ill.; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: W. C. Snyder, W. P.; Mrs. Sarah A. Brown, W. M.; Mrs. Tryphena Snyder, A. M. This Chapter is at Bro. Thomson's home.

August 29: Charter issued to Mt. Vernon, No. 86, at Mt. Vernon Ills.; formed by Bro. H. W. Hubbard: A. W. Patton, W. P.; Mrs. H. S. Plummer, W. M.; Mrs. C. H. Patton, A. M. This is a good start for Egypt, and will be followed by many more.

Sept. 9: Charter issued to Rock Island Chapter No. 91, at Rock Island; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: Bro. E. E. Parmenter, W. P.; Mrs. Asenath Wilson, W. M.; Mrs. Harriet J. Steele, A. M. We rejoice exceedingly at the formation of this Chapter. Mrs. Wilson is an old acquaintance and a superior woman, and Bro. Parmenter comes of a sound stock, and is a young lawyer of great promise. Many of the petitioners we knew long years ago, and knew them only to honor and love them.

Eastern Star in Kansas.

August 31: We formed Harmony Chapter No. 2, at Salina, Saline Co. Kansas. Bro. Gilbert G. Lowe, W. P.; Mrs. Maggie P. Hanna, W. M.; Mrs. Mary M. Lowe, A. M. Quite a number of the members hail from Jacksonville; hence, the name, "Harmony."

Too Bad.

This caning business is getting too common. Not long since our good Bro. Rounsville, who is so unfortunate as to be an associate editor of one of the Peoria papers, got soundly caned by the employees, without any previous notice, and was compelled from the sheer force of numbers to submit to the infliction with such grace as he could. It affected him so, that he put right out for Minnesota, to hold converse with "Laughing Water," and ease his troubles in a region not quite so arid as Peoria and the region round about.

Annals of Iowa Masonry.

We are indebted to M. W. Bro. Parvin, for a copy of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Iowa held last June. It is a large book, and has an elegant engraving of M. W. Bro. O. P. Waters facing the title-page. The number of lodges enrolled is 300; initiated during the past year, 1,528; number of members, 13,527; Grand Lodge receipts, $8, 289.65; mileage, $3,047.09; other disbursements, $6,116.76. Illinois escaped criticism in the report on correspondence. Bro. Parvin will please accept our thanks.

Items from Returns.

At this writing, (Sept. 12,) three hundred and thirteen lodges have made returns and paid dues, and one hundred and three have made returns, but have paid no dues; total making returns, 416; leaving 212 that have not been heard from.

Returns have been received from nine lodges U. D., all asking for charters; there are twenty-two lodges U. D.

The gains so far for the 416 chartered lodges, is 1166; loss 512; net gain 654. All the membership of lodges U. D. is clear gain. The real gain, including lodges not returned, and lodges U. D., will exceed two thousand. The gain is made up of raisings, admissions, restorations and membership of lodges U. D.: the loss arises from deaths, dimissions, expulsions and suspensions.

Sixteen lodges only, in Chicago, have made returns, including No. 33. The net gain in these is 119. Eleven lodges, including several of the oldest and largest, have as yet, made no returns. The absolute gain in Chicago will be between 250 and 500. Of the whole number returned, thirty-five lodges have 100 or more members.

New York Capitol.

The corner-stone of the new capitol building at Albany, N. Y., was laid by R. W. Geo. Babcock, as G. M., assisted by the Grand Lodge of New York, on Wednesday, August 2. The civic and Masonic procession was immense; the Templars performed escort duty, and a large number of lodges, chapters, commanderies and Scottish bodies were in line, Sir R. H. Waterman, commanding. The ceremonies were imposing, and an able oration was delivered by Gov. Hoffman.

More Diabolism.

The anti-Masonic magnates, James R. Baird, and Blanchard & Son, have been disturbing the peace, and invading the quiet of the good people of Polo, and its neighborhood. They accused the Masons of high crimes and misdemeanors, and used the arguments usual on such occasions, spiced with sensation stories, and bald slanders. This Baird is a disreputable character, who should never be admitted into decent society, while President Blanchard may as well air his pugnacity upon Masons and Masonry as upon anybody else, for in a fight of some kind he will be 'until death conquers him. The son is simply his Sancho Panza.

Micheal M'Cartney,

A cooper, represented to be a Freemason, left Canada some years ago, and was last heard of as going to Peoria, and is supposed to be in Illinois. Considerable property has fallen to him, and if this meets his eye, or that of any of his acquaintances, please address, D. F. Brandon, Oriental Lodge, 122 La Salle St. Chicago.

Exchanges please notice.

The Corner Stone

Of the new Masonic Temple was laid at Lyons, Iowa, August 15, by M. W. Bro. O. P. Waters, Grand Master, assisted by P. G. Master Parvin, and an immense concourse of Masons from every direction. Hugh De Payen Council of Kadosh, Wm. E. Leffingwell, Commander, acted as escort.

Peterson's Musical Monthly.

We believe that musicians generally admit that this excellent work is just suited for all conditions alike; the poor and the rich, for the church, opera, parlor and humble homes. For six months, $1.50; for one year, $3.00.

The Companion,

Always a valuable journal, in the interests of Odd Fellowship, comes to us in a new dress, trimmed, neat and presentable everywhere. It has now reached volume nine, and is published by M. C. Lilly & Co., 253 South High Street, Columbus, Ohio, at $2.50 per year. It is not only valuable as an accurate news-gatherer, but also as a family journal, and a true exponent of the principles of the Order.

Loomis' Musical Journal,

With a Masonic department, for August, comes in a handsome new dress, and should win golden opinions wherever it goes. Published by C. M. Loomis, 299 Chapel St., New Haven, Conn., at $1 per year; monthly.

The Annual Grand Communication will be held at Chicago, in METROPOLITAN HALL, corner of Randolph and La Salle streets, commencing Tuesday, October 3, 1871.

The customary railroad facilities have been secured. The following roads will sell return tickets at Chicago for one-fifth the regular fare to those paying full fare in going, on presentation of the Grand Secretary's certificate, viz.: "Illinois Central," "Chicago & Northwestern," "Chicago & Alton," "Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific" and "Chicago, Burlington & Quincy." The "Rockford, Rock Island & St. Louis" will sell return tickets on the same conditions at Sterling, Rock Island, Bushnell, Vermont and Monmouth; the "Western Union" at Clinton, Wisconsin, and Freeport, Illinois; the "Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western" at Champaign and Bloomington; the "St. Louis, Vandalia, Terre Haute & Indianapolis" at Effingham; the "Indianapolis & St. Louis" will sell tickets at Bunker Hill, Litchfield, Hillsboro, Nokomis, Pana, Shelbyville, Windsor, Charleston and Paris, good to Mattoon and return; the "Ohio & Mississippi" will sell round trip tickets between local points good for five days; the "Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw" will sell excursion tickets, good going and returning; and the "Pekin, Peoria & Jacksonville" will return representatives at one-fifth fare on the certificate of the Grand Secretary.

All matters for the Grand Secretary, either by mail or express, sent after the 22d day of September should be directed to the care of W. M. Egan, No. 33 Chamber of Commerce, Chicago. Returns have been received from about one-half the lodges and about one-third have paid Grand Lodge dues. All the returns and dues ought to be in the hands of the Grand Secretary on or before September 15th; this is the law of the Grand Lodge.—Quarterly Circular.

THE Grand Lodge of Missouri and California meet on the second Tuesday in October; Kentucky on the third Monday, Ohio on the third Tuesday, Nebraska on the fourth Tuesday, and Kansas on the third Wednesday.

W. Bro. R. H. Waterman,

Acting Marshall of the Grand Lodge will please accept our thanks for a beautiful copy of the proceedings at the laying of the corner stone of the new Capitol at Albany, N. Y., on the 24th day of June last, together with the address of His Excellency, John T. Hoffman, Governor of the State.

Agricultural Fairs.

Thanks to Alfred Gray, Esq., Secretary of the Kansas State Agricultural Society for an invitation to attend the annual exhibition at Topeka, on the 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15th days of this month.

Like thanks to Bro. J. G. Strodtman, Secretary of the Menard county Agricultural Society, for an invitation to attend the annual Fair at Petersburg on the 12, 13 and 14th instants, and for a copy of the rules, regulations and premium list.

And W. Bro. Geo. W. Davis, County Clerk of Greene county, Secretary of the Greene county Agricultural and Mechanical Society will also please accept thanks for an invitation to be present at the exhibition at Carrollton, September 26, 27, 28, and 29.

Bro. Geo. D. Boyden is entitled to our thanks for an invitation to attend the Fair of the Logan county Society on the 6, 7, 8 and 9th inst., at Lincoln.

We are indebted to Breth. W. P. Tanquary and S. Y. Thornton for an invitation to attend the annual fair of the Fulton county Society to be held at Canton, October 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13; and the tender of hospitality by Bro. Tanquary will not be forgotten. We are obliged to the Secretary, C. T. Heald, for the pamphlet containing the rules and premium list.

We are also in receipt of the premium list of the Peoria county Society. The Fair will be held September 26, 27, 28 and 29, at Peoria.

The show bill of the DeWitt Co. Society, is nearly six feet long; the fair is to be held at Clinton, September 19, and continues four days.

THIS number of the TROWEL has been purposely delayed, so as to furnish all the information possible before the meeting of the Grand Bodies.

WE shall endeavor to have our October Number out by the 15th, but our attendance upon Grand Bodies may cause some delay. After that, the paper will appear as soon after the first of each month as possible.

SIR Walter Scott was made a Mason in St. David's Lodge No. 36, Edinburg, Scotland.

THE Grand Encampment of Templars and the Gen. G. R. A. Chapter, U. S. A., meet at Baltimore on the 19th instant.

Another Cane-spiracy.

The following correspondence between R. W. Bro. John Bennett, Master of Clinton Lodge No. 19, at Petersburg, and R. W. Bro. N. Bateman, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, speaks for itself. The cane is a marvel of beauty, grace and strength.

PETERSBURG, Illinois, August 24th, 1871.

Hon. Newton Bateman, Springfield, Illinois:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The members of our lodge were anxious to have you with them, that they might publicly present you with a slight testimonial of their high regard for your very satisfactory effort on the 24th of June last. But failing in that, they have directed the committee (of which I am chairman) to present you a beautiful gold-mounted ebony walking cane, which I now do, through Bro. Fisher, hoping that you will accept it in the spirit in which it is tendered, and that it may render you much valuable service in your pilgrimage through life—often reminding you of the 24th June, 1871.

I will close with assurances of the highest regard of all the members of Clinton Lodge No. 19, and of my own in particular.

Truly and fraternally yours,
JNO. BENNETT.

SPRINGFIELD, Illinois, September 2d, 1871.

John Bennett, Esq., W. M. of Clinton Lodge No. 19, Petersburg, Illinois:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Returning to the city after an absence of several days I find your communication of the 24th ult. awaiting me.

I have fallen a victim to your well-devised conspiracy. Although foiled in the nefarious plot to entrap me in Petersburg, where your designs might have been consummated with circumstances of cruelty which I shudder to contemplate, yet I have not been able to escape. Your trusty emissary, taking me wholly unawares, has accomplished his purpose.

You did not give me due and timely notice that I might ward off approaching danger, but suddenly, without the least warning, with no friendly admonition of impending peril, you have visited upon me this most unmerited CANING.

To think that after having advanced so far on the journey of life without ever having received the least personal violence or indignity, trying to live with charity for all and malice towards none, that at this late day I should be literally caned, and that in the most public and effectual manner, and at the hands of two of my brethren of the Mystic Tie, who were bound to do me no personal violence in anger! Brethren, how could you? Where were your bowels of compassion? where that magnanimity, that point of mercy, which spares a fallen foe?

Pardon me: I was really compelled to take refuge in pleasantries, till I could sufficiently command my feelings to give some fitting utterance to the sentiments awakened by this elegant and most unexpected token of your fraternal regard.

The 25th of June, 1871, was already marked with a white stone among the bright days of my Masonic calendar, and nothing more was needed to keep its delightful incidents and associations fresh and green in my memory forever. On the morning of that day I met most of you as a personal stranger, bound to you by no tie save that a common one which subsists between all who have been brought from darkness to Masonic light. On the evening of that day I parted from you no longer a stranger, but assured that in each of you I had a personal friend, as well as a mystic brother. Your cordial greeting, manly bearing and most kindly and courteous attentions, were not only grateful to my feelings, but a beautiful exemplification of the refining nature of the tenets of our profession, causing me to feel prouder than ever of our noble Order.

I had, previous to that time, participated in many Masonic re-unions in various parts of our common country, but I have said, and I now repeat it, that in the elegance, variety and profusion of the viands furnished for the banquet and served by fair hands—the adaptation and beauty of the wooded shades in which the collation was spread—in the order and completeness of all the arrangements, and especially in the graceful decorum and genial refinement that characterized all the proceedings, that St. John's day in Clary's Grove surpassed anything in my former experience.

If my utterances on that occasion met with your approval, dear brethren, and were believed to be conducive to the good of the Order, I am truly glad. I merely endeavored to point out as well as I could what Freemasonry is and what it is not, as I understand it, and to indicate the principles upon which, and upon which alone, in the future, as in the past, we must look for the purity and stability of the Order.

And now, dear brethren of Clinton Lodge, I accept your gift with a full heart, and in the spirit with which I believe you have bestowed it. While it seems to remind me of the approach of that period when "the grasshopper shall be a burden," and earthly support shall fail, it shall also suggest that blessed union of fraternal hearts which lightens the burdens of life as we move forward on the level of time and that unshaken reliance upon the divine rod and staff—even the Lion of the Tribe of Judah—whereby we all hope to safely pass the dark river at last, and be at rest in our Father's house.

Fraternally and truly yours,
NEWTON BATEMAN.

Quincy.

To some one—we know not who—are we indebted for a pamphlet disclosing the advantages of Quincy as a commercial point. By an accompanying map it seems that she has the following railroads. The Quincy, Alton & St. Louis; the Toledo, Wabash & Western; the Lafayette, Bloomington & Mississippi; the C. B. & Q.; Quincy & Burlington; Miss. Valley & Western; Quincy, Missouri & Pacific; H. & St. Jo; from Quincy to Fort Scott, and Quincy to St. Louis on the Missouri side. Ten roads.

Its population is 24,052, being an increase in ten years of more than 10,000. Boats that run to St. Louis, can run to Quincy, and trains cross on the bridge. It is the centre of one of the finest agricultural districts in the world, is commandingly situated, free from flood, and above the malaria. For beauty of situation, enterprising people, social culture and business facilities, Quincy may well challenge comparison.

Glad to know it.

Our M. E. Comp. L. L. Munn of Freeport, P. G. H. P., has purchased a one-half interest in the Freeport Gas Works, and will now devote all his energies to that business.

Resources of Kansas,

Is the title of a book of 287 pages, setting forth what has been done and is doing in Kansas, embracing maps and engravings and woodcuts. The last census gave the state a population of 353,478, being a gain of more than 200,000 in ten years. The book is too large for even a brief notice; it is full of information to all desiring new homes, and to those who desire to invest. Send for the book to C. C. Hutchinson, Topeka, Kansas, and enclose $1 for the book in paper cover, or $1.50 in muslin.

Old Grandfather Graybeard's Corner.

Dear Bro. Reynolds:

Thanks, a thousand thanks, for a place in the N. E. corner, and I shall take real pleasure in building thereon when I am able, but the weather has been so awful hot and debilitating that work, even writing, was out of the question, and the easy chair was so inviting, and Morpheus would come without inviting, and the afternoon nap was so protracted, and—and—well I can better describe the situation by an extract from one of my correspondents, who says: "We are literally broiled, baked, boiled and burned up; it will take chemical combinations philosophically prepared, to restore us to our human elements again. There is a little of human form, guided by the spiritual, left to indite this letter;" and so I hardly know if I will get into the September number or not.

The other evening, being in that half waking, half sleeping, half dreaming, half conscious state, when the natural blends with the spiritual, we got to talking about this anti-Masonic excitement, and wondered how some Masons could treat it with anything but contempt, and how we treated this disease in old times; appealing to Bro. Webb, he answered by humming a couplet of an old Masonic song:

"Laugh at their ignorance,
Pity their want of sense."

This was so good that we called for the whole, so he cleared his throat and began.

Let Masons fame resound,
Throughout the nations round,
From pole to pole.
See what felicity,
Harmless simplicity,
Like electricity
Runs through the whole.

Such sweet variety,
Ne'er had society,
Ever before.
Faith, Hope and Charity,
Love and sincerity,
Without temerity,
Charm more and more.

When in the Lodge we're met,
And in due order set,
Happy are we.
Our works are glorious,
Deeds meritorious,
Never censorious,
But great and free.

When Folly's sons arise,
Masonry to despise,
Scorn at their spite;
Laugh at their ignorance,
Pity their want of sense,
Ne'er let them give offence,
Firmer unite.

Masons have long been free,
And may they ever be,
Great as of yore.
For many ages past,
Masonry has stood fast,
And may its glory last,
Till time's no more.

This called out another, or rather your article on the duty of the hour, but more particulary that portion relating to Masonic charity.

To old Hiram in heaven, where he sat in full glee,
A few brother Masons sent up a pettition,
That he their inspirer and Patron would be,
To help Masons' orphans, and mend their condition.

The god's were all mute, when he mentioned the suite,
They gave them consent and donation too boot;
Then who would not wish, like celestials divine,
In a cause like the present, to cheerfully join?

The messenger flew to our Royal Arch dome,
Where the Masons were seated, in great expectation,
The Tyler was ready—announced he was come,
When the lodge was resumed, every man in his station.

Our Grand Master there, filled the Royal Arch chair;
When he read—every brother with rapture did stare,
Rejoiced! that the god's, with donations divine,
To assist Masons orphans, did cheerfully join.

Straight the news was made public, the Brotherhood ran,
To announce to all Masons, old Hiram's directions;
They bowed to the summons and all to a man
Clubbed together their mites, for the orphan's protection.

Wives, widows and maids, and men of all trades,
To our lodge they came running to offer their aids.
And all who contribute donations to join,
For the orphans of Masons, are surely divine.

Miscellaneous.

Duty.

Not once or twice in our rough island story
The path of duty was the path to glory.
He that walks it only thirsting
For the right, and learns to deaden
Love of self before his journey closes,
He shall find the stubborn thistle bursting
Into glossy purples, which outredden
All voluptous garden roses.

Not once or twice in our fair island story
The path of duty was the way to glory.
He that ever following her commands,
Or with toil of heart, and knees, and hands,
Through the long gorge to the fair light, has won
His path upward and prevail'd,
Shall find the toppling crags of Duty scaled
Are close upon the shining table-lands,
To which our God Himself is moon and sun.

—Alfred Tennyson.

Not Guilty.

In the spring of 18—I was called to Jackson, Alabama, to attend court, having been engaged to defend a young man who had been accused of robbing the mail. The stolen bag had been recovered, as well as the letters from which the money had been rifled. These letters were given me for my examination, and I returned them to the prosecuting attorney. Having got through my preliminaries about noon, and as the case would not come off before the next day, I went into court in the afternoon to see what was going on. The first case that came up was one of theft, and the prisoner was a young girl not more than seventeen years of age, named Elizabeth Medworth. She was very pretty, and bore the mild, innocent look which is seldom found in a culprit. She had been weeping profusely, but as she found so many eyes upon her she became too frightened to weep more.

The complaints against her set forth that she had stolen a hundred dollars from a Mrs. Nasby, and as the case went on I found that this Mrs. Nasby, a wealthy widow living in the town, was the girl's mistress. The poor girl declared her innocence in the wildest terms, but circumstances were hard against her. A hundred dollars in bank notes had been stolen from her mistress' room, and she was the only one that had access there.

At this juncture, when the mistress was upon the witness stand, a young man came and caught me by the arm.

"They tell me you are a very fine lawyer," he whispered.

"I am a lawyer." I said.

"Then save her! You certainly can do it, for she is innocent."

"Has she no counsel?" I asked.

"None that's good for anything—nobody that will do any thing for her. Oh, save her; and I will give you all that I have got. I can't give you much—but I can raise something."

I reflected a moment. I cast my eyes toward the prisoner, and she was at that moment looking at me. She caught my eye, and the volume of entreaty I read in her glance resolved me in a moment. I arose and went to the girl, and asked if she wished me to defend her. She said yes. I then informed the court that I was ready to enter the case, and was admitted at once. The loud murmurs of satisfaction that ran through the crowd, told me where the sympathies of the people were. I asked for a moment's cessation, that I might speak to my client. I went and sat down by her side, and asked her to state candidly the whole case. She told me she had lived with Mrs. Nasby nearly two years and had never had any trouble before. About two weeks ago, she said, her mistress had missed a hundred dollars.

"She missed it from her drawer," the girl said to me, and asked me about it. That evening I know Nancy Luther told Mrs. Nasby that she saw me take the money from the drawer—that she watched me through the keyhole. Then they went to my trunk and found twenty-five dollars of the missing money there. But, sir, I never took it, and somebody must have put it there."

I then asked her if she suspected any one.

"I don't know," she said, "who could have done it but Nancy. She has never liked me because she thought I was better treated than she. She is the cook, I was the chambermaid."

She pointed Nancy Luther out to me. She was a stout bold-faced girl, somewhere about five and twenty years old, with a low forehead, small eyes, a pug nose, and thick lips. I caught her glance at once, as it rested on the fair young prisoner, and the moment I detected the look of hatred which I read there, I was convinced that she was a rogue.

"Nancy Luther, did you say that girl's name was?" I asked for a new light had broken in upon me.

"Yes, sir."

I left the court-room and went to the prosecuting attorney and asked him for the letters I had handed him—the ones that had been stolen from the mail-bag. He gave them to me, and having selected one I returned the rest, and told him I would see he had the one I kept before night. I then returned to the court-room and the case went on.

Mrs. Nasby resumed her testimoney. She said she intrusted the room to the prisoner's care, and no one else had access there, save herself. Then she described the missing money, and closed by telling how she found twenty-five dollars in the prisoner's trunk. She could swear it was the identical money she had lost, in two ten, and one five-dollar bank note.

"Mrs. Nasby," said I, "when you first missed the money, had you any reason to believe that the prisoner had taken it?"

"No sir," she answered.

"Had you ever detected her in any dishonesty?"

"No, sir."

"Should you have thought of searching her trunk, had not Nancy Luther advised and informed you?"

"No sir."

Mrs. Nasby left the stand, and Nancy Luther took her place. She came up with a bold front, and upon me cast a defiant look, as if to say. "Trap me if you can." She then gave her evidence as follows:

She said that on the night the money was taken she saw the prisoner go up stairs, and from the shy manner in which she went up, she suspected that all was not right: so she followed her up. "Elizabeth went to Mrs. Nasby's room and shut the door after her. I stooped down and looked through the keyhole, and saw her take the money and put it in her pocket. Then she stooped down and picked up the lamp, and as I saw she was coming out I hurried away."

Then she went on, told how she informed her mistress of this, and how she proposed to search the girl's trunk.

I called Mrs. Nasby back.

"You said that no one save yourself had access to your room," I said, "now couldn't Nancy Luther have entered the room, if she wished?"

"Certainly, sir; I meant that no one else had any right there."

I saw that Mrs. Nasby, though naturally a hard woman, was somewhat moved by poor Elizabeth's misery.

"Could your cook have known by any means that is in your knowledge, where your money was?"

"Yes, sir; for she has often come to my room when I was there, and I have often given her money to buy provisions of market men who happened to come along with their wagons."

"One more question: have you known of the prisoner having used money since this was stolen?"

"No, sir."

I now called Nancy Luther back and she began to tremble a little, though her look was bold and defiant as ever.

"Miss Luther," said I "why did you not inform your mistress at once of what you had seen, without waiting for her to ask about her money?"

"Because I could not at once make up my mind to expose the poor girl," she answered promptly.

"You say you looked through the keyhole and saw her take the money?"

"Yes, sir."

"Where did she place the lamp when she did so?"

"On the bureau."

"In your testimony you said she stooped down when she picked it up. What do you mean by that?"

The girl hesitated, and finally she said she did not mean anything, only that she picked up the lamp.

"Very well," said I, "how long have you been with Mrs. Nasby?"

"Not quite a year, sir."

"How much does she pay you a week?"

"A dollar and three-quarters."

"Have you taken up any of your pay since you have been there?"

"Yes, sir."

"How much?"

"I don't know sir."

"Why don't you know?"

"How should I? I have taken it at different times, just as I wanted it, and kept no account."

"Then you have not laid up any money since you have been there?"

"No, sir, only what Mrs. Nasby may owe me."

"Will you tell me if you belong to this State?"

"I do, sir."

"In what town?"

She hesitated for a moment, the bold look forsook her. I next turned to Mrs. Nasby.

"Do you ever take a receipt from your girls when you pay them?"

"Always."

"Can you send and get one of them for me?"

"She has told you the truth, sir, about the payments," said Mrs. Nasby.

"Oh, I don't doubt it." I replied, but particular proof is the thing for the court-room. So, if you can, I wish you would procure the receipt.

She said she would willingly go, if the court said so. The court did say so, and she went. Her dwelling was not far off, and she soon returned and handed me four receipts which I took and examined. They were signed in a strong, staggering hand, by the witness.

"Now, Nancy Luther," I said turning to the witness, and speaking in a quick, startling tone, at the same time looking her sternly in the eye, "please tell the court and jury where you got the seventy-five dollars you sent in your letter to your sister in Somers."

At this she started as though a volcano had burst at her feet. She turned pale as death, and every limb shook violently. I waited until the people could have an opportunity to see her emotion, and then I repeated the question.

"I—never—sent—any," she gasped

"You did!" I thundered, for I was excited now.

"I—didn't," she faintly murmured, grasping the railing by her side for support.

"May it please your honor and gentlemen of the jury," I said, "I came here to defend a man who was arrested for robbing the mail, and in the course of my preliminary examinations I had access to the letters which had been torn open and robbed of money. When I entered upon this case, and heard the name of the witness pronounced, I went out and got the letter, which I now hold, for I remember having seen one bearing the signature of Nancy Luther. This letter was taken from the mail-bag, and it contained seventy-five dollars; and by looking at the post-mark you will observe that it was mailed the day after the hundred dollars was taken from Mrs. Nasby's drawer, and is directed to Dorcas Luther, Somers, Montgomery county. And you will observe that one hand wrote the letter and signed the receipt and the jury will also so observe. And now I will only add it is plain to see how the hundred dollars were disposed of. Seventy-five dollars were sent off for safe-keeping, while the remaining twenty-five dollars were placed in the prisoner's trunk, for the purpose of covering the real criminal. I now leave my client's case in your hands."

The case was given to the jury immediately following their examination of the letter. They had heard from the witness's own mouth that she had no money of her own, and without leaving their seats they returned a verdict of "Not Guilty."

I will not describe the scene that followed, but if Nancy Luther had not been immediately arrested for theft she would have been obliged to seek protection of the officers, or the excited people would have maimed her at least, if they had not done more. The next morning I received a note, handsomely written, in which I was told that the within was but a slight token of the gratitude due me for my efforts in behalf of the poor, defenceless, maiden. It was signed "Several Citizens," and contained one hundred dollars. Shortly afterward, the youth who first begged me to take up the case, called upon me with all the money he could raise; but I refused his hard earnings, showing him that I had already been paid. Before I left town I was a guest at his wedding—my fai client being the happy bride.

A Visit with the Doctor.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

"How are you to-day, Mrs. Carleton?" asked Dr. Farleigh, as he sat down by his patient, who reclined languidly in a large cushioned chair.

"Miserable," was the faint spoken reply. And the word was repeated—"Miserable."

The Doctor took one of the lady's small white hands, on which the net-work of veins, most delicately traced, spread its blue lines everywhere beneath the transparent skin. It was a beautiful hand—a study for a painter or a sculptor. It was a soft, flexible hand—soft, flexible, and velvety to the touch as the hand of a baby, for it was as much a stranger to useful work. The Doctor laid his finger on the wrist. Under the pressure he felt the pulse beat slowly and evenly. He took out his watch and counted the beats—seventy in a minute. There was no fever nor any unusual disturbance of the system. Calmly the heart was doing its appointed work.

"How is your head, Mrs. Carleton?"

The lady moved her head from side to side two or three times.

"Anything out of the way there?"

"My head is well enough, but I feel so miserable—so weak. I haven't the strength of a child. The least exertion exhausts me." And the lady shut her eyes, looking the very picture of feebleness.

"Have you taken the tonic, for which I left a prescription yesterday?"

"Yes, but I am no stronger."

"How is your appetite?"

"Bad."

"Have you taken the morning walk in the garden that I suggested?"

"Oh dear no! Walk in the garden? I'm faint by the time I reach the breakfast room! I can't live at this rate, doctor. What am I to do? I'm a burden to myself and every one else."

And Mrs. Carleton really looked distressed.

"You ride out every day?"

"I did until the carriage was broken, and that was nearly a week ago. It has been at the carriage maker's ever since."

"You must have the fresh air, Mrs. Carleton," said the doctor, emphatically. "Fresh air, change of scene, and exercise are indispensible in your case. You will die if you remain shut up in this fashion. Come, take a ride with me."

"Doctor! how absurd!" exclaimed Mrs. Carleton, almost shocked by the suggestion. "Ride with you! What would people think?"

"A fig for people's thoughts! Get your shawl and bonnet, and take a drive with me. What do you care for meddlesome peoples' thoughts? Come."

The doctor knew his patient.

"But you are not in earnest. surely?" There was a half amused twinkle in the lady's eyes.

"Never more in earnest. I'm going to see a patient just out of the city, and the drive will be a charming one. Nothing would please me better than to have your company."

There was a vein of humor and a spirit of "don't care" in Mrs. Carleton, which had once made her independent and almost hoydenish. But fashionable associations, since her woman life began, had toned her down into exceeding propriety. Fashion and conventionality, however, were losing their influence since enfeebled health kept her feet back from the world's gay places; and the doctor's invitation to ride found her sufficiently disenthralled to see in it a pleasant novelty.

"I've half a mind to go," she said, smiling. She had not smiled before since the doctor came in.

"I'll ring for your maid," and Doctor Farleigh's hand was on the bell-rope before Mrs, Carleton had space to think twice, and endanger a change of thought.

"I'm not sure that I'm strong enough for the effort," said Mrs. Carleton, and she laid her head back upon the cushions in a feeble way.

"Trust me for that," replied the doctor.

The maid came in.

"Bring me a shawl and bonnet, Alice? I am going to ride out with the doctor." Very languidly was the sentence spoken.

"I'm afraid, doctor, it will be too much for me. You know how weak I am. The very thought of such an effort exhausts me."

"Not a thought of the effort," replied the doctor. "It isn't that."

"What is it?"

"A thought of appearance—of what people will say."

"Now, doctor, you don't think me so weak in that direction?"

"Just so weak," was the free spoken answer. "You fashionable people are all afraid of each other. You haven't a spark of individuality or independence. No, not a spark! You are quite strong enough to ride out in your own elegant carriage—but with the doctor!—O dear, no! If you were certain of not meeting Mrs. M'Flimssey, perhaps the experiment might be adventured. But she is always out on fine days."

"Doctor, for shame! How can you say that?" And a ghost of color crept into the face of Mrs. Carleton, while her eyes grew brighter—almost flashed."

The maid came in with shawl and bonnet. Dr. Farleigh, as we have intimated, understood his patient, and said just two or three words more, in a tone half contemptuous.

"Afraid of Mrs. M'Flimsey? Not I; nor of forty Mrs. M'Flimseys."

It was not the ghost of color that warmed Mrs. Carleton's face now, but the crimson of quicker heart beats. She actually arose from her chair without reaching for her maid's hands, and stood firmly while the shawl was adjusted and the bonnet strings tied.

"We shall have a charming ride," said the doctor, as he crowded in beside his fashionable lady companion and took the loose reins. He noticed that she sat up erectly, and with scarcely a sign of the languor that but a few minutes ago had so oppressed her.

"Lean back when you see Mrs. M,Flimsey's carriage, and draw your vail closely. She will never dream that it is you."

',I'll get angry if you play on that string much longer!" exclaimed Mrs. Carleton, "what do I care for Mrs. M'Flimsey?"

How charming the tints flushed her sweet eyes, that were leaden a little before.

Away from the noisy streets, out upon the smoothly beaten road, and amid green fields and woodlands, gardens and flower-decked orchards, the doctor bore his patient, holding her all the while in pleasant talk.

How different this from the listless, companionless drives taken by the lady in her own carraige—a kind of easy vibrating machine, that quickened the sluggish blood no more than a cushioned rocking-chair.

Closely the doctor observed his patient. He saw how erectly she continued to sit; how the color deepened in her face, which actually seemed rounder and fuller; how the sense of enjoyment fairly danced in her eyes.

Returning to the city by a different road, the doctor, after driving through streets entirely unfamiliar to his companion, drew up before a row of mean-looking dwellings, and dropping the reins, stepped upon the pavement, at the same time reaching out his hand to Mrs. Carleton. But she drew back, saying,

"What is the meaning of this, doctor?"

"I have a patient here, and I want you to see her."

"O no; excuse me doctor, I've no taste for such things," answered the lady.

"Come—I can't leave you alone in the carriage. Ned might take a fancy to walk off with you."

Mrs. Carleton glanced at the patient old horse, whom the doctor was slandering, with a slightly alarmed manner.

"Don't you think he will stand, doctor" she asked uneasily.

"He likes to go home, like others of his tribe. Come;" and the doctor held out his hand in a persistent way.

Mrs. Carleton looked at the poor tenements before which the doctor's carriage had stopped with something of disgust and something of apprehension.

"I can never go in there, doctor."

"Why not?"

"I might take some disease."

"Never fear. More likely to find a panacea there."

The last sentence was in an undertone.

Mrs. Carleton left the carriage and, crossing the pavement, entered one of the houses, and passed up with the doctor to the second story. To his light tap at a chamber door a woman's voice said:

"Come in."

The door was pushed open, and the doctor and Mrs. Carleton went in. The room was small, and furnished in the humblest manner, but the air was pure, and everything looked clean and tidy. In a chair, with a pillow pressed back for a support, sat a pale, emaciated woman, whose large, bright eyes looked up eagerly at so unexpected a visitor as the lady who came in with the doctor. On her lap a baby was sleeping, as sweet and pure and beautiful a baby as ever Mrs. Carleton had looked upon. The first impulse of her true woman's heart, had she yielded to it, would have prompted her to take it in her arms and cover it with kisses.

The woman was too weak to rise from her chair, but she asked Mrs. Carleton to be seated, in a tone of lady-like self-possession that did not escape the visitor's observation.

"How did you pass the night, Mrs. Leslie?" asked the doctor.

"About as usual," was answered in a calm, patient way, and she even smiled as she spoke.

"How about the pain through your back and shoulder?"

"It may have been a little easier."

"You slept?"

"Yes, sir."

"What of the night sweats?"

"I don't think they have diminished any."

The doctor bent his eyes on the floor, and sat in silence for some time.

"I will send you a new medicine," said the doctor, looking up; then speaking to Mrs. Carleton, he added, "Will you sit here until I visit two or three patients in the block?"

"O certainly," and she reached out her arms for the baby, and removed it so gently from its mother's lap that its soft slumber was not broken.

When the doctor returned he noticed there had been tears in Mrs. Carleton's eyes. She was still holding the baby, but now resigned the quiet sleeper to its mother, kissing it as she did so. He saw her look with a tender, meaning interest at the white, patient face of the sick woman, and heard her say, as she spoke a word or two in parting—

"I shall not forget you."

"That's a sad case, doctor," remarked the young lady, as she took her place in the carriage.

"It is; but she is sweet and patient."

"I saw that, and it filled me with surprise. She tells me her husband died a year ago."

"Yes."

"And she has supported herself by shirt-making."

"Yes."

"But that she has become too feeble for work, and is dependent on a younger sister, who earns a few dollars weekly at book-folding."

"The simple story I believe," said the doctor.

Mrs. Carleton was silent for most of the way home; but thought was busy. She had seen a phase of life that touched her heart.

"You are better for this ride," remarked the doctor, as he handed her from the carriage.

"I think so," replied Mrs. Carleton.

"There has not been so fine a color on your face for months."

They had entered Mrs. Carleton's elegant residence, and were sitting in one of her luxuriant parlors.

"Shall I tell you why?" added the doctor.

Mrs. Carleton bowed.

"You've had some healthy heart-beats."

She did not answer.

"And I pray you, dear madam, let the strokes go on!" continued Dr, Farleigh.

"Let your mind become interested in some good work, and your hands obey your thoughts, and you will be a healthier woman in body and soul. Your disease, madam, is mental inaction."

Mrs. Carleton looked steadily at the doctor.

"You are in earnest," she said in a calm, firm way.

"Wholly in earnest, madam. I found you an hour ago in so weak a state that to lift your hand was an exhaustive effort. You are sitting erect now, with every muscle tightly strung. When will your carriage come home?"

He asked the closing question abruptly.

"To-morrow," was replied.

"Then I will not call for you, but—" he hesitated.

"Say on, doctor."

"Will you take my prescription?"

"Yes." There was no hesitation.

"You must give that sick woman a ride into the country. The fresh, pure, blossom-sweet air will do her good, may, indeed, turn the balance of health in her favor. Don't be afraid of Mrs, McFlimsey."

"For shame, doctor! But you are too late in your suggestion. I'm quite ahead of you."

"Ah! in what respect?"

"That drive into the country is already a settled thing. Do you know that I am in love with that baby?"

"'Othello's occupation gone,' I see," replied the doctor, rising "But I may visit you occasionally as a friend, I presume, if not as a medical adviser?"

"As my best friend, always," said Mrs. Carleton, with feeling. "You have led me out of myself, and showed me the way to health and happiness; and I have settled the question as to my future. It shall not be as the past." And it was not.

Case of Conscience.

In 1866 a New York merchant received through the postoffice a letter written in a disguised hand, as follows:

"I owe the firm of——$——, which I stole and am anxious to pay. I hope to tell you of it, personally, some day. In the meantime I will mail you ten dollars a week, commencing the 1st of July, till paid; interest and principal $2,000. * * * Do not try to discover me. I send ten dollars now; if you accept, please advertise in the Herald 'Personals,' and sign yourself, X. Y. Z."

The merchant replied as requested. Every week from that date an envelope was received through the mail enclosing ten dollars, with no other writing but the number of the payment, until the two hundredth payment was received, with the following lines written in the same disguised hand:

"Two hundredth payment. I send ten dollars more; if you have got them all, please advertise in the Herald 'Personals.' If not, please advertise how many are lost, and I will send them."

The merchant replied:

"Two hundredth payment is received. All right. Come and see me, and your name shall be strictly confidential."

A few weeks after this a young man met this merchant on the sidewalk and handed him a copy of the New York Herald, pointing out the advertisement under the head of "Personals," and with a trembling voice, said:

"I am the person who wronged you while in your employ, and have been making my weekly payments to you until I have paid the debt, which I hope God has forgiven."

"Never was my surprise greater," said the merchant who communicated this fact, "than to stand before the individual who had for two hundred weeks, without fail, paid me out of his earnings the amount he had taken from me, and he one of whom I never had the least suspicion."

Such an instance of continued steadfastness of purpose and unostentation is evidence of true repentance and thorough reform.

Died.

In Petersburg, August 11th, Bro. ROLAND SHIPP, aged about forty-five years.

He was a member of Clinton Lodge No. 19, and was buried with Masonic ceremonies. The concourse was very large.

Bro. MARCUS WORCESTER, aged about fifty, Postmaster at Whitehall, recently died, much lamented.

R. E. Sir JOHN J. WORSHAM, Past Grand Commander of Templars in Tennessee, died August 1, at Duvall's Bluff, Arkansas, aged fifty-eight years.

Bro. JOSEPH M. HAYWARD, a member of Hopedale Lodge No. 622, died recently at Hopedale, in the prime of life, leaving a family and many relatives to mourn his untimely loss. The deceased had been, and we believe, was W. M. at the time of his decease.

We are grieved to record the death of an old correspondent, Bro. H. H. AVRON, Superintendent of the Sailors' Home, at Bombay, India, on the 30th June last. The deceased was an earnest, intelligent worker and teacher in several departments of Masonry.

P. G. M. CHARLES SCOTT, of Mississippi, was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, November 11, 1811, and died on the 31st day of May last.

Hon. DAVID LEITH, a member of the House of Representatives from Effingham county, and a member of Mason Lodge No. 217, died July 10th, aged fifty-four years. The deceased was also a member of Mason Chapter, and was beloved in life, and his death is lamented by all.

Bro. ROBERT M. RANKIN, a member of Mason Lodge No. 217, died at his residence, in Mason, Effingham county, June 20, aged fifty-one years. He emigrated from Lawrence county, Indiana, to Effingham county, in 1849. His death creates a serious void in the membership.

By a Milwaukee paper, which is mislaid, we learn that a married daughter of M. W. Bro. Melvin R. Youngs, P. G. M. of Wisconsin, recently died, if our recollection is correct, while on the lake with her husband. Our brother and his family have our warmest sympathies.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

Timely Warning.

We whisper good counsel in the ear of a brother, and, in the most tender manner, remind him of his faults and endoavor to aid his reformation.

Where is thy brother, Craftsman, say.
Where is the erring one to-day?
We look around the festive band—
What cheerful smiles on every hand!
The voice of laughter swells amain—
Where is the brightest of the train?
The ready wit, the generous word,
The glee in music's best accord,
The bounteous gifts—oh where is he,
The prince of Mason's revelry?
Not left unwarned in death to fall?
To lapse without one friendly call?

Alas, the grave has closed above
So many objects of our love!
There is so many a vacant chair
In every group where Masons are!
Of some the drunkard's cup doth tell;
Tempted, yet sorrowing they fell;
Day after day they saw the light
Recede, till day was turned to night;
Yet yearned and strove to pause, and stay
Their feet upon the slippery way;
They fell, and none so bright are left
As those of whom we are bereft.

A voice from out the grave demands—
"Where is thy brother? are thy hands
Quite guiltless of his priceless blood?
How oft have ye kindly stood,
And whispered loving word and prayer,
Within the erring brother's ear?
How often counseled, plead, and warned,
And from approaching danger turned?"
The thoughtful tear, the heavy sigh,
Must speak for conscience a reply:
Quick, then, oh Craftsmen, up and save
The living from untimely graves!

The Temple of Solomon.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW.

The second and last material habitation of Jehovah was the temple which Solomon, that great monarch, reared upon the hill Moriah in Jerusalem, to the honor of the God of Israel. The plan of it was dictated by the Spirit to his father, David, who was prohibited from executing it himself because of the bloody wars he had waged in the cause of his life. The workmen were partly Israelites and partly gentiles of Tyre. The materials were the best trees, the most precious metals and large hewn stones, prepared and fitted for one another before they were laid upon the foundation, that the noise of axes and hammers might not be heard as the building rose. The structure itself was sixty cubits long, twenty broad and thirty cubits high. Like the tabernacle it consisted of two apartments, the Holy and the Most Holy Place, or Oracle. You entered this temple on the east by a stately porch, which was higher than the edifice itself by ninety cubits and may be considered as the steeple of that sacred palace. The length of this porch was equal to the breadth of the principal house and the breadth was the half of the length. Here stood the two famous brazen pillars whose names were Jachin and Boaz, that is, stability and strength; though they were placed there, not for the support, but for the ornament of the house. Two open courts surrounded the whole fabric and side-chambers were built round about against the wall. A row of narrow windows that sloped within illuminated the dome.

The strength and beauty of God's sanctuary were the main things that distinguished this finished piece of architecture for the dimensions were far from being wide, but it was supported by a strong foundation of large and costly stones and ornamented within in the most splendid manner with planks of cedar, plates of gold, glittering diamonds and figures of palm trees and cherubims. This was that holy and beautiful house which the Chaldeans were permitted to demolish for the first time, and the Romans for the second time, a thousand years after the first foundation was laid. Seventeen hundred years have now elapsed since the final desolation of this solemn temple which never more shall rise beneath the builder's hand; for it is the will of God that in every place, and not in Jerusalem alone, He should be worshipped in spirit and in truth.

As the temple of Solomon was built for the same end with the tabernacle of Moses, so, without doubt, was the typical meaning of the one and the other also the same. Was the tabernacle a figure of heaven? So also was the temple. It was the figure of God's glorious habitation, where the angels serve him continually, like the priests that entered into the sanctuary. And as the stones which Solomon used were all hewn and prepared before they were brought there, so all the stones of the Celestial House—the members of the Triumphant Church—are beforehand prepared for glory. Now is the time, when their natural roughness and asperity is taken away by the skillful operation of the Divine Spirit and the various afflictions incident to this vale of tears, that they may rest forever and ever in the calm regions of everlasting peace where no jarring sound is heard any more than there was of axes and hammers in the building of the temple.

The plan of the temple was designed by God no less than that of the tabernacle. And the manner in which it was reared constitutes an expressive emblem of that peaceful harmony which ought to reign amongst the builders of the spiritual temple as they carry on this holy work and which would be easily attained if none but polished stones, or persons duly qualified, were admitted to become a part of the fabric. And the fact of the workmen being gentiles of Tyre, as well as Israelites, was a prelude of the future vocation of the sons of the strangers and those that were afar off, that they, too, should bear a part in building up the walls whose royal arch must ever bear the inscription of HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

The pillars that fronted the temple of Solomon did but ill answer their name. Where was their stability, where was their strength, when the Chaldeans carried them away? But though the pillars of heaven tremble the pillars of Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth shall stand, and thus the gracious promise comes to the lowliest workmen in the stupendous quarry: "Him that overcometh, I will make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out."

Reminicences by a Past Grand Lecturer.

THE THIRD ARTICLE.

I left Bro. Brown standing in the northeast corner, about to tell his own experience, as he said, in his own way but not in his own language, for the verses he was about to recite he had heard in a similar meeting some thirty years before.

It was at the time that Jeremy L. Cross was lecturing the lodges in New London, Norwich and vicinity.

There were not so many lodges in those days, yet every Mason was a Mason, and they followed Bro. Cross from lodge to lodge to learn the ritual from his lips and to enjoy the social reunions which formed one of the many pleasing features of his schools of instruction, for he was one of those old-time Freemason who knew how to conduct the hours of refreshment so that the "W. M. did have pleasure and the Craft profit thereby."

It was during this tour of Jeremy L. Cross, that Bro. Ansel Humphrey, the first Grand Lecturer and first Grand Master of Iowa received his work, under which, the first lodges in the State of Iowa were organized and Bro. Humphreys has ever been considered the best ritualist in that State. Some ten years ago, while spending a short time at Muscatine, I called to see this apostle of Masonry and found him, although advanced in years, hale and hearty, and as ready to rehearse the ritual and prove its origin as when I first met him years before; from his lips I obtained the early history of Masonry in that State and nearly filled my note book with rich matter that has been of great service to me. I did not see Bro. Humphrey again till I met him at the Grand Lodge of Iowa last spring (June, 1871).

And it rejoiced the hearts of many to see old Father Humphrey in the Grand East once more, and it may be, as he thinks, for the last time, and there was not a dry eye in Grand Lodge as Bro. Corkhill, the Grand Orator, referred to him and others as the founders of Masonry in Iowa, in the following beautiful eulogy:

> "In Iowa we have just reason to be proud of the men who have matured and built up our Institution. I speak it with feelings of honest pride and thankfulness. I have studied with some care and read with much interest the history of their early work and faithful labor for the Institution they loved so well. The first lodges organized remember well these fathers of ours. I am just at the threshold, while they are far beyond the inner temple. The most of us are just rising the declivity of the hill, while they are far down the other side. And when we shall follow Humphreys to his final resting place, and uncover at the grave of Hartsock, and McCleary shall receive the last sad rites of our Order, and Parvin shall be missed from that place he has so long and so honorably filled in this Grand Lodge, who will fill the places made vacant?
> "'Search not for those a separate doom,
> Whom fate made brothers in the tomb;
> But search the land of living men—
> Where shall we find their like again?'"

But you remind me that that brother yet stands in the northeast corner! Yes; I had almost forgotten it; but do you know that I have sometimes thought that some Masons would stand in the northeast corner longer than they do, or else remember better the great and important lessons they were there taught?

What an important period in the history of a man is that when, after being made a Mason, he is about to receive that solemn charge and those first instructions on which to build his future moral and Masonic character; from that time henceforth he is to be an upright man and Mason and never to forget the duties he owes to God, his country, his neighbor or himself: "To God, in never mentioning his name but with that reverential awe which is due from the creature to the Creator; to his country, by discountenancing disloyalty or rebellion, patiently submitting to legal authority and conforming with cheerfulness to the government of the country in which he lives; to his neighbor, in acting upon the square, doing by him as he wishes to be done by; avoiding all irregularities and intemperance that might impair his faculties or debase the dignity of his profession." Yes, did we heed the lessons of the northeast corner and carry them out in our every-day walk and conversation how much misery might be spared, how much peace might we not restore to the troubled mind, how much distress might we not relieve!

And this puts me in mind of a northeast corner story told by Bro. Rosmir, and, as it will take but a little while to tell it as it was told to me, I beg that you will allow this small digression.

THE STORY OF THE NORTHEAST CORNER.

It occurred—no matter where—and happened—no matter when; the parties concerned in it were—no matter who, it is enough to know that the story is true. Breth. Joseph and George, both members of Cerulean Lodge, had a quarrel. It originated as the first quarrel did and as the last quarrel will—among the women. Sister George had had a "falling out" with Sister Joseph; their children took sides in it; the boys fought each other; the girls slandered each other and took different benches at school; nephews and nieces, uncles and cousins, on both sides, assumed parts in the game. Old man Hoke shot old man Slimy's hog because Slimy worked for George while Hoke worked for Joseph. The thing was carried into church and the whole "George" faction withdrew their membership because it was conjectured that the preacher's wife favored the "Josephs" more than she did them. The two newspapers in the village took sides in the quarrel with vivacity, the "Shugarce" being a "Joseph" organ while the "Weekly Scorpion" went it blind for "George." Oh! it was a beautiful quarrel all around and promised to last until the final "three knocks" should call up the dead.

I needn't dwell on it further; every village has a set of quarrels of its own quite as interesting in details and as pleasant to contemplate as the story I am telling; the only consideration before us is, how was it settled?

In this way: Deacon Amo, a lovely man in private and public life and a member of Cerulean Lodge, went first to Bro. George and laid before him the terrible evils connected with this quarrel. Then he went to Bro. Joseph and did the same thing. Each admitted the evils but was hopeless of the remedy. Each could perceive the mote in his brother's eye, but not a trace of the beam that stuck so prominently out of his own. Each was of the opinion "that it made no particular difference to him how the thing comes out, if the other one could stand it he could," etc., etc. That's the way men always talk when they know they are wrong.

Bro. Amo—a remarkably appropriate name, a body would think it was made on purpose to fit the man, he was so lovely—then took Bro. Joseph up on a promise to meet him next day in the lodge-room at ten o'clock. Now Cerulean Lodge has by some degrees the darkest lodge-room I ever was in; it is the only one I ever saw where spiders can't make a living; I carry an honorable scar on my knee made by falling over a spit-box in that room in the broad blaze of day. And when the two brothers met by appointment in the Tyler's room they felt their way in like a pair of blind men; however, Amo managed to find the Treasurer's desk and there the two took their seats. Didn't Amo lay down the law then (the law of love) to his Christian friend? Didn't he remind him that he was sitting in the northeast corner, and call up "those first instructions" communicated there? Didn't he recite somebody's lines in "the Northeast Corner" and continue till he had worked the good brother into a malleable condition? He did!

Just then a knock was heard at the door and the Deacon answered it. He came in leading somebody by the hand, but talking so fast that the somebody couldn't edge in a word. He led the somebody to the Treasurer's desk and remarked "there's another good brother here." The two good brothers shook hands without the least intimation who the other was, while Amo talked on as if he had the "Cacœthes Loquendi" the worst way. He seated the two good brothers side by side and remarking, "I was just giving a little lecture on an important piece of symbolism," he resumed his subject. How Amo did talk! Every pathetic idea conveyed in the Masonic ceremonies, covenants and emblems was brought up. He got the two good brothers to weeping and they lent each other a handkerchief, they borrowed each other's tobacco, they shook each other's hands repeatedly without the ghost of an idea what they were doing. And when the Deacon suddenly lighted a little lantern he had in his pocket and Joseph saw that it was George whose tobacco was in his mouth and George saw it was Joseph whose handkerchief he had been blubbering in they just knocked under without a word, they were sold at the lowest market rate, they embraced each other like good fellows, as they were and all three walked out of the lodge-room as happy as the three Fellow Crafts when they had received their pardon!

Well, I have got to the end of my sheet and have not got in that piece of poetry, but will try and do better the next time. T.

Selected Poetry.

Ridiculous Story of Mrs. Byrde.

[A friend, and one of the most distinguished Masonic writers in this country, communicated to us the following jeu d'esprit, but without vouching for it as strictly true.—Ed. Masonic Jewel.]

The funniest story I ever heard,
The funniest thing that ever occurred,
Is the story of Mrs. Mehitable Byrde,
Who wanted to be a Mason.

Her husband, Tom Byrde, is a Mason true,
As good a Mason as any of you;
He is Tyler of Lodge Cerulean Blue,
And tyles and delivers the summons due,
And she wanted to be a Mason, too;
This ridiculous Mrs. Byrde.

She followed him 'round, this inquisitive wife,
And nagged him and teased him half out of his life.
So, to terminate this unhallowed strife,
He consented, at last, to admit her.
And first, to disguise her from bonnet to shoon,
The ridiculous lady agreed to put on
His breech—ah! forgive me; I meant pantaloons:
And miraculously did they fit her.
The lodge was at work on the Master's degree,
The light was ablaze in the letter G;
High soared the pillars J. and B.
The officers sat like Solomon, wise,
The brimstone burned midst horrid cries;
The goat roamed wildly through the room,
The candidate begged 'em to let him go home;
And the devil himself stood up in the East
As proud as an alderman at a feast;
When in came Mrs. Byrde.

Oh, horrible sounds! Oh, horrible sight!
Can it be that Masons take delight
In spending thus the hours of night?
Ah! could their wives and daughters know
The unutterable things they say and do,
Their feminine hearts would burst with woe;
But this is not all my story.
For those Masons joined in a hideous ring,
The candidate howling like everything,
And thus in tones of death they sing—
The candidate's name was Morey—
"Blood to drink and bones to crack,
Skulls to smash and lives to take,
Hearts to crush and souls to burn;
Give old Morey another turn,
And make him all grim and gory."

Trembling with horror stood Mrs. Byrde,
Unable to speak a single word;
She staggered, and fell, in the nearest chair
On the left of the Junior Warden there,
And scarcely noticed, so loud the groans;
That chair was made of human bones!

Of human bones! on grinning skulls
That ghastly throne of horror rolls,
Those skulls, the skulls that Morgan bore,
Those bones, the bones that Morgan wore;
His scalp across the top was flung,
His teeth around the arms were strung—
Never in all romance was known
Such usage made of human bone.

The brimstone gleamed in lurid flame
Just like a place we will not name;
Good angels, that inquiring came,
From blissful courts looked on with shame
And tearful melancholy.
Again they dance, but twice as bad,
They jump and sing like demons mad,
The tune is Hunkey Dorey—
"Blood to drink, &c., &c."

Then came a pause—a pair of paws
Reached through the floor, up-sliding doors,
And grabbed the unhappy candidate.
How can I, without tears, relate
The lost and ruined Morey's fate?
She saw him sink in a fiery hole,
She heard him scream "my soul! my soul!"
While roars of fiendish laughter roll
And drown the yells of Morey;
"Blood to drink, &c., &c."

The ridiculous woman could stand no more,
She fainted, and fell on the checkered floor
'Midst all the diabolical roar.

What then, you ask me, did befall
Mehitable Byrde? Why, nothing at all!
She dreamed that she'd been in the Masons' hall.

The Knight Templar, His Mission and its Modern Objects.

And now I come to one of the saddest chapters in history—that which records the oppression and final suppression of this noble Order, and the tragic drama that brought it to a close. The facts are few and simple, and have been thus briefly summarized from Raynouard[*]; Von Hammer[†]; Verton[‡]; and Wilcke[§]. When the Knights left Jerusalem (1291), they established their Grand Priory in the Island of Cyprus. There the Grand Master resided, with a host ever ready for warfare against the Saracen. James Bernard Molay, of Burgundy, when Grand Master (1294), began an intellectual regeneration of the Order, which drew upon him and it the suspicions of the secular clergy and the jealousy of princes. In the quarrels between Philip the Fair and Pope Boniface VIII. the Order took part against the King. In consequence of this, Clement V., Philip's friend, under the pretext of consultations for a new crusade and for a union of the Templars with the Knights of Saint John, summoned (1306), the Grand Master Molay, with sixty Knights, to France. After their arrival, these and all the other Knights were suddenly arrested, October 13, 1307 by the King's soldiers. Philip seized upon the estates of the Order, removed his court into the temple (the residence of the Grand Master in Paris), and ordered the trial of the Knights to be commenced without delay, by his confessor, William of Paris, inquisitor, and Archbishop of Sens. He endeavoured to justify this arbitrary procedure by horrible crimes and heresies of which the Order had been accused. Historical records represent the accusers as some expelled Templars who calumniated the Order at the instigation of its enemies.

The charge of apostacy from the Catholic faith could not be substantiated. The other allegations, such as that they worshipped the devil, practised sorcery, adored Baphomea, condemned the sacrament, neglected confession and practised unnatural vices, were, according to the general opinion of historians, down to the present day, malicious representations or absurd calumnies.

By means of the most horrid tortures confessions of crimes which had never been committed were extorted from the prisoners. Overcome by long captivity and torment, many Templars confessed whatever their inquisitors wished, since a persevering denial of the crimes with which they were charged was punished with death. Clement V. at first opposed this arbitrary treatment of an order which was amenable only to the church, but Philip soon prevailed on him to join in its suppression. Two Cardinals were sent to take part in the examinations at Paris, and other clergymen were united to the courts of inquisition in the province, in order to impart a more legal appearance to the procedure. Though little was in fact proved against the Templars, the Archbishop of Sens, dared, in 1310, to burn alive fifty-four knights, who had denied every crime of which they were accused. Charles of Sicily and Provence imitated the example of Philip and shared the booty with the Pope. In England, Spain, Portugal, Italy and Germany, the Templars were arrested, but almost universally acquitted. The inquisitions at Salamanca and at Mentz (1310), also resulted in the justification of the Order. Nevertheless, the Pope, at the council of Vienne, in Dauphiny, solemnly abolished the Order by a bull of March 2, 1312, not in the legal way, but by papal authority (per provisionis potius quam condemnationis vium.)

The members of the Order, according to this bull, were to be punished with mildness, when they confessed the crimes imputed to them, but those who persevered in denying them were to be condemned to death. Among the latter were the Grand Master, Molay, and Guido, the Grand Prior of Normandy, who were burnt alive at Paris, March 13, 1314, after they had cited, according to tradition, Philip and Clement to appear before the judgment-seat of God within a year. The pope in fact, died April 19, in the same year, and the king November 29.

Between the brilliant past of the Soldiers of the Cross and the Masonic degree of the Knight Templar, lies an admirable subject for historical investigation. Although in possession of some valuable material. I will leave to M. E. Past Prior Wilson, or other learned members of the Priory, the duty of enlightening us on this section of the subject hereafter.

From remarks previously made, it will be noticed that Scotland never persecuted the great Military Brotherhood; and, hence, it has happened that Scotland justly claims the high honour of preserving and perpetuating this peculiar association. A new phase of civilization has dispelled much of the illusive surroundings of the Mediæval Knight, and favorably concurring circumstances have brought the Order within the protective circle of Freemasonry. What then is the mission—or rather what are the complex duties and functions—of the Knight Templar at the present day? They may be briefly recapitulated under six heads. Firstly, our association helps to complete the cycle of Masonic mysteries; secondly, its very existence is the vindication of a great historical fact; thirdly, we aim at a higher chivalry than did our ancient brethren; fourthly, we have an intellectual Islamism to resist; fifthly, we have a most hallowed temple to protect; and, lastly, our travail as Templars, through the arduous duties of life, will enable us to win the crown of immortality. I invite you to a few minutes' consideration of each point.

1.—Freemasonry, or (to use a popular expression) Blue Masonry, is a sublime deism, based on a recognition of the immortality of the Soul and the individual responsibility of every creature to his Creator. Jew and Gentile, Mohammedan and Parsee, all who acknowledge and adore the Great Architect of the Universe, can range under its banner. This is its grand mission—to bring a multitude of antagonisms—such as variety of race, contrariety of religious opinion, and peculiarity of national habits—into harmony and good fellowship on its tessallated level pavement. But why should Masonry, if it is, as it is, said to be, a comprehensive theosophy and system of morals, be limited to this? Why should she not open in her mystic shrine a door leading to chambers where those, who are intellectually and conscientiously compelled to acknowledge a wider theology, may meet, commune and assist each other? Why should her allegorical formulæ be the exclusive possession of those who cannot, or will not, recognise a trinity in unity; We, Knights of the Temple, under Masonic auspices, have a grand mission to fulfil, in preserving and maintaining this privilege for all who believe in the unity and distinct personalty of the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit. Is there not, moreover, an intellectual symmetry in Masonry, thus raising a mystic shrine for the great divisions of spiritual worshippers—Arians (of every hue, including Gnostics) and Trinitarians?

2.—Our being thus associated in arms together—although the arms are now only symbolic—is in itself a historical vindication of the lives and actions of martyred heroes—of our brave Brethren, De Molay, Guido, and the thousands who innocently perished during the unchristian persecution of Christian soldiers. We are, by our union, a perpetual commemoration of their glorious death; and, therefore, a lasting protest against the double despotism—kingly and sacerdotal—which brought them to the scaffold, or lit their furneral pyre.

3.—We aim at a higher and purer chivalry than did the Knights of old.. St Paul in his most inspired moments had probably no prevision of such an institution as ours; and yet, in the sixth chapter of his Epistle to the Ephesians, he arrays the Christian soldier in a panoply more befitting us than the Templars of the middle age. Attend to the precise manner in which he bids us be spiritually armed:

"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armour of God, that you may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," —Ephesians vi., 10 to 17.

4.—With these weapons we are called upon to war—not against Saracens or Turkomans—but against the intellectual Islamism of the age—its materialism and rationalism. Covered with our armour of proof, the Word of God, we must, with the Sword of the Spirit smite it. Our duty forbids temporizing—forbids compromise—and also, forbids intolerance. The lecturer further showed how the spiritual weapons mentioned by St. Paul should be used against infidelity, quoting the words of the Apostle: "Keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so-called."—1 Tim. vi. 20.

5.—We have a temple not made with hands to guard—the shrine of an immortal spirit redeemed in Christ. That temple is the living body of every member of the Order, the Order itself as a whole, and suffering humanity whereever we find it. As Christians we are a kingly people, purchased at a great sacrifice, regenerated by a living grace and disenthralled from the powers of darkness by our Lord's triumph over death and hell; each one of us is, therefore, a temple of Christ, or the Holy Spirit which descended after Him on the earth. We must (as Templars) guard this temple's outer shell—the body—by acts of charity—by relief and all kindly service; and its inner shrine—the soul—by good advice and consolations. "Know ye not," to use the sublime language of the Apostle of the Gentiles, "that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

" For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."—1. Cor. vi, 19-20.

6.—The perpetuity of our obligation (from which we can never be released) and the solemn duty it imposes, enable us to consider our journey through life as men on a pilgrimage—to wend our way fearlessly even through the valley of the shadow of death, as the only sure route to the white gates of life—and to comfort and encourage one another by the silent eloquence of mutual good example. Who shall then dare to assert the modern Knight Templar is not in quest of a crown? Of the unfading laurel? Let him only persevere unto the end and he may be able to cry out, in humble confidence with Saint Paul, "Bonum certamen certavi, cursum consummavi, fidem servavi!"

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—II Tim. 7-8.

The Lecturer concluded by reading the stazas inscribed to Sir Knight Hopson, Past Prior:

THEN AND NOW.

What stirred the stalwart Knights of old,
And made them resolute and bold,
Well worthy of their spurs of gold.
Their plumed casques and falchions bright?
The triple virtues* fired their will
And moral duty to fulfil,
And bade them wield the sword with skill,
But always in and for the Right!

And need we not in these our days,
When Wrong is robed in courtly ways,
And Envy's shaft to pierce essays
The buckler of our fair renown,
With mobile tongue and keen-edged wit,
Repel the recreant, who would hit,
In cowardwise, our fame; and sit
Content, an' he could rend our crown?

We see in Vision's golden glow
What Birth and Beauty did bestow
On Chivalry; and well, I trow,
Were then Love's gifts and trophies won;
But now a craven spirit chills,
Or half congeals, the living rills
That fed the heart; and Meanness fills
Old Liberality's polluted throne!

Why can't we, in such tranceful hour,
With all its wealth of light and flower,
Catch resolution's priceless dower
And do as did the Knights of old?
'Twere worth the venture! Then I claim
All Swordsmen of the Shrine† should aim
At Honor's prize and Knightly fame,
And let illusions be dispelled!

The Grand Orient of France.

It is announced that the authorities of the Grand Orient of France have issued a circular to other grand Masonic bodies, with the view of removing an impression which widely prevails as to the participation of certain Parisian Masons, as such, in the revolutionary acts of the insurgent Communists. The Grand Orient denies that the attitude of the Masonic Fraternity in Paris during the recent troubles was at any time inconsistent with the teachings and traditions of the Order, and it is further averred that deviations from the neutral line prescribed by Masonic law have occurred amongst the lodges in Germany.

With respect to the latter assertion, we can only say that we hear it for the first time, and as no instances are quoted, or proofs set forth, we take the liberty of stigmatizing it as a most uncharitable surmise, unworthy serious consideration. But the denial by the French Masonic authorities of all complicity in the miserable doings of the Commune cannot be so lightly dismissed. Does the Grand Orient ignore the fact that ten thousand so-called Masons fraternized with the men of blood and planted their lodge banners on the ramparts of Paris? If these men were spurious Masons, owing no allegiance either to the Grand Orient or to the Supreme Grand Council of France, it merely proves that Freemasonry in France must be terribly effete to allow impostors to assume its symbols and degrade its name. But if, on the other hand, we take the more probable hypothesis, that the mountebanks who paraded their ribbons and jewels through Parisian streets were actually members of Masonic lodges working under the Grand Orient itself, or the Supreme Council, what becomes of the authoritative contradiction now given to the world? Are we to believe that not even ten regular Masons took part in the celebrated "demonstration" of which Henri Rochefort became the enthusiastic historian—that every man who wore an apron or carried a sword in the vast procession did so under false pretenses, usurping a title to which he had no just claim?

If this be the case the clandestine bodies of Masons in France must be far more numerous than the regular brethren, and the utmost caution should be exercised by English lodges, accordingly, before they admit a French brother. Ten thousand men marching as Masons, and identifying what they are pleased to term the "Masonic programme" with the theories of the Commune! and yet we are gravely told that the Masonic body kept aloof from the hideous politics of the time. We want further information as to those men, and why such a formidable host of soi-disant Masons should have been permitted to spring up side by side with the peace-loving adherents of the Grand Orient? Cannot even one man be identified as a quondam believer in the rue Cadet and the Napoleonic Grand Mastership? Who were the Freres Moniere and Terifocq, whose names were reported by Rochefort in his Mot d' Ordre as prominent Masonic orators on the day of the demonstration? We have a right to demand if, after all that has been said, these men turn out to be subjects of the Grand Orient, and consequently traitors to their Masonic vows, that signal and condign punishment shall be inflicted upon them. Let them be solemnly expelled—their names blotted out forever from the roll of the Craft, and only the record of their treason and their shame remain as a warning to future ages. The whole system of Continental Freemasonry must be purged and purified, and the dangerous practice of allowing political or religious discussions in the lodges must be at once and forever abolished. In this respect, not only French Masons, but many others, especially amongst the Latin races, have greviously erred. Dreams of social reforms and plots for organic political changes have alike been ventilated under the protecting shade of Masonry, and with the most demoralizing and destructive effect upon its fair fame and its hoped-for progress. We are glad to find that the heads of the Craft in Belgium have sternly enjoined the lodges under their jurisdiction no longer to countenance this baneful and unmasoni practice and we hope the Grand Orient of France will see the necessity of adopting a similar course.

Since we commenced this article we have received a copy of the Monde Maconnique, in which the text of the circular issued by the Grand Orient is given, and we are happy to notice that the statements made as to its contents in several journals are to some extent erroneous. Bro. Babaud Laribiere, the Grand Master, repudiates the action of the unworthy men who forgot the true principles of Freemasonry during the civil war; but the question still remains, as we have put it, Who were these men? and are they still acknowledged as Masons? Now that the attention of our French brethren is directed to the subject, we are satisfied that stringent measures will be adopted to prevent the recurrence of such a scandal, and in the reorganization of their system we trust they will not forget to prohibit the discussion of political or religious matters in all the lodges under the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient.—Freemason, London.

Cryptic Masonry.

Banquet to the American Brethren.

On Wednesday, 23d ult., a banquet was given at Bro. W. Young, the Albion, Vernon Place, to the representatives of the Cryptic Rites in America, who have lately visited England, at the solicitation of some eminent Freemasons to communicate the working of Cryptic Masonry. Comp. F. Binckes, Grand Recorder, occupied the chair, and Comp. Captain Philips, 33°, the vice-chair. The guests of the evening were Comps. Jackson, H. Chase, 33°, and Col. Thompson, who sat respectively on the right and left of the Chairman.

The Chairman, in proposing the "Health of Comps. Chase and Thompson," said that Comp. Martin, the other distinguished American brother, was unable to be present. The companions had come across the broad Atlantic for the purpose of communicating to English Masons a further knowledge of Masonry. Those brethren would, however, acknowledge that they originally received from the mother country, among other blessings, the light of Freemasonry and they had extended it. The recognized Masonic system, under our Grand Lodge, was of a very restricted character and Freemasons, who much honored, studied, supported, followed and appreciated that system, felt themselves compelled for the purpose of keeping alive a knowledge of the higher and unrecognized degrees, to organize various bodies to disseminate it. The guests of the evening had come immediately they were asked to spread a knowledge of those degrees, every one of which was connected with the universal system. Whether under the title of Cryptic or Capitular Masonry, it was all a part of that catholic whole of which Grand Lodge professed itself to be so ardent an admirer. The American brethren who had come here to indoctrinate us in the superior knowledge of the mysteries of the Order were noble representatives of the large body of American Freemasons, and we hailed them with a great deal of pleasure. We extended our welcome to them as brother Masons, and also as charged with a special mission. For the patience they had exhibited, for the attention they had given, for the courtesies they extended and for the manner in which they had shown that they were prepared to answer all the demands upon them to afford us instruction, the most sincere thanks were due, for they could not be excelled even if they could be equalled.

Comp. Chase, in reply, said it was with hearts filled with gratitude he and his brethren thanked the English Freemasons for their cordial welcome. America, as the Chairman had remarked, owed its Masonry to England, and he was proud to acknowledge it. In 1765 she first received it and she had improved the occasion and extended it all over her vast continent. With regard to the visit he and his brethren had paid to this country, he could only say they were called upon very suddenly to repair to England, and in one week, though he was 200 miles from home at the time, he and his two brethren, Col. Thompson and Captain Martin, were on their way. They were glad of the opportunity of showing their readiness to exemplify the degrees, of which they possessed a knowledge, and they were still more pleased to find how acceptable was that knowledge to their English brethren.

Col. Thompson also replied, though, he said, before he came away from home he had entered into a compact with Bro. Chase that he should do all the speaking. He returned thanks very warmly for the kindness and courtesy he had received since he had been in this country.

Capt. Philips responded to the toast of "The Vice-Chairman," and afterwards proposed "The Health of the Chairman," to which Comp. Binckes replied, and the company shortly afterwards separated.—Magazine, London.

GRANDFATHER Graybeard's Storer articles are going the rounds.

Death of M. W. Grand Master, T. J. H. Anderson.

It becomes our solemn and painful duty to announce the death of the Most Worshipful Grand Master of Texas, T. J. H. Anderson, of Port Sullivan.

Our worthy brother had been in poor health ever since the session of the Grand Lodge here in June last. On his return home he continued to suffer to such a degree that he felt too unwell to attend to his official and private business, but was not confined to his bed. About two weeks ago, or more, he came to this city and took lodgings at the Hutchins House, and was taken down quite ill with a disease which has prevailed in this section of the country, called "black jaundice."

Two or three of our city physicians were called in, but as he continued to grow worse, his family, and Dr. Ghent, his family physician, were sent for. The disease, however, progressed too far to be brought under the control of remedies employed and he continued to grow worse until Tuesday last, at half-past one in the afternoon, when he breathed his last.

We visited our worthy Grand Master in his late illness, and was gratified to find, that though he was perfectly aware of the near approach of death, he was calm and self-possessed and his mind strongly inclined to seek an interest in the saving efficacy of Divine grace and mercy.

Rev. Bro. Zealy, who was more frequently with him, gives us assurances that in his last moments he received strong evidences of his acceptance with God and a gracious fitness for a better world.

All who have had the honor of a personal acquaintance with Bro. Anderson will unite with us in bearing testimony to the fact that he was one of the most pure and spotless men that has ever adorned the walks of social life and a perfect ornament to the Ancient and Honorable Order in which he took peculiar pleasure.—Family Visitor, Texas.

Charlotte and her Gown.

Many years ago, in the village of Troy, there were only five Freemasons, the village curate, a tailor, a cobbler and a carpenter. The latter, being desirous to introduce his son to the same mystery, who was of lawful age, caused a lodge to be called for that purpose at a lonely building, where the ceremonies were proceeding, when a knock was heard at the door. The carpenter, whose name was Russell, went to the door to see who it was, and found an old woman named Charlotte Peck, who addressed him as follows:

"Do the Masons meet here to-night?"

"Yes."

"Well, can you get my gown which was stolen last night?"

"Why, Lot,"—the old woman was known as Lot Peck—"what business has your gown with our meeting?"

"O, you know you'll be raising the devil here to-night, and I would just like if you would ask him, as you will have him with you, at any rate—who stole my gown."

"O, all right, Lot; you go direct home, and we will see what we can do."

Mr. Russell then closed the door and returned to the interior of the cottage, the room where the rest of the Masons were, and mentioned what had passed between him and the old woman. The curate rebuked him sharply for conceding to the superstitious notions of the old crone, and said "he feared it would end in trouble." "No fear of that," answered the carpenter, "just leave it all to me." The next day "Lot Peek" called upon Mr. Russell; he informed her that the devil would not directly tell him the name of the thief, but had stated that if the gown was not returned to her before one week, the house the guilty party lived in would fall upon him in the night time, and all in the house would be killed. "This," said he, "is a great secret, and you must not communicate it to more than one person." Lot left Mr. Russell perfectly contented, as it never occurred to her that the prediction of punishment to a thief was not exactly a characteristic piece of conduct on the part of Old Nick. The secret was imparted to another old gossip of the village, her nearest neighbor—before Lot returned home—with all the many injunctions as to the necessity of letting it go no further, notwithstanding which, it was told secretly to the whole village before night. The next morning each one was silently, cautiously and fearingly strolling through the village, gazing at each other's houses. On the second morning, Lot Peek found her gown lying at her door.

This story, in two respects, illustrates the superstitions which then prevailed among the rustic people of this country. If a gown was now stolen in a country village the loser would not think of consulting the devil through the Freemasons for the name of the culprit, nor would the thief be much in fear of any vengeance from the "old horned gentleman."—New York Era.

True Brotherhood.

In the cemetery at Nashville, Tennessee, a stranger was seen planting a flower over a soldier's grave. When asked: "Was your son buried there?" "No," was the answer. "Your son-in-law?" "No." "A brother?" "No." "A relative?" "No."

After a moment's pause the stranger laid down a small board which he held in his hand, and said:

"Well, I will tell you. When the war broke out I was a farmer in Illinois. I wanted to enlist, but I was poor. I had a wife and seven children. I was drafted. I had no money to hire a substitute, so I made up my mind that I must leave my poor sickly wife and little children and go and fight the enemy. After I had got all ready to go a young man whom I knew came to me and said: 'You have a big family which your wife cannot take care of. I will go for you.' He did go in my place and in the battle of Chickamauga he was wounded and taken to Nashville hospital. But after a long sickness he died and was buried here and ever since I have wished to come to Nashville and see his grave, so I saved up all the spare money I could, and yesterday I came on, and to-day I found my dear friend's grave."

With tears of gratitude running down his cheeks he took up the small board and pressed it into the ground in the place of a tombstone. Under the soldiers's name were written only these words: "He died for me."

Freemasons in Rhode Island.

From the report of the proceedings of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge for the year ending May 15th, 1871, we learn that there are twenty-five subordinate lodges of this jurisdiction, having a membership of three thousand six hundred and twenty one. In Providence there are four Lodges, with an aggregate of twelve hundred and fourteen members. In Newport there is but one lodge, St. John's, established December 27th, 1749, which has a membership of two hundred and forty nine. This is the oldest lodge in the State.—Repository.

A Good Word not Lost.

Field-Marshal Alexander Suvaroff, the Commander-in-Chief of the Russian army during the reign of Catherine II. and Paul I., was especially fond of mixing with the common soldiers, and sharing in their sports and conversations, being always highly delighted when his men failed to discover him; and this happened pretty often, for, thanks to his small stature and ugly face, as well as the extreme plainness of his dress, the great Marshal looked as little like a general as any man could do. In this way he got to understand thoroughly the character of his soldiers, and had a greater power over them than any Russian general before or after him. His marvelous power of enduring fatigue, his insensibility to heat, cold or hunger, and his untiring energy on the field of battle (in all which points he surpassed the hardiest of his grenadiers), made him the idol of the rough soldiers whom he commanded; and a word of reproof from Father Alexander Vasilievitch, as his men affectionately called him, was more dreaded than the fire of a battery.

Before one of his Italian campaigns, Suvaroff gathered together a number of his best men, and made them one of the short, pithy speeches for which he was famous, and some of which are remembered among the peasantry to this day:

"My children, we are going to fight the French. Remember, whatever you meet, you must go forward. If the enemy resist, kill them; but if they yield, spare them; and always remember that a Russian soldier is not a robber, but a Christian. Now, go and tell your comrades what I have said!"

A few days later a great battle took place, in which the day went against the French, who began to retreat about sunset; and a soldier named Ivan Mitrophanoff, who had distinguished himself by his bravery throughout the whole day, captured, with the help of a comrade who was with him, a French officer and two of his men. Mitrophanoff bound up the officer's wounded arm, and seeing that the prisoners appeared faint from want of food, shared with them the coarse rye loaf which was to have served him for supper. He had scarcely done so when up came three or four Russian grenadiers, hot with fighting and raising furious cries.

"What," cried they, "three of these French dogs living yet!" and they ran upon the prisoners with levelled bayonets.

"Hold, my lads!" cried Mitrophanoff. "I've given them their lives, and no one must touch them now!"

But the soldiers would not listen to him, and were rushing forward, when a stern voice from behind shouted, "Halt!" and a little pug-nosed, dirty-faced man, dressed only in a coarse linen shirt and a pair of tattered trousers, stepped into the circle. But, ragged and dirty as he was, the fierce soldiers could not have looked more frightened had he been a giant in full armor.

"The General!" muttered they, slinking off.

"Ay, the General!" roared Suvaroff, "who will have some of you shot presently, if you can't learn to obey orders better! And you," he added, turning to Mitrophanoff, "who taught you to be so good?"

"Your Highness' own self taught me," answered the grenadier. "I haven't forgotten what you told us last week—that a Russian soldier is not a robber, but a Christian!"

"Right!" exclaimed Suvaroff, with a brightening face. "A good word is never lost, you see. Give me your hand, my lad; you shall be a sergeant to-morrow, and a right good one you will make!"

And the next day he made good his word.—Merry's Museum.

Conversations About Health—Fifth Paper.

BY A DOCTOR.

Much valuable information on all practical subjects is obtained by "gleaning," in other words, by picking up and collating the thousands of useful scraps of conversation and observations. I propose to give the readers of Home and Health one of these useful scraps.

A few days ago I was walking along one of the crowded streets of New York City in company with Mr. S. W. Davis, now and for several years past an employe in the bindery of the Methodist Book Concern in that city, formerly a well known book merchant in Cincinnati. It was at an early morning hour, but not too early for the opening of the liquor stores which were every where in view. Presently a well dressed man of over fifty reeled by us in a state of thorough intoxication.

"That man has had his drinks very early," I said.

"Truly," said Mr. Davis, "and I have also had mine."

"Sure!"

"For more than half a century I have taken a drink the first thing every morning to steady my nerves."

Not believing that he was a drinker of intoxicating liquors, I asked, "Do you mean that you drink tea the first thing every morning?"

"I mean," he responded, "that I drink the first thing after rising each morning a full pint of pure water."

"Mr. Davis, allow me to enquire your age."

"I am a little over seventy-eight."

"Indeed! You do not look to be over fifty-five! Tell me something of the modes of life by which you have retained such apparent youthful manhood in your advanced age."

"The story is soon told. I have studied nature, and have practiced some of the useful lessons which she has taught me."

"How?"

"Do you inquire specifically about my drinking?"

"I do."

"Well, about fifty-five years ago I spent some time in the forest, secluding myself meanwhile from the walks of society. My purpose was to learn what I could by the most careful and undisturbed observation of nature. Among other things I noted the eating and drinking habits of non-domesticated or forest animals around me. I saw that they drank copiously the first thing each morning, and as I saw it I said, "This is one of Nature's lessons for me."

"Was this true of all the animals?"

"It was."

"Were the birds included?"

"They were; there was no exceptions. My examinations were long continued and most thorough. The lesson was certain and powerful. I did not forget it."

"And you have in your own person followed this rule ever since?"

"I have."

"And you ascribe your remarkable health and physical buoyancy to this?"

"To this and other things connected with it. Are you aware that the free forest animals never suffer from rheumatism?"

"I had not thought to make it a matter of particular inquiry."

"Well they do not; and if we would more closely follow their habits I think we would suffer less from it."

"Do you not, Mr. Davis, suffer at times from rheumatism?"

"Not to speak of; I think I have learned how to avoid it. Drinking at wrong times, and eating to excess has much to do in causing rheumatism. First the liver is deranged, then the other follows. We should take care to keep the liver right."

"You have mentioned your drinking the first thing in the morning; what do you drink afterward?"

"I drink nothing but water except at supper, when I drink tea."

"Strong or weak?"

"Moderately weak. At noon I drink before eating another full pint of water. Just before retiring at night I drink a half-pint of water."

"Do you drink at meals?"

"Moderately; nothing but water except as already stated."

"Do you avoid drinking between meals?"

"Not entirely; though I think it not best to drink often."

"Are you careful about your food?"

"I am, eating only plain food. I eat some meat, but prefer vegetable food, which I have thoroughly cooked."

"Do you use much fruit?"

"All I can make away with; that is, in its season. Ripe fruit is always healthful."

"Tomatoes?"

"Certainly. I know from the most careful observation that they are among the most healthful food articles we can use in their season."

"What of pastry?"

"I do not eat any of it once a month. I think, Doctor, it ought to be avoided. My observation teaches me that the great trouble with most people is that they eat too rich food, and a great deal too much of it."

"I agree with you, Mr. Davis; but do you not use tobacco."

"Tobacco! Not in any form. I did use it once, but for many years I have not allowed it to touch my lips or nostrils."

At this point in the conversation we separated, my friend Davis to enter upon his duties for the day, and the writer to wend his way to his own office in another part of the city.—Home and Health.

HOW A WOMAN KEEPS A SECRET.—It is an old quip upon women, that a woman cannot keep a secret, but the fact is they are the only part of humanity that can. A wife keeps a husband's secrets incomparably better than he does her's. We calculate that there is one drunken wife to about four hundred and ninety-nine drunken husbands. In gambling, licentiousness, lying, cheating, hypocrisy, covetousness, there is pretty near the same proportion. Yet the four hundred conceal, cover up, silently endure the terrible secret; while the one husband mourns over his wife's frailty in the study of his pastor and to the ear of his friend, and probably complains of it to a court of law. It is the same between brother and sister. The secrets a woman talks about are of the kind that are unimportant and most agreeable to hear. But of serious secrets she is as reticent as the grave. That is our observation, and in our various relations of physician, lawyer, unordained minister, we have had opportunities for a great deal of observation.—Baltimore Church Advocate.

THE RAVEN, THE CUCKOO AND THE HEN.—A raven was crossing a field and saw a cuckoo preparing a soft bed behind a shady bush. That seemed very odd to him; so he crept nearer and asked the cuckoo what he was making there.

"A bed, as you see," the cuckoo answered, shortly.

"A bed, for what?" the raven kept on inquiring. "You are not going to lie on the ground? As far as I know, you usually rest in a hollow tree."

"It is not for myself," replied the cuckoo, "but for that poor, sick hen, there, you see behind the bushes. See that poor creature," he continued, weeping, "she fills my soul with pity; she has not been well for a long time."

"Really, an odd kind of neighborly love. I could never, in the least, have expected that of you," the raven cried in an ecstacy; and the bright tears floated down his black raven cheeks, at the thought of this noble deed.

"Yes," the cuckoo continued, in a whining tone, "this good hen laid me, early every day, an egg; upon that I have hitherto lived, when I could get at nothing else, and how miserable I should be if she should die! I must perish. Yes, must starve in these famine times."

"Aha, so! It is not precisely for the poor sick hen, but for the eggs you make the nest," croaked the raven, as, quickly drying her tears, she flew away.—Work and Play.

THE MASONIC TROWEL.—We experienced much pleasure in again seeing this journal; and notwithstanding the ruinous loss that M. W. Bro. H. G. Reynolds has sustained by the total destruction of all his property, our venerable brother has not lost any of his noble spirit in the cause of the Order, in which he has unceasingly labored for so many years. Our warmest sympathies are with our distinguished brother, and we will be very happy to assist him in reconstructing his library by forwarding a complete set of the Masonic Record from the commencement to the present date.—Masonic Record of Western India.

Harman,

Our second son, formerly publisher of THE TROWEL, is now in the neighborhood of Hearne, Texas, where he has a contract to build a portion of the International Railroad, under the supervision of his uncle Elisha, of Rock Island.

From a recent letter we take the following:

"My partner is a young man and a Mason, from Syracuse, New York. He superintends the work. His name is James Kerwin. His lodge is in Portsmouth, Michigan. I keep the accounts, pay off the hands and do all the riding to Hearne and Port Sullivan and around the country. I have a little mustang pony to ride on. I am out six or eight hours a day on horse back, getting tools, provision and hands. I go to Hearne three or four times a week. We live very comfortably here. Have a colored woman to cook for Jim and I. She is very clean, neat and quiet, and was formerly a house servant for Mr. Anderson's family. This plantation belonged to Mr. Thomas J. H. Anderson, the recently deceased Grand Master of Texas. He leaves a widow and seven young and very intelligent handsome children. I had charge of them from Hearne to Houston, while they were going down to see their father who was sick at the Hutchins House, in Houston. His wife had gone on ahead. I did not see Bro. Anderson, as he was then very low and no visitors were admitted to his room, but I saw Bro. Bringhurst and he told me all about his condition. Bro. Anderson was one of the wealthiest men in Texas. He was a very quiet, unassuming, accomplished gentleman, about forty years old, an earnest member of the Baptist Church, and when dying expressed his perfect willingness to die, and was buried with Masonic honors by his own request. The funeral was very large. Masons came in whole lodges from Galveston, Houston and other railroad stations, and many came from the country, on ponies, fifty or seventy-five miles. It was a strange sight in that sleepy little old town of Port Sullivan, under the balmy sun of Texas and within sight and hearing of the grand and beautiful but tumultuous and roaring Brazos River, to see gathered together for a common purpose the men from the cities and the bronzed and bearded Masons from the woods and prairies, and many a regret was uttered for the good and quiet, but well known gentleman and brother who had gone to the better land."

EVERY hour that a child lives a quiet, tranquil, joyous life, of such sort as kittens live on hearths, squirrels in sunshine, is just so much investment in strength and steadiness and growth of the nervous system. Every hour that a child lives a life of excited brain-working, either in a school room or in a ball room, is just so much taken away from the reserved force which enables nerves to triumph through the sorrows, through the labors, through the diseases of later life. —Kentucky Freemason.

Opening, Working and Closing a Lodge.

The old charges say that in a lodge opened, the brethren are to have no private committees, or separate conversation without leave of the Master; that they are to utter nothing unseemly; that they are not to interrupt the Master or Warden, or any brother while speaking, nor to speak or act ludicrously or jestingly while the lodge is engaged in what is serious or solemn, and that no unbecoming language whatever is to be used.

A lodge room, in all that pertains to respect or reverence for Deity, or to the moral law or social code, should be as sacred as a church. It should be a place in reality dedicated to the service of God, and, while nothing of innocent mirth or playful familiarity is to be excluded, nothing contrary to divine teachings, violation of the code of morals, or offensive to good breeding should be admitted upon the floor of a lodge room. By good breeding we do not mean the rule of uppertendom, or the artificial conduct required in different circles, but that innate sense of propriety, which prompts even the uneducated and untaught man, to render to others what he desires for himself.

We do not care to say here what we have seen and heard upon the floor of a lodge soom, but this we do say emphatically, that any brother who will so far forget his solemn covenants and teaching as to act or appear unbecomingly upon the floor of a lodge room, is very likely to so act and appear everywhere else!

The room itself should be regarded sacred, because a lodge is erected to God, who inhabits the room. Having been erected to God, he is supposed to reside therein. When the brethren assemble, before a lodge is formed, freedom, politeness and friendly recognition should prevail; but, upon the sound of the gavel, every brother clothed, should decorously repair to his seat or station. Every brother ought to be able to fill any station in opening or closing, unless we may except those of Master or Secretary. But especially is it the duty, as it should be the pride, of every officer to know his part and be able to perform his duty with honor to the Master and creditably to himself. We find lodges very much lacking and lame in this, by which brethren become wearied and impatient, disgusted and ashamed, and cease to attend. Let the opening ceremonies be effectively and impressively rendered, the business transacted methodically, and the lodge closed in good time, and there will not only be attendance, but attention and interest.

The lodge room should be that place, and the lodge, itself the school of good manners. No man should be made a Mason, unless he is by nature a gentleman; one who respects himself and others; one thoughtful in his acts and expressions, and chary in his choice of words. We find, too, that in opening a lodge, one great lesson is disregarded. We are taught that "no man should ever enter upon any great or important duty, without first invoking the blessing of Deity." And yet many lodges are pretended to be opened without even the semblance of prayer. In Mackey's 7th point of opening, he lays this duty down as indispensable, and many hold that a lodge is not masonically opened until the blessing of Deity is invoked.

After the opening ceremonies, the first business is the reading of the record. This should in no wise be omitted at a regular communication, and should be read from the record book itself. Indeed, were we Master of a lodge, we would not open a lodge until the record (not the minutes) was made up, unless it should be impracticable. A lodge should be a lodge in its ceremonies, in its work, in its business, in its manners and in its records.

We shall make this article too tedious if we stop now to comment upon the work. What we have said of opening is true of closing, only the ceremonies may be more brief and rapid, preserving decorum and solemnity.

Unless the hour be late, the brethren should not be in haste to disperse, but should indulge in friendly conversation upon what concerns them, their business, their prospects, their families, the good of Masonry, and the welfare of the lodge. In this way, brotherly affection, ties of friendship and personal regard grow strong, and their remembrances and their good influence abide in our homes, go with us through life, modify our acts, and smooth the voyage over the river of death.

"God alone is Great!"

The Chicago Devastation.

The annals of conflagration have no parallel for suddenness, rapidity and destructiveness with the Chicago fire. It is not worth while to multiply words over an event so horrible.

On Saturday evening, October 7th, a destructive fire raged in the west division of Chicago, including the immense lumber yards there located, freight depot and yards of the Chicago & Alton R. R. and many valuable buildings and factories, covering an area of twenty acres, and consuming property estimated at $700,000. It would seem that such a fire, at such a time, should satisfy the fire-fiend. But on Sunday evening, about nine o'clock, a fire broke out in the southwest division, about one mile from the Court House which rapidly widened and was driven northward by a southwesterly violent wind, which increased in violence to a tempest and before the setting of the sun on Monday one mile square in the south division, between the south branch and the lake, with the main Chicago River on the north, embracing the principal business portion of the city and including the Court House, Post Office, nearly every hotel, every printing office, palatial structures, elegant churches and immense business houses; the Rock Island & Pacific depot, the Central depot and nearly all the north division, with its railroad buildings, splendid residences and churches, between the north branch and the lake, fell a prey to the fury of wind and flame. The Sunday night and Monday fire covers an area in the south and north divisions one mile in width and four miles in length.

The lowest estimate placed upon the loss is $200,000,000! and some estimate the loss at $300,000,000! The direct loss and consequences will probably more than reach the latter sum. It will affect business men all over the west and an enormous quantity of goods on the way south, west and north, with millions of bushels of grain eastward bound, are consumed. The railroad passenger depots on the west side are safe.

But the most terrible portion of the tragedy is the fearful loss of life. At this writing, October 12, over sixty bodies have been found, others are known to have perished and it is feared that many unwarned persons have perished in the flames or beneath falling walls and buildings.

The richest men are the most thoroughly ruined, for their debts involve them in utter insolvency.

After the most terrible disasters are presented to view the thought naturally comes to the surface, how have our brethren fared?

The old Temple, on Dearborn, between Randolph and Washington, originally occupied by all the Masonic bodies in the city, but recently by Lafayette Chapter Chicago Council, Apollo Commandery and the Scottish Rite bodies, with all its precious memories and great events, now takes its place in history. We hope the records are safe, but we fear that they, with the archives of the Grand Chapter, Council and Commandery are gone; we wait anxiously to learn.

Blaney Hall, on Dearborn, near the Tremont, a place of beauty and the home of Blaney, Turner and Ashlar Lodges, has fled.

Oriental Hall, on LaSalle, between Washington and Madison, said to be the most magnificent in the world, where Oriental, Garden City, Wm. B. Warren, Waubansia, Germania and Chicago Lodges met, is no more! The new and splendid Blair Hall, on La Salle, between Madison and Jackson, occupied by Dearborn, Blair and Bigelow Lodges, is also gone.

And Kilwinning, Covenant, Keystone Lincoln Park Lodges, Corinthian Chapter and Bernard Commandery, on the north side, are without homes. Perhaps their records and charters are saved, but we fear the worst. Fifteen lodges, two chapters, one council, two commanderies and the Scottish bodies burned out in one awful fire!

Our brethren, with their wives and children, who are homeless, shelterless penniless and out of all employment can be counted by the thousands.

And in this connection we beg to be excused for saying that the end of the one hundred thousand people out of employment, out of house and entirely destitute of means is not yet! No! by no means! Winter with its desolations, hardships and penury is near at hand. Masons will contribute their full share with others, for all general and special purposes of benevolence. And in addition for their brethren. Now, wherever The Trowel circulates we do most earnestly beseech our brethren to do something for our brethren of Chicago worthy of themselves and worthy of our great Fraternity.

Our Past Grand Masters.

The names of the Past Grand Masters were tastefully arranged on the panels of the gallery at the Grand Lodge meeting at Chicago, but as they were not all chronologically placed, we will now state them in their proper order. Abraham Jonas, was elected in April, 1840, at the organization of the Grand Lodge, and was elected in the following October and again in October, 1841. He had previously served as Grand Master, Grand High Priest, member of the Legislature, and presidential elector in Kentucky. He was initiated in Cincinnati, by Rev. John T. Jones, now a resident of Eureka, Woodford Co.

Meredith Helm, a Maryland Mason, and long a physician of eminence in this city, was elected Grand Master in 1842. During his year, the Mormon lodges were closed. None of them were ever chartered, unless the lodge at Montrose, Iowa, may be classed as such.

Alexander Dunlap, of Jacksonville was elected in 1843; was Grand Treasurer in 1840, S. G. Warden in 1841, and Deputy in 1842. At this time the goverment had him employed as surveyor and superintendent of improvements in the Illinois river; before this, he was Major in the U. S. regular army.

Levi Lusk was Deputy, and in 1844, was elected Grand Master. He had previously been Grand High Priest in Kentucky and passed from the office of Grand Master into that of Grand Secretary, which position he filled with marked ability for two years. Afterwards Grand High Priest and Grand Puissant. He was conspicuous upon the platform as the Senior Past Grand Master at Chicago and is now nearly eighty years old.

Rev. W. F. Walker, of Chicago, succeeded to the Grand Mastership in October, 1845. His year was a contentious and unhappy one.

In October, 1846, Nelson D. Morse, one of the most impressive workmen, and as decided and courteous a gentleman as ever presided in the Oriental Chair, a hard working mechanic at Henderson, was elected Grand Master. He brought order out of confusion.

In October, 1847, Wm. Lavely, of Springfield, was elected at Quincy and the following year was re-elected at Alton. He was the first to compel a proper recognition of our territorial jurisdiction, and all his acts were marked by judgment and ability. No other Grand Master in Illinois has rendered so many years or such signal service as Master of a lodge as Bro. Lavely.

In October, 1849, at Chicago, Wm. C. Hobbs, of Bloomington, was elected. The handsomest man that has ever occupied the Grand Master's chair; of polished manners; pleasing address; sensitive and gentle as a woman; eloquent in speech; logical in argument; averse to discipline, and a power that compelled obedience without question. Such a man was the beloved Hobbs.

At Shawneetown, in 1850, Christopher G. Y. Taylor, of Belleville, was elected. He compelled respect to other jurisdictions and met the terrible crisis which arose at Belvidere with firmness, but the journey proved too much for him, and he died soon after arriving home and Thomas J. Picket of Peoria became Grand Master and was elected in October, 1851. He was then noted as editor of the Peoria Republican; has since been in our State Senate, colonel in the army, and is now Post Master at Paducah, and an active member of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky.

E. B. Ames, then a lawyer at Hennepin and a member of the legislature was elected in 1851. He resides now at Minneapolis, Minn.

Wm. B. Warren, of Jacksonville, the first Grand Secretary, the first Grand High Priest, and then clerk of the Supreme Court, was elected Grand Master in 1852. He was a polished and courteous gentleman and a true man, as was proven by his gallant retention of goverment at Saltillo at the terrible battle of Buena Vista.

In October, 1854, James L. Anderson, of Rushville, after passing through the position of Grand Treasurer, Grand Junior Warden, and Deputy, was elected Grand Master. Thoroughly spartan and a dangerous antagonist.

He was succeeded in 1855, by Wm. B. Herrick, M. D, who initiated the measures which gave us the Constitution of 1857. As a surgeon, few excelled him; fewer still as an orator.

James H. Hibbard, of Alton, was elected in October, 1856; has any one been seen in Illinois who could excel him in work? He was elected Grand High Priest the following year; again in 1862, and was the first Grand Puissant.

Harrison Dills, of Quincy, our glorious Grand Treasurer, was elected in October, 1857. He had hard work and did it well. In 1840, Junior Grand Warden; n 1858, Senior Grand Warden, and elected Grand Treasurer in 1863, which place he bids fair long to fill.

Ira A. W. Buck, of Aurora, was elected in October, 1858, 1859 and 1860; was elected Gen. Grand King of the Gen. Grand Chapter in 1859, and Deputy in 1865; was also elected Grand High Priest in 1856. He was a prompt and vigorous presiding officer, and a thorough and just executive.

F. M. Blair, of Paris, was elected in October, 1861 and 1862; events of that time we must pass over.

Thomas J. Turner, of Freeport, was elected in October, 1863 and 1864.

H. P. H. Bromwell, of Charleston, was elected in October, 1865; being a member of Congress he declined a re-election

Jerome R. Gorin was elected in October, 1866 and 1867.

Of these Past Grand Masters, Jonas, Helm, Dunlap, Morse, Hobbs, Taylor, Warren, Anderson, Herrick, Hibbard, and Blair have passed to the silent land!

M. W. Breth. Lusk, Lavely, Picket, Ames, Dills, Buck, Turner, Bromwell, and Gorin survive. Of these, Bro. Picket resides in Kentucky; Bro. Ames is practising law in Minnesota; Bro. Bromwell is practising law in Denver, Colorado; six only of the twenty-one mentioned reside in Illinois. Of the whole twenty-three eleven survive, and of these all but two or three are on the descending scale.

Destitution, Forebodings, Relief.

Just now our brethren at Chicago will have enough to eat and other supplies, temporarily. But the winter, with all its privations and inclemencies, is at hand. By and by sympathy and relief will subside, matters will be left for those immediately interested and then God help the poor, indigent and helpless in Chicago, thrown out of employment by the fire.

Even those who get employment, thrown out of their homes and devoid of their accustomed comforts, humble though they may have been, will barely subsist; their earnings, even though they be liberal, can do but little more than keep away the wolf until warm weather comes again. Upon this topic we might enlarge. But we will not. It is unnecessary. The bare statement is all that is necessary.

Our brethren in Chicago have always met cases of distress and poverty with a liberal hand and have ever given the benefit of doubt to the applicant. Their benefactions, expended at home and transmitted abroad, have been without stint or measure.

Thousands of them are mechanics, small dealers, traveling men, watermen, artists, teachers, &c., who lived in rented houses or small habitations built from their hard earnings and dependent upon their daily labor for subsistence for themselves and families. In their penury and destitution sickness and discouragement will overtake them and countless ills will befall them. Scenes, suffering and calamities will ensue, which would not have occurred, and by the thousands.

WHAT CAN AND SHOULD BE DONE?

In our large places, let relief committees be appointed by the lodges and let funds be raised and deposited to be drawn upon by M. W. Bro. D. C. Cregier, or whoever may be authorized, from time to time as necessity may demand. And let it be with a liberal hand.

In the smaller places let clothing, provisions and necessaries be sent to care D. C. Cregier, Cleveland Hall, corner Randolph and Halsted streets, at once.

Much money for various un-thought-of necessities will be required. There ought to be $50,000 provided at once.

Money can be sent as above, or if our brethren prefer, they can send to us and we will promptly acknowledge by letter, publish the amounts received in THE TROWEL and instantly transmit.

Wherever THE TROWEL circulates we most earnestly pray every brother Mason, every sister of the Eastern Star, every lodge, chapter, council and commandery to contribute as God has given means. Remember those that are bound with you.

Old Historical Matters.

Among the losses by the fire of February last, was a large amount of old records, the main portion of which are abstracted into the history of Masonry in Illinois, lately published, a copy of which ought to be, and we presume is, in the archives of nearly every lodge. The copies designed for our Grand Lodge archives, for new lodges and for transmission abroad, are all consumed.

We have a copy belonging to our son-in-law for our editorial use; we do not know of another copy in Springfield.

In the Grand Lodge library and archives, were manuscripts furnished by the venerable J. W. Whitney, celebrated as "Lora Coke," and printed proceedings of the old Grand Lodge from its organization until January, 1826.

The most lamentable feature of the whole fire was the destruction of the beautiful records of Western Star Lodge, at Kaskaskia—the first lodge west of Ohio, formed in 1805.

At Chicago, the names of Bond and Hall appeared as Past Grand Masters.

Shadrach Bond was the first delegate in Congress from the Illinois Territory, the first Governor of the State, was affiliated a member of Western Star in 1806, served several years as Warden and Master, and was elected the first Grand Master, December 11, 1852.

It will be seen that the Grand Lodge was formed in December, 1822; it was provided that the meetings should be held in January, so no meeting of the Grand Lodge was held in 1823, although the history says a meeting was held in December. We think not. The annual meeting was held January, 1824, James Hall, Deputy, presiding. At this meeting, Chief Justice Thomas Reynolds was present. James Hall was elected Grand Master; the time of meeting was changed to December, and in that month, 1824, James Hall was again elected; again the meeting vibrated to January, 1826, and Bro. Hall was again elected, and, although a meeting was held in January, 1827, there has been no record of it found, nor is it known, so far as we can ascertain, who were elected Grand Officers at that time. William H. Brown, an accomplished Christian gentleman, had been Grand Secretary from the formation; the archives never passed from his hands, we believe; and we are strongly of the opinion that disintegrating elements in the body itself destroyed it, for we visited Judge Brown, in person in Chicago, in 1859, and, although courteously treated, we could gain no information whatever. He was not the man to withhold anything creditable, not to communicate anything reflecting upon his associates. We therefore presume that the Grand Lodge fell to pieces at the meeting in January, 1827, and died in the hands of Breth. Hall and Brown.

The old brethren, and all who desire to be well informed in Masonic matters, will be much interested in our early matters. We have no information in regard to the subsequent history of Breth. Bond and Hall; we ask our readers at Jonesboro, Kaskaskia, Murphysboro, Albion, Equality, at or near Covington, Carmi, Carlysle, Alton, Upper Alton, Edwardsville, Cahokia, Belleville, Lewistown, Ottawa, Galena, Vandalia, and any other places where lodges were held in this State, to write up and send us all the information they can, in regard to the old lodges, the Masters and members, with their occupation, success, appearance and time of death, not so much for present use, as means to preserve what is valuable and historical, to be published as may seem proper, and to be transmitted to future generations.

Eastern Star Burial.

Mrs. Elizabeth D. Lusk, a member of Delta Chapter No. 3, E. S., in New York city, died September 25th, and was buried after the manner of the Order. The services were very impressive and affecting.

Losses by Our Brethren.

Our M. W. Grand Master loses the accumulations of twenty years. He is left utterly destitute, with a wife and six children, and loses all his scientific and Masonic works, splendid instruments and his working apparatus. His family did not even save their clothing. His resources are will, knowledge, strong manhood and a good profession.

We propose that his case be taken in charge by past and present Grand Masters. Will M. W. Bro. Drummond, of Portland, Maine, devise a plan and inaugurate the movement?

Our Grand Tyler, W. Bro. John P. Ferns, had secured a comfortable home on the same spot where he resided in 1842, when he tyled LaFayette Lodge No. 18, the first time a lodge was ever opened in Chicago. This home was built from the savings of daily toil for long years. Bro. Ferns is one of the most patient, accommodating and laborious men in the world. And with devoted faithfulness, when his household gods lay before his eyes, he caught up and saved the Grand Lodge jewels, running northward with the wife of his early manhood, and barely escaping the half mile long caloric flames. We commit his case to the Grand and Past Grand Tylers. They generally have but little money, but if anybody can get money from the opulent and worthy, it is a Grand Tyler.

Will W. Bro. Schreiner, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, take charge of this matter, and by assistance of his Bro. Grand Tylers raise Bro. Ferns three thousand dollars.

We hope we shall not commit an unpardonable sin, if we mention the case of the noble Roman, R. W. Bro. Wiley M. Egan. From the lips of Bro. Foss we learn that he had more than $160,000 in value in grain receipts, and they with all the books, memoranda and vouchers were utterly reduced to ashes in his safe, and that he is entirely dependent upon the memory and honor of his patrons and correspondents. No one will ever hear a murmur from the warm hearted old sailor, who, with a single-heartedness which does him honor, is looking after the comfort of others. Here, too, is a wife and children and necessity. To the sailors we commit this case. Will glorious Bro. Gen. Wm. Sutton, of Salem, Mass., stir up the "Life on the ocean wave?"

Bro. Foss was a great loser; but he has something left.

Poet Laureate.

Comp. T. J. Corson, of New Jersey, was crowned Poet Laureate, by the Reporter Convention recently in session at Baltimore. "Sail in," Dr.

Responses to our Circular.

Almost the first telegram from Mayor Mason was a cry for provisions. Our heart burned within us. What can we do? was the question. We thought over the matter a whole sleepless night. We had a printing office, but we had no authority or power. But we had won by service and faithfulness the right to appeal to the Craft and we did send a circular to all the brethren and to every lodge and chapter in the State except those in Chicago and Springfield.

Two car loads have gone from Old Highland, in the southeast corner of Madison county, several families are being cared for and more means are being raised.

Bro. H. Artemas Gilman, who is, we believe, either Superintendent or Physician in the Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville, writes us that 1,500 pounds of bread, 500 pounds of beef, forty hams and four large boxes of clothing have been sent from the hospital.

Upon the reading of the circular in the lodge at Sandwich the sum of one hundred dollars was voted and sent to Bro. Cregier.

Let the good work go on; let the contributions be given through THE TROWEL as an incentive to others.

Chicago Papers.

We will endeavor to so direct THE TROWEL to Chicago that where the direction is still intact the paper may reach its destination without difficulty. In all other cases we will direct them to the care of Cleveland Hall, corner Randolph and Halsted streets. We trust that those who receive their papers by the accustomed channel will communicate this information as speedily and wherever they can.

Chicago Business.

Bro. H. R. Caberry lost all his books, papers, memorandums and accounts and has a large amount due him which he needs very much to enable him to resume business. We hope that all indebted will promptly respond. His office is now at 129 South Halsted street.

Messrs. Rounds & Kane, the great printers' furnishing company, lost everything. They are still full of pluck and vigor and have resumed business at 13, 15 and 17 North Jefferson street, west side, in the building occupied by the Chicago Taylor Printing Press Company, where all the branches of the old business will be attended to.

The Freemasons' Repository

Is a new paper, published monthly, at 57 Weybosset street, Providence, R. I., by Ferrin & Hammond, at $1.00 per annum. It is a nice four-page sheet, well edited, and richly worth the money.

Letter from the M. W. Grand Master.

Through the politeness of R. W. Bro. Miner, we are permitted to take the following extracts from a letter written to him by the M. W. Bro. Cregier, dated Oct. 14. We omit nearly all that is of a private nature, for what we do publish is without the knowledge or consent of the Grand Master, and we do not feel at liberty to repeat some portions of the letter in print:

Dear Bro. Miner:

Your kind letter of the 12th inst. is at hand, also the draft for $100. I need not tell you that I am well nigh crazed, owing to my peculiar connection with city matters, especially since the water works, under my charge, are of such great moment to the whole community, and I am looked to by all to get them in operation. I have over 400 men under me and it appears that each one has something to ask me; our engines and building are nearly ruined; I am working day and night, striving to get water to the suffering people, and save the balance of our unfortunate city from destruction. With all this, I am obliged to feed all hands, secure supplies, and in addition have my own personal condition to think of.

* * * * * * * * * *

My duties are rendered still more embarrassing by my Masonic official position. I am receiving dispatches from all quarters; receiving large amounts of money and stores for our brethren, of course not being able to leave the works a moment. However, I have organized a committee to distribute food and clothing, attend the sick and care for the money until winter; I have appointed Bro. Egan Treasurer. Have received $6,800 from the Grand Master of California; $1,000 from Quincy, $500 from Council Bluffs (Geo. W. Lininger), and seven $100 donations from individuals. Oh! Bro. Miner, what noble men these are! What an eminent degree of God's humanity exists among us at the present time; these things almost unman me.

* * * * * * * * * *

God bless the donors. God help us during the coming winter. I have no fears for myself, for I feel that I have many good friends, and with a will to work I will plod along, though the accumulations of twenty years of hard work have gone.

* * * * * * * * * *

As I remarked, all Masonic papers are gone; a few were taken from my office, but a thief stole them and other property placed in the Tower; my address was burned, but I can give the substance from memory, and will do so as soon as I can get the time to devote to it.

The Voice and Bro. Bailey.

The publishing house and store of Bro. John C. W. Bailey, where he was building up a very profitable business, was in the course of the fire on Dearborn street, between Washington and Madison, and of course is utterly destroyed. We have not heard one word from him, nor from any one in regard to him. Terrible as his loss manifestly is, we hope he has something from his fair means left, and that he will be able to resume immediately. Any use of our office, any means or supplies in our control, Bro. Bailey can freely command.

If it should prove that he has lost his all, his personal honor and worth are invaluable credit among business men.

Masonic Contributions.

Springfield Lodge No. 4, herself a heavy loser by the fire last winter, gives one hundred dollars.

The lodges at Toronto, Canada, give seven hundred dollars in gold.

The lodge at Stonington, Connecticut, gives one hundred dollars.

The brethren at Old Highland have sent up one car load of provisions, another of clothing and necessaries, have several families in care and are still moving.

The noble Drummond, now at the head of Royal Arch Masonry and of the Scottish Rite, has telegraphed every Scottish body to forward contributions to Vincent L. Hurlbut.

The lodge at Sandwich has contributed one hundred dollars.

Col. Woods' Museum.

Although useless, owing to the late fire, we are none the less indebted to Col. Wood for a season ticket for ourself and wife to visit his museum in Chicago and we most earnestly express the hope that he will shortly be on his feet again more prosperous than ever.

Brethren of the South.

In your dire distress our Chicago brethren contributed to your relief, a large portion of which went through our hands. Will you remember them in their awful visitation now? Trouble and distress know no past, no clime, no differences. Now, brethren, we ask you to bestow your alms; let them come from loving hearts; from open hands.

General Grand Chapter,

Assembled in Baltimore, Maryland, on the third Tuesday in September. The address of M. E. Comp. Austin, G. G. H. P., was very lengthy and able.

Josiah H. Drummond, of Portland, Maine, was elected G. G. H. P.; E. H English, of Little Rock, Arkansas, Deputy; Charles H. Ohr, of Baltimore, G. G. K.; Charles Marsh, of ——— California, G. G. S.; John McClellan, of Boston, Massachusetts, G. G. Treas.; C. G. Fox, of Buffalo, New York, G. G. Secretary; Joseph Yates, of ——— Wisconsin, G. G. C. H.; D. C. Dawkins, Florida, G. G. R. A. C.

Grand Encampment, K. T., U. S. A.

On the third Tuesday in September the Grand Encampment convened in Baltimore, M. E. Sir W. S. Gardner, Grand Master. The representation was very large and more than 5,000 Templars, ranged under their respective banners, were present. Apollo Commandery, of Chicago, performed escort duty for the Grand Master. Elwood Commandery, of this city, was the largest body in attendance from the west, and Col. E. R. Roberts, Comptroller for Springfield, had command of the Illinois Division. The occasion was a marked one and the processions were large and imposing.

John Q. A. Fellows, of New Orleans, was elected Grand Master; James N. Hopkins, of Pittsburg, Pa., Deputy; Vincent L. Hurlbut, M. D., Chicago, G. Gen.; Benjamin Dean, of Massachusetts, G. C. Gen.; Irving M. Smith, Kansas, S. G. Warden; W. J. Patton, Mississippi, J. G. Warden; John W. Simons, New York, G. Treas; and Theodore S. Parvin, Iowa City, Iowa, Grand Recorder.

Grand Lodge of Illinois.

We intended to give a very full account of proceedings at Chicago, but everybody is interested in the conflagration and its incidents and consequences. The Grand Master retained his address and the Grand Secretary having deposited monies there and being otherwise interested, Masonically and financially, it is not easy to give such an article as we would give under ordinary circumstances. The Grand Lodge met on the first Tuesday in this month, in Metropolitan Hall, Chicago, where it assembled in 1866. Farwell Hall, free from noise out side, was too vast within. Metropolitan, well-suited inside, was annoyed constantly from without.

The assemblage was large and a majority new. Grand Master Cregier presided.

His address was very able, exhaustive and complete. All his decisions were concurred in but two, and upon those the committee were divided and expressed no opinion.

The new constitution received the votes of 323 lodges out of 628, while only about eighty voted in the negative, the remainder not voting. Being a majority, the new constitution, with the exception of the Chicago section, is the supreme law in this jurisdiction. While the Chicago section received the votes of a majority of the lodges in that city and three-fourths of all the votes cast, it failed for want of a majority—the lodges not voting.

By-Laws are now to be framed in harmony with its provisions.

GRAND OFFICERS.

D. C. Cregier, Chicago, G. M.
James A. Hawley, Dixon, Deputy.
Geo. E. Lounsbury, Mound City, S. G. W.
Jos. Robbins, M. D., Quincy, J. G. W.
Harrison Dills, Quincy, G. Treasurer.
Orlin H. Miner, Springfield, G. Secretary.
Rev. J. W. Agard, Wyoming, G. Chaplain.
J. R. Gorin, Decatur, G. Orator.
W. J. A. De Lancey, Centralia, S. G. D.
Henry W. Dyer, Mound City, J. G. D.
Thos. J. Whitehead, Odin, G. Marshal.
John F. Burrill, Springfield, D. G. Secretary.
John P. Ferns, Chicago, G. Tyler.

The above are given from recollection. In the November number we will publish the new constitution and the proceedings more in detail.

Grand Chapter.

This body met in Masonic Temple, Grand High Priest Murray, of Decatur, presiding. The address was beautiful, the representation large and the session harmonious.

James A. Hawley, Dixon, was elected G. H. Priest; James C. Luckey, Polo, Deputy; Geo. E. Lounsbury, Mound City, G. King; W. J. A. De Lancey, Centralia, G. Scribe; Rev. A. P. Forsythe, Kansas, Grand Chaplain; Harrison Dills, Quincy, G. Treasurer; James H. Miles, Chicago, G. Secretary.

Grand Council.

We did not attend its session. The accomplished gentleman, W. A. Levanway, Dixon, was elected Grand Puissant, and the other officers are as follows: G. E. Lounsbury, Mound City, D. G. P.; J. F. Burrill, Springfield, G. T. I.; W. L. Bromfield, Mendota, G. P. C. W.; C. Fisher, Springfield, G. Treasurer; James H. Miles, Chicago, G. Recorder; Levi Lusk, Mt. Sterling, G. Chaplain; H. B. Pierce, Chicago, G. C. G.; E. Blackshaw, Urbana, G. C.; A. R. Robinson, Springfield, G. S.

Colorado Grand Officers.

Henry M. Teller, Central, G. M.; Webster D. Anthony, Denver, Deputy; Harper M. Orahood, Black Hawk, S. G. W.; Edmund T. Stout, Colorado City, J. G. W.; Wm. W. Ware, Georgetown, G. Treas.; Ed. C. Parmellee, Georgetown, G. Sec.

Exclusively.

No articles are so universally copied as Bro. Rounsville's, especially in foreign publications. No contributions appeared in September, neither is his pen discernable in this number, in consequence of serious illness. He commences again in November to write Masonic articles exclusively for the TROWEL, and has three and four pages at his command.

National Masonic Elections.

The election of M. E. Comp. J. H. Drummond, of Maine, to the position of General Grand High Priest of the Royal Arch Fraternity in the United States is everywhere hailed with delight. For ourself, we are exceedingly rejoiced and no longer desire the dissolution of the National body. And all are equally gratified to find him supported by so accomplished a gentleman as Judge English, of Arkansas.

M. E. Sir John Q. A. Fellows, of New Orleans, although preceded by such Sir Knights as Palmer and Gardner, will justify the very highest expectations. His reputation is national and his talents first-class. We are personally gratified and rejoiced. And our Illinois Sir Knights deserved the good treatment they received in the election of our beloved and able Past Grand Commander, Dr. Hurlbut, to the position of Grand Generalissimo. And surely Iowa is no longer "out in the cold." Sir Knight Parvin, we greet you.

Scottish Banquet.

A grand banquet was given to the brethren of the A. & A. Rite, at the recent Baltimore meetings. Ill. Breth. Pike, Mackey, Fellows, Barker, Collins, Parvin and Cunningham, of the Southern jurisdiction, and Drummond, Sickels, Simons, Gardner, Hurlbut, Corson, Alden and many others, were present. The season was festive and joyous.

Meteor Lodge.

On the 13th inst., Meteor Lodge, at Sandwich, elected the following officers: Merlin Carpenter, W. M.; Van R. David, S. W.; Geo. E. Kennedy, J. W.; Geo. Kleinschmid, Treas.; Geo H. Whitcomb, Sec.; Geo. B. Devoll, S. D.; Harry M. Moore, J. D.; William Delano, Tyler. Any more Georges? Our brethren everywhere are requested to send us their lists of officers for publication.

F. P. Robinson,

Formerly of Belvidere, and a member of Belvidere Lodge, in this State, was in Cameron, Mo., last November, and left there for Iowa; he stopped at Ottumwa with a sick companion some time, and his last letter to his wife was written from that place. He was afterwards at Bellplaines, Iowa, with some relatives; they write that they thought him slightly deranged, but as he said he was going home, they thought it best not to pay attention to it. He has not been heard from since he left there. He is about average size, dark hair and eyes, fair and clear complexion, and his whiskers are slightly tinged with red. Respectful in manner and careful of his words. It is feared that some accident or casualty has befallen him, and any information concerning him will be gratefully received by his wife, Mrs. F. P. Robinson, at Lamb, Venango Co., Pa. We hope that our cotemporaries will notice this.

Charles B. Munger,

Of Lawton, Michigan, sent advertisements of a gift enterprise to secretaries of lodges, to one of which a brother responds as follows:

> Messrs. Munger & Bro.:
> Yours, with circulars enclosed, received. If you think that I will interest myself in your gift enterprise you mistake your man. I have a very poor opinion of gift enterprises and not a very flattering one of those who engage in them. I place all gift enterprises on the same platform and call them swindles and those who engage in them swindlers.

Mackey's National Freemason.

This is the title of a worthy candidate for Masonic patronage, published monthly, at Washington, D. C., by Messrs. McGill & Witherow, in real magazine style of fifty-six pages, with a cover, at $3.00 per annum. It is edited solely by the Illustrious and learned Bro. Albert G. Mackey, M. D., who is unrivalled in the philosophy, ethics and higher arcana of Masonic mysteries, is an elegant writer upon any subject and will never suffer his magazine to be debased or its dignity to be lowered. The first number has come to hand. It is for October, and to say we are pleased is stating the matter very mildly. In other words, let every one who aspires to be a Masonic scholar or student subscribe for this magazine. Dr. Mackey is not an old man. It is true that he was famous twenty-five years ago, but he cannot be over sixty, and probably not more than fifty-five years old, and is now in the full possession of his intellectual faculties, matured and schooled by years and experience.

It seems almost inevitable that every institution should have its clown. The church has had them and Masonry is not an exception. Such a being, we suppose, has his uses, else he would not be. The real Masonic clown in this country, like the wandering Jew, has discovered that there is such a man as Dr. Mackey, now "effete, powerless and run to seed." Instead of that being so, Dr. Mackey's magazine indicates a future unknown and unsurpassed in Masonic literature and power. Let the clown stick to his sewer; the king in intellect will be king.

The Masonic Jewel,

By Bro. A. J. Wheeler & Co., Memphis, Tenn., is a monthly, and is a first-class Masonic paper, and is meeting with first-class success. $1.00 yearly.

C. M. Loomis,

299 Chapel street, New Haven, Conn., by combining two departments, Music and Masonry, under one cover, seems to be looming up in the world, judging from the improved and constantly improving appearance of Loomis' Musical and Masonic Journal, published at $1.00 yearly. We are no judge of music, but Minnie, our blonde mischief, is, and she says the pieces are charming. The Masonic portion excels.

Our Mutual Friend

Is the title of a sensational sheet published at Detroit, Michigan, which had a professedly Masonic department, edited by Czar Jones, an expelled R. A. Mason. No name now appears as the responsible editor of that department, but we call the attention of the Craft and Grand Officers in Michigan to its published list of expelled Masons in ILLINOIS; the list is evidently taken from publications intended only for the Fraternity and is published in the face of our law forbidding all such general publication unless at the request of the lodge. For this most flagrant breach of comity and of our law all concerned in the publication of that sheet should be tried and expelled. We hope that our law-abiding Michigan Masonic authorities will see that this is done.

New Census and Patent Laws.

We are indebted to Munn & Co., publishers of the Scientific American, New York, for a neat little bound volume of one hundred and twenty pages entitled as above. It contains the complete census of 1870, showing the population, by counties, of all the States and Territories, with their areas and the population of the principal cities. Also the new patent laws in full, with forms, official rules, directions how to obtain patents, copyrights, regulations for trademarks, assignments, how to sell patents, etc. Also, a large variety of valuable information relating to water-wheels, steam-engines and other mechanism, with many useful table and recipes, 175 diagrams of mechanical movements, etc. We advise everybody to send for it as above. Price, twenty-five cents.

The Ladies' Magazine.

A beautiful magazine of 56 pages, filled with useful, entertaining and fanciful reading, poetry, music, engravings and cuts, suitable for all conditions, published monthly by Margaret L. Johnson, 406 North Fourth Street, St. Louis, at $3 per annum. The face page of cover has exquisitely cut faces of lady author, artist, teacher, physician and orator. The first number was sent us; we noticed it; then none; now No. 6; is this to be the rule?

Mechanical Advocate,

No. 3, Vol. 1, is received; published monthly, at Boston, by A. S. & J. Gear & Co., 56 Sudbury street; $1.00 per year. It has several well-executed engravings and cuts; is edited ably; advertizes such matters and goods as are needed or are useful for mechanics, manufacturers and architects.

Col. Wm. C. Anderson, 24th Regiment U. S. Infantry, was Master of a military lodge at Camp Meigs, on the Maumee River, Ohio, in 1813.

THE article in a former number, entitled "Order of the Eastern Star," credited to the Square, should have been credited to the Masonic Mirror.

THE Jewel says that Bro. Gouley and his regalia were much admired at Washington. We don't think George needs any regalia to "set him up."

Selected Poetry.

The Place Where I was Born.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW.

You may talk of those green grassy isles,
  Which the Tritons have strewn with their coral,
Which the day-god impregns with his smiles,
  Where the seasons forever are floral;
Of the vales of the rich Arcady,
  Where the evening is just like the morn;
But the prettiest spot in the world for me,
  Is the place where I was born.

You may talk of the bright Cyclades
  Which oasis the deserts of Ocean—
The three fairest nymphs that inhabit the seas
  Which the moon keeps forever in motion;
Of that Beautiful Land far beyond the sea,
  Where the evening is just like the morn;
But the prettiest spot in the world for me,
  Is the place where I was born.

You may talk of those gardens of Gul,
  Where the maidens make Cupid their treasure,
Where the zephyrs bear Venus at full
  Of the moon to the Islands of Pleasure;
Of that Beautiful Land far beyond the sea,
  Where the evening is just like the morn;
But the prettiest spot in the world for me,
  Is the place where I was born.
    —Masonic Mirror.

Old Grandfather Graybeard's Corner.

Dear Bro. Reynolds:

The other evening we (you know who I mean—my old friends and myself) got to talking about this Adoptive Masonry—this Eastern Star—this Woman Masonry, as some call it, and it got up quite a stir in our little council; some didn't believe in it; others did. Now you must know that I am a strong advocate of giving to every human being their rights, and that women have rights in Masonry, no intelligent Mason will deny. And I even go so far as to say that Masonry was instituted for the especial benefit of the Mason's wife, daughter, sister, mother and the widows of Master Masons. And I converted most of our little circle by calling upon Bro. Barney to recite a clause of the covenant and the opening ritual of the third degree. And it brought them to light with a big shock (I believe in shocks); they all acknowledged that they had felt that women were entitled to something in Masonry, some way by which she could make herself known as such. "But then," says old, grumbling ———, with a snap and a snarl, enough to take your head off, "you know that you can't make a woman a Mason."

This brought the house down, as it always does whenever I hear it, as it shows that the fellow has got to his last hold.

Make a woman a Mason? No! You know we can't, I know we can't and the women know we can't, and no honorable woman would ask for or be in possession of that which she knew was unlawful for her to have or know, and what's the use of talking such nonsense? What we can do is to give woman her rights and privileges guaranteed by Masonry; give her the Eastern Star degrees: give them organizations to perpetuate them, and they will soon become universal. We finally concluded that the movement was a good one; that it was but doing our long-neglected duty to our wives, sisters, daughters, mothers and the widows of Master Masons and bid you God-speed.

Bro. Smith, an old bachelor, suggested that the young she-Masons might adopt the sentiment of the old Masonic song, "The Mason's Daughter." As a punishment for his discourtesy I ordered him forthwith to give us the song, which he did, and I hope that all Mason's daughters will, as he expressed it, adopt the sentiment.

THE MASON'S DAUGHTER.

A Mason's daughter, fair and young,
The pride of all the virgin throng,
    Thus to her lover said:
"Though, Damon, I your flame approve,
Your actions praise, your person love,
    Yet still I'll be a maid;

"Nor shall until my virgin zone,
But one to whom the secret's known,
    Of fam'd Freemasonry:
In which the great and good combine
To raise, with generous design,
    Man to felicity.

"The lodge excludes the fop and fool,
The plodding knave, the party tool,
    That liberty would sell;
The noble, faithful and the brave,
No golden charm can e'er deceive,
    In slavery to dwell."

This said, he bowed, he went away,
Apply'd, was made without delay,
    Returned to her again:
The fair comply'd with his request,
Connubial joys the couple blest,
    And long may they remain.

A hearty round of applause repaid Bro. Smith for his effort. Bro. Ashe was unfortunate enough to repeat

"No mortal can more the ladies adore
Than a Free and an Accepted Mason," and he was elected for the old

ENTERED APPRENTICE'S SONG.

Come let us prepare, we brothers that are Assembled on merry occasion;
Let's be happy and sing, for life is a spring
  To a Free and an Accepted Mason.

The world is in pain our secrets to gain,
  And still let them wonder and gaze on;
They ne'er can divine the word or the sign
  Of a Free and an Accepted Mason.

'Tis this and its that, they cannot tell what,
  Why so many great men in the nation
Should aprons put on, to make themselves one,
  With a Free and an Accepted Mason.

Great kings, dukes and lords have laid by their swords
  Our mystery to put a good grace on,
And thought themselves fam'd to have themselves nam'd
  With a Free and an Accepted Mason.

We're true and sincere, and just to the fair,
  They'll trust us on any occasion;
No mortal can more the ladies adore
  Than a Free and an Accepted Mason.

Then join hand in hand, by each brother firm stand,
  Let's be merry and put a bright face on;
What mortal can boast so noble a toast
  As a Free and an Accepted Mason?

But you would have a hod full instead of a TROWEL full if I should give you one-half of the good things done, said and sung, and for this time pray excuse

Miscellaneous.

Give Me the Hand.

BY GOODWYN BARNBY.

Give me the hand that is kind, warm and ready;
Give me the clasp that is calm true and steady;
Give me the hand that will never deceive me;
Give me its grasp, that I aye may believe thee.

Soft is the palm of the delicate woman;
Hard is the hand of the rough, sturdy yeoman;
Soft palm or hard hand, it matters not—never;
Give me the grasp that is friendly forever.

Give me the hand that is true as a brother;
Give me the hand that has harmed not another;
Give me the hand that has never forsworn it;
Give me the grasp that I may adorn it.

Lovely the palm of the fair, blue-veined maiden;
Horny the hand of the workman o'erladen;
Lovely or ugly, it matters not—never!
Give me the grasp that is friendly forever.

Ordinarily, Never.

BY P. H. HAYES, M. D.

"How did you like the Cantata at the Seminary last night, father?" I enjoyed it greatly. The singing was excellent, the parts were well sustained; and the white dresses, gaily festooned with flowers; the wreaths and the garlands; and above all, the bright faces; the spirited songs, and the graceful movements of the girls, lent such a charm as girls only can lend to any scene in life. But, my daughter, vocation trains observation. Those Seminary girls have large brains and bright eyes, but they are thin; they need the developments, the roundness and figure, which more muscle and a better nutrition would give. Very few of that troop of girls will ever fill out the outline and the full and beautiful proportions of a well-developed womanhood. How can they? They have none of those free romping exercises in which the element of play and abandon enters at will. Only in this way can the animus of a free spirit enter the limbs and send blood tingling to every part of the body.

Exercise, we say, develops and strengthens every part of the body, but it is true only in a limited sense as to the nervous system. When this is exercised so constantly, and without the balancing and bracing effect of the muscular exercise, its activity and its sensibility are intensified; but it neither grows nor is strengthened. There can not be growth and strength in brain without abundant nutrition; and there can not be abundant nutrition without abundant digestion; and there can not be abundant digestion without free and daily exercise. The muscles are one-half the weight of a strong girl, and actually receive more than two-thirds of all her blood. The whole amount of blood in the body is about one-seventh part of its weight, or fifteen pounds in a girl weighing a hundred and five pounds; but this proportion will fail in every girl who sang in the cantata, and some of them have no more than two-thirds of the normal quantity.

The blood they do make, shut out so much from the free air and open light of heaven, is deficient in color and life-inspiring quality. There were a few blanc mat faces, which made me think of the disease the doctors call anemia or the pale-blood disease. Want of light pales and weakens every living thing, and since the wonderful revelations of the spectroscope, it is a question sub judice whether the blood does not absorb the vapors of iron from the sun's atmosphere. Certain it is our finer senses are nourished by sun-light, and it is a first principle of bloom and glow of health. Do you remember what the Prince of Morocco says in the Merchant of Venice:

"Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadowed livery of the burnished sun?
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine."

Neuralgia, a disease of growing frequency, of which the single element is pain, is in nearly all its forms but an outcry of the nerves for better arterial blood, and nine-tenths of all the diseases that make so much work for the doctors are from poor blood, and poor nutrition.

In your ranks last night I saw many girls who had a right by nature to a large share of personal beauty, but they are shut up in-doors, they want muscle, figure, blood, color; they have indeed a flush, almost a fever, when excited, yet they will rise in the morning pale and languid. Madame De Stael is said to have declared she would give half her learning for personal charms, and I supposed girls knew by natural sagacity the value of beauty; if they do, they ought also to know that without health beauty is impossible.

Said I to a lady friend, a few mornings ago, "The prima donna we heard last night, had a painted face; I had a good glass and I am sure." "Well," said she "it's time she began to patch herself up —she's twenty-seven years old!"

Superadded to our common human nature, every girl has her woman nature which through all these years of school-life is undergoing the most positive, though half-unconscious evolution, and she can't help looking forward to some as yet purely ideal counterpart of herself, on whose arm she shall some day lean, and who shall give her the words and the "one look" no other man does or dare. Blessed be this God-given aspiration, never yet breathed in words, but how can it come to crownings and rejoicings through weakness?

Again these cloistered girls can not have the dignity and self-possession—possessions of self—which spring from a sense of power; power they can not have without muscle—remember it stands for blood, nutrition, color, power, and from power come courage and endurance. As surely as they live, some of these girls will fall into the hands of the doctor, and he will discover that their malady has been slowly wrought into the grain and fibre of their being, and the cure if ever it be radical, must be long deferred. Even now, some of them are "very nervous," have frequent colds, headaches, and imperfect sleep. It is a war among the members, a game of right hand against the left, brains against muscle, mind against body, and body will win, not by strength, but by the might of weakness—strange paradox, "mighty weak!"

It is a great misfortune for girls to be entirely separated from the society and employments of home while acquiring knowledge from books. Girls should elevate and honor by doing, then, all parts of the work belonging to the keeping and adorning of a home in house, garden and grounds, and in the care of pet animals. There is no substitute for these employments on the large scale, as health-inspiring exercises for girls. They can be as truely artistes in the details of home life, as in their dress, or with their pencil.

A banker's half-invalid wife told me that once she was driven to do her own work, even to the washing, and, said she, "I was infinitely better in health and cheerfulness for it; but a thousand might have told me so, and I would not have believed it." How many others are "sand blind" to opportunities for health and pleasure just at their right hand. This woman made a discovery, waking up her lifeless, muscular system, she brought the health and cheer no doctor's art could give. Aye,

"That which makes us have no need of physic,
That's physic, indeed.',

"But, father, you know they have their regular gymnastics in the Seminary."

Yes, and that's a part of the vice of them, they dull and tire from monotony; some of them are essentially unnatural, and their very character of method and drill make them discipline, rather than recreation. We can not long beat the air for exercise and find the virtue of exercise in it, no more than we can love, or laugh, or frolic by rule.

Do you remember, Mary, the two young ladies we saw at B——? They had just graduated at a seminary of note, and so important did this event seem to them, that all subsequent and even long previous transpirings were dated from this epoch, so long before or after they graduated. They appeared to be well-trained in books, music, and almost to affectation in the proprieties. They were girls of some true pride, and saw, as I think, something of the absurdity of going fresh with academic honors into an institution for invalids. The mother was strong and able to lead about and be servant to her tender daughters. These were dyspeptic and bloodless, their "sphere" invalidism. Cui bono? Not in dreaming, nor thinking only, but in doing, and the power to do, are we to make character, and to "inherit the earth." Here were learning and accomplishments, so called, and in the getting, disuse and loss of power to use or to enjoy them. They did not seem to have any vivacity, nature was schooled out of them. They went about exercise, not as though there were in it any element of play, but as though it were ecclesiastical, or judicial, or expiatory. They had no natural sense of fatigue or tiredness, therefore, no sound and refreshing sleep. They had, of course, no genuine sense of hunger, the true seasoning for our food. They would come down in the morning with the bouche pateuse, vile taste in the mouth, and look wistfully around for some sharp sauce, to quicken appetite, and end by saying, "I can't eat, every thing tastes so horribly."

Should that be called education, whatever the intellectual culture or accomplishments, which ends in impairing and perverting the powers and actions of the living body? Or is it in the power of the doctor to repair such loss? We answer to both these questions, Ordinarily, NEVER!—Herald of Health.

WHEN an adventurer is refused access to all respectable Masonic journals in America, and then airs himself on foreign soil, his value there will soon be ascertained.

Died.

At Equality, Gallatin county, Bro. Hon. SIMEON K. GIBSON, State Senator from the First Senatorial District and P. M. of Equality Lodge No. 2.

The last time we saw him he made a most appropriate address to the young Christians in one of the churches in this city.

At Depere, Thursday evening, August 24th, 1871, aged twenty-three years, LINA, wife of Capt. Wilson Vance, and daughter of M. L. Young, Esq., Grand Lecturer of Grand Lodge of Wisconsin.

It was with unusual regret this community heard of the death of this lady, the young wife of Capt. Vance, the former well-known and popular commander of the Sarah Van Epps when she was in these waters.—State Gazette, Green Bay.

At Lena, Illinois, August 28, Sir EBENEZER H. SHUMWAY, aged eighty-five years.

Born in Milbury, Mass., October 10, 1786; raised to 3d degree in Rising Star Lodge, Henderson, New York, in 1811; exalted in Freeport Chapter No. 23, in 1857; Knighted in Freeport Commandery in 1863. Married April 4, 1811; soon after united with the Baptist Church and remained in that communion a consistent Christian until his death. Distinctly remembered seeing Geo. Washington, when but six years old. Was married three times. At his death he was a member of Evergreen Lodge; he was buried with Knightly honors.

EASTERN STAR CARDS.

I HAVE A SURPASSINGLY beautiful card, which will answer the purpose of a certificate as a member of a Chapter of the Eastern Star, three inches wide and four and a quarter inches long. On the face side is

THE STAR,

with its five points in Blue, Yellow, White Red and Green colors, with the emblems in each and the Pentagon in the center, with its usual divisions, letters and devices.

Over the Star, in Gold are the words,

“I have seen His Star in the East,”

while beneath it, in Green are the words,

“And have come to worship Him.”

The border is blue and red, and the spaces are filled with ornaments in gold.

On the opposite side is a certificate embordered in Red and Blue, with large letters “E. S.,” in light shading, in the centre, over which is printed a blank certificate, with room in one corner for seal, to be signed by the Matron and attested by the Secretary. On the end is a line for a signature of the lady receiving this certificate. The thought came from Bro. Hubbard—the design is our own.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

What Man is a Mason?

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

What man is a Mason? Not he who has sworn
The sum of all virtues his life shall adorn;
Nor is it who kneels at the altar of prayer
And often presents his thank offering there.

Not he who in secret has bowed at our shrine,
And there asked the aid of the Master Divine;
Not he who has traveled in darkness and pain,
Discouraged and sad till light found him again.

Not he who like angels of grace can repeat
The lessons of Masonry full and complete;
Not he who all secrets of Masonry knows,
And oft to the conclave of brotherhood goes.

That man is a Mason who, when he has sworn,
With all of the virtues his life does adorn;
Who oft as he kneels at the altar of prayer
Remembers his brother in trouble when there.

It is he who in secret has bowed at our shrine,
And sought for the aid of the Master Divine;
Who willingly travels in darkness and pain
A brother to bring to the glad light again.

It is he who in action each day will repeat
The lessons of Masonry full and complete;
It is he who the duties of Masonry knows,
And for strength to the conclave of brotherhood goes.

Uniformity of Work.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Though it may be freely acknowledged that it is highly desirable to attain a uniformity of work in the Masonic Institution, yet we would do well to bear in mind that there are other more important things to be desired. The modes of recognition and that portion of the work that may be called "unspoken," must be substantially alike wherever Masonry exists, for there must be no uncertain pronunciations, and the hand that cannot give the salutation and the tongue that cannot frame to pronounce it right, must be rejected by the well-taught Mason everywhere.

But with the ritual, the lectures, the charges, the case is far different. There must be no clashing in sentiment, there must be no discrepancy in principle, there must be no difference of fact; but we do not hold it a crying sin that an officer shall use a different word when that in the standard work shall not occur to him, if it expresses the authoritative sentiment. It can make but little difference as to the impression of the candidate whether an officer shall say, "I am glad to meet you," or "I am happy to meet you," or "I am pleased to meet you." The former word would probably be the best, as more strongly expressing the sentiment of pleasure sought to be conveyed, but either of the others is better than a hesitation, and if either was used it would be very impolitic for the presiding officer to correct his subordinate that he might use the stronger and better term. By so doing the whole effect would be lost, and the ceremony leave a bad impression or none upon the candidate.

And yet we have seen officers—martinets in the lodge and hypercritics in the ritual—stop their subordinates and correct them for as trivial departure from the ritual as this would be. To us it seemed that we had come back to the old times when men "strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel." The fact is that almost any verbal bunder is better passed over in silence than corrected by an interruption of the ceremony; and hence such interruptions should rarely or never be suffered—never unless there is a broad and evident contravention of the sentiment of the passage or the principles of the Institution.

It follows then that it is not of the utmost importance that the ritual should be pronounced in its exact words as laid down by the Grand Lecturer. But there is another reason than that above given why this should so be held. Only those who have but a single idea in their heads, and who, parrot-like, have no thoughts except those they borrow from others, can commit a charge so thoroughly as to deliver it month after month and year upon year in its exact terms. One whose mind is cultivated, who is accustomed to think, who can express his thoughts in his own language, and the same thoughts in different terms, will not fail to use other terms than those laid down in the ritual, and to require absolutely that an officer should confine himself to the language of the acknowledged standard, would be to cast the communication of the secrets and mysteries of Masonry into the care of men without thought, capacity or the power of language.

In the light of these facts, we should look with small disfavor upon a verbal departure from the standard word of the jurisdiction if the language used should possess the virtue of conveying the orthodox meaning and was pronounced with such force and effect as an educated, thinking man could give it. Hence we say there is something more important than uniformity in the work of Masonry. Hence it is that we take the ground that the change of a word or a sentence in the delivery of a charge or lecture, is not "treason to the state," and that an officer who thus interpolates words and sentences, is not a sinner above all who are intrusted with the sacred vessels of our ancient institution.

It is more important that such a knowledge of the principles, nomenclature and language of the ritual shall be obtained as will enable an officer to declare them with force and effect; in such a manner as will convince the candidate that they came from the heart, and that heart warmed to a feeling sense of the importance of the truths uttered; the words welling up from the deep consciousness of his soul and finding the waters of fraternal love at an equal level in the heart of the neophyte whom he addresses. The impression to be made on the candidate is more to be studied than the exact language of the charges and lectures.

If the ceremonies of Masonry are not mere unmeaning forms; if they are intended as great moral lessons to reach the heart, expand the affections and reform the lives of those who pass through them, then the most important thing to be studied in connection with the discharge of the duties of an officer of the lodge is how to produce these effects. The officer who shall most thoroughly imbue the candidate with the spirit of the Order and most deeply impress upon his mind the importance of the obligations under which he has placed himself, best subserves the interests and intentions of Masonry, whether he does it by a strict regard to the words and figures of the ritual or by the enunciation of its sacred truths and sentiments by the interpolation of words not in the standard edition of the work.

It is sometimes urged against this view that it gives liberty for every officer to use his own langnage in the administration of the work of Masonry, allowing him to judge what is and what is not the most impressive form of expression in any given case. This objection is groundless because it is founded upon falsehood. We do not contend that an officer shall be under no obligation to use the approved ritual. On the contrary he should and must use it. We only claim that he shall not be deemed culpable if he uses such words as more readily occur to him while in the performance of his duties as an officer. Few of us but will willingly acknowledge that the ritual is clothed in chaste, terse and impressive language, and not many would alter or change it, even in a word. It is the result of the experience of ages, and he must be filled with self-conceit who believes himself able to improve upon its language.

But when the force of its natural and correct expression is broken by the lapse of memory to retain a particular term, it is the voice of wisdom that advises us to sacrifice the word to the effect, and to use that which more readily occurs to us. And hence we say that there is something of more importance to Masonry than a uniformity of work in every particular, and that is the effect which is to be produced upon the mind, life and conduct of the candidate by its administration.

Election of Officers.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

It is by no means true that every good Mason will make a good officer. Neither is it a fact that he who performs the duties of one station in an acceptable manner can always discharge the duties of a different office equally as well. Most men have their particular forte in which they excel while they fail to perform with the same success in other capacities. A Senior Warden who passes his chair with honor and even eclat frequently fails as a Master of a lodge.

These things should be taken into consideration when choosing the officers of a lodge. They must be considered if a lodge would have a good and efficient set of officers. There are a few men who will succeed anywhere and excel in most places, but these are rare. More frequently the mass of men do neither. This desire to put "the right man in the right place" is prevalent among our lodges, yet how seldom is the desire carried out to fruition. Intimate friendship, the weight of obligation, the fear of wounding another's feelings and sometimes the dread of incurring his displeasure, operate to prevent the full and free exercise of the members. A member is sometimes elected to office because he is a good fellow and has many personal friends; another because he has been a faithful and devoted member; the third on account of the tender regard which the brethren have for his feelings; though neither possesses, nor can acquire, the qualifications for a good officer.

It should be understood in all lodges that no member has a claim upon an office, under any circumstances. He has no claim upon the lodge beyond what is stipulated in the laws, regulations and ritual, and these do not include the gift of office. The lodge has claim upon the services of its members, but the members have no claim upon the lodge to put them in position to render service in an official capacity. If the lodge calls upon a member to act, then he may come forward, but not until then.

Were this fact fully established in the minds of members it would go far to prevent those oft-repeated mistakes in choosing incompetent officers, into which most lodges sometimes fall. Then the "good fellow" could not plead his claim because of his good qualities; the friend could not argue that friendship should be used to establish his claim; the sensitive brother could not have his tender feelings injured because his claims were not allowed. Ordinary perception will enable a member to discriminate between the capable and the incapable—between those who should be elected and those who should not. When poor or bad officers are elected, in nine cases out of ten, it is rather because of the want of reflection than the want of capacity for discernment.

Though the practice of re-election has been recommended by high authority we are not satisfied that it is good policy or beneficial to the lodge to elect the same brethren to the principal offices for a series of years. The result often is that no others in the lodge can do the work and if one of the chosen three is absent the work must stop. Within the range of our acquaintance there are several lodges in this unpleasant predicament. Not many members will take the trouble to post themselves to do the work that accident may thrust upon them.

Another evil that is wrought by the continuous election of the same persons is the lack of ambition in the aspirations of the members which it engenders. If Masonry is good for anything it is an honor worth deserving to preside over a lodge. But that privilege is forbidden to those who have the misfortune to have a perpetual Master. Though well qualified by nature and education for a seat in the East, and though the possibility of arriving there would stimulate to the highest exertions, yet the member of such a lodge must repress his aspirations until removal or death disposes of the perpetual Master and leaves the path of promotion open to the worthy.

The election of good and efficient men as officers is absolutely necessary to the prospects of a lodge. As the annual elections are approaching we throw out these hints for the benefit of whom it may concern. Let such take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

An Incident on the Plains.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

When Prof. Tytler, the distinguished historian, closed his work of delineating the history of nations, he looked back over the way which he had traveled and said, in the sadness of his heart: "History is little more than a recital of the crimes and calamities of mankind." And who, after reading any of the thousand histories which have been written, will deny the truth of the declaration. The quarrels of kings are recorded; the great battles, where much blood is shed, find a place on the historian's page; acts of cruelty are never forgotten; but the beneficence of a ruler, his triumph over evil and his vanquishment of wrong are passed lightly over, if mentioned at all.

The best part of the actual doings of mankind is never written. What renders man godlike, is passed over in silence. Good deeds are not performed with the sound of a trumpet, and therefore of them we seldom hear. Occasionally an incident transpires which reaches to and stirs up the deepest sympathies of the human soul, and the few who witness it cherish its remembrance with a sacred feeling, but seldom do the exemplifications of the true spirit of Christianity live in the memory of the great world, or grace the page of a popular historian. It is to put on record one of these incidents that the present article is written.

The tide of emigration to the Golden State was at its height. Old men and young sold their possessions and prepared to make the wearisome and dangerous journey across the plains, then consuming a whole season. Among them was one who had already passed the prime of life but he was still vigorous, and able to endure the hardships, and had courage to encounter the dangers by the way. He was a devoted Mason, and among his stores was found a few select volumes devoted to the craft. One of them was a "Monitor." When questioned by a brother why he carried that book to so wild a country, he answered, "It will be wanted, perhaps. It contains the Masonic burial service, and should I die and a brother is near enough to attend my funeral, he will see that it is duly read."

And he went his way, accompanied by several younger and apparently more hardy men, over the vast prairies that are now spanned by the iron bands and traversed in a less number of days than then months were required to perform. It was a journey that proved the temper as well as the powers of endurance of the traveler. The old emigrant saw many of his company succumb under the hardships which they were compelled to endure, still he kept on with unswerving purpose. But it is no part of our design to narrate these hardships or follow him on his wearisome way.

An autumn's descending sun found what were left of the party near the head-waters of the Humboldt river. The teams had already been correlled, the coffee urn hissed upon the hastily made fire, and a substantial meal was spread upon an adjacent bank, when one attached to the expedition brought information that just around a projecting hill an emigrant family was encamped, and appeared to be in deep distress. Leaving the supper untasted, the old emigrant went immediately to learn the situation of the family and the cause of distress.

A wagon with the common conveniences for travel, was standing upon the sands. A boy, of perhaps twelve years, was guiding a pair of half starved horses to some tufts of grass which grew on the banks of a dry run. In the shade by the wagon laid a body from which life had apparently just departed, over it bent a woman in silent and hopeless grief, while around her clung four children, too young to understand and appreciate the situation, and yet exhibiting in their countenances that they knew that a great grief had fallen upon them.

In the kindest manner—a manner so kind that it was peculiar to him—the old traveler approached, inquired into the circumstances and offered assistance. He learned that the afflicted family had started from the States in company with several others, that they had journeyed together until the husband was no longer able to travel, and that, with a selfishness that was often seen on the plains, they left them to their fate. The man lingered a few days, the wife doing all that love and duty could dictate for his recovery, but the death angel had come for him and he obeyed the summons.

And the widow, with the dead husband before her; with her little children around her, weak, hungry and helpless, and with no means to relieve their wants or remove them to a better situation, with no means even to give her husband decent burial, bent over the body as she revealed her griefs in broken utterances, and silent tears fell fast upon the dead man's face. Hope had left her, for if those who had agreed to make the journey with her had forsaken her, what reason had she to expect any more generous conduct from strangers?

Having ascertained her condition, the old emigrant gave her such consolation as was in his power. The family was removed to his own camp and their hunger assuaged. The body of the deceased was prepared for interment as well as circumstances would permit, and a coffin was constructed that would at least safely keep the remains from desecration by wild beasts. These pious duties consumed the hours until far into the night, and in the mean time the grief-stricken mother and her family had forgotten for the while, their afflictions in slumber.

In preparing the body for interment, a breast-pin was discovered upon it which rivited the attention of the old emigrant. It was a diminutive "square and compass," not upon the bosom in plain sight, but under the vest where it would not likely be noticed. It was the "sign of a Mason" to the kind old brother, and though believing that the deceased was a brother, he determined to further satisfy himself upon this point in the morning.

The sun rose bright and clear on the morrow, but long before its appearance the desired information had been obtained, and the fact ascertained that the deceased was a member in good standing of the universal brotherhood. When this information had been imparted to him, he informed the widow that the body should be consigned to the earth with Masonic ceremonies. This greatly relieved her grief-burdened heart, for she was struck with horror at the thought that the loved form should be buried with no prayer said or funeral rite performed.

A place as sheltered as possible was selected, the grave was dug, and just as the morning sun shed his rays over the sad scene, as a type of the morning of the resurrection, the little party gathered around and the deep basso voice of the old emigrant was heard reading the beautiful sentiments and comforting doctrines contained in the Masonic burrial service. Never before had those solitudes been awakened by the enunciation of the glad tidings of the resurrection; never had the voice of supplication in the mourner's behalf been heard in that lonely wilderness. Afterwards often did the good old emigrant declare that it was the most solemn ceremony that he ever witnessed.

The burial finished and the grave guarded as well as possible from intruders, the bereaved family was received into the company, assisted on the way, brought safely to their journey's end and such assistance given them as placed them in comfortable circumstances, and the last that their benefactor heard of them, which was but a short time before his own death, they were prospering and expressed the warmest gratitude to the brother who had given the husband and father a decent burial, and cared for the widow and fatherless when there was none to help them.

The "Monitor" which the brother thought to be a useless incumbrance, proved to be a valuable auxiliary in assuaging the grief of the sorely stricken family. Finally the same words, so blessed to the lone and helpless widow, pronounced with such unction by her benefactor, were read over his remains. And as they give us a lively hope of the resurrection, may we not believe that the fraternal greeting between the brothers, strangers here on earth, has already been interchanged, and the kindly feeling exhibited by the one for the family of the other has become mutual and eternal!

Such an instance as that which we have related is more honorable to the actor than a military chieftain's victory, and when the history of mankind shall be truthfully written by the pen of the recording angel, the record of such a man will be held priceless above that of king or kaiser. That history will not be a mere record of the crimes and calamities of the human race, but it will embrace the virtues and the various acts of goodness of which the world is now ignorant, and which in that day will be of more value than title, wealth or official station.

Perjurer put to Shame.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Soon after the commencement of the "Morgan affair" in western New York, sundry individuals pretending to be renouncing Masons perambulated the country and exhibited what purported to be the forms, ceremonies and ritual of Freemasonry. Among these was a man named Harlow C. Witherell, who professed to have taken the first seven degrees and to be able to communicate them in what he called "due form." He exhibited several times in Tompkins County where the writer was then residing, and created quite a furor against the Order. On one occasion he was holding forth in the town of Caroline, in the above named county. There were probably not a dozen Masons in the township and he had it pretty much all his own way, as very few members of the Fraternity attended, or troubled themselves about the matter.

But on the occasion referred to, the "antis" had prevailed upon an old Mason named McAllister to see the exhibition. He was an illiterate man, but of good natural talents, a little rough in appearance and bluff in his manners. The old man sat with his head resting on his hand, with his elbows on his knees, his face being hidden so that no one could read his thoughts. The show proceeded as usual, and at the close Witherell gave an invitation for any one who chose to controvert or confirm the exhibition which he had presented. McAllister did not move from his position until loud calls were made for him from all parts of the house. Then he slowly raised his tall gaunt form to a perpendicular, and fixing his keen eye upon the exhibitor, for a moment stood in silence. Then he very deliberately asked:

"Mr. Witherell, I understand you to say that what you have shown us here to-night is the first seven degrees of Masonry?"

"Assuredly," was the prompt reply.

"I also understand," continued the questioner, "that you have voluntarily taken upon yourself those oaths which you have pronounced here?"

"I have, sir!" again came forth with unction.

"Then," continued the old Mason, "will you tell this audience whether you perjured yourself then or whether you only lie now?"

The effect can scarcely be conceived. The audience shouted and applauded for some minutes, during which a lame attempt was made to ward off the terrible blow, and the meeting broke up with cheers for McAllister and his institution. The perjurer or liar, whichever he was, exhibited no more in Caroline.

Reminiscences by a Past Grand Lecturer.

THE FOURTH ARTICLE.

I commenced these reminiscences to give you a rare, quaint old Masonic poem, but I declare I have wandered and digressed so much that I hardly know how to get back.

And what with Bro. Hyde, Bro. Sanford, Bro. Cross and the rest, the original question appears to be in danger of being lost, like Joe Bowers' motion before the convention. He was a member of the State Convention, and, as a matter of course, had his axe to grind and—but you remind me of my promise to do better the next time and that Bro. Brown—poor fellow—still stands in the Northeast Corner, so taking pity on him we will let him tell

BRO. BROWN'S EXPERIENCE.

Before I became a Freemason,
  I thought it some damnable thing;
I thought it was witchcraft or treason;
  Some swore that the devil reigned king.
But fully determined to venture,
  Without any further delay,
With a firm resolution to enter,
  To a lodge, then, I hastened away.
I met an old friend, a relation,
  Who, I heard, was a Mason before,
To him I soon made application;
  He carried my case to the door.
He told me to tarry with patience;
  Straightway to the room did retire,
And soon he returned with an answer,
  And told me to come and prepare.

Good heavens! and how my heart panted,
  Expecting to meet with old Nick;
The report I had taken for granted
  Before my poor heart 'gan to prick.
The way that I went was mysterious,
  Tho' never a word did I spoke,
Tho' I found it a matter more serious,
  And I felt in no humor to joke.

Thro' dark, dismal paths tho' I've blunder'd,
"Lord help me!" in private I cried,
With a voice that seemed to me like thunder,
"One question my friend and my guide,"
Saying, "Brother, who's that you are leading?"
  My cause unto him he made known.
My guide was my lawyer in pleading,
  He carried my case to the throne.

With wisdom he taught me my duty,
  He gave me new light to mine eyes;
I was struck with such magical beauty,
  That filled my poor heart with surprise.
He told me that he was my brother,
  And that I had nothing to fear;
"We love and respect one another;
  So come and partake of our cheer."

But what I saw there I can't tell you,
  But this I can safely declare,
I found something good for the body;
  Believe me there's no devil there.
But this I will venture to tell you,
  But not as 'twas told unto me,
Before I went there I was blind, sirs,
  And now with both eyes I can see.

But those eyes are now closed in death, as well as those of Breth. Storer, Hyde, Pendleton and Ammy. But the influence of their lives will continue for good until time shall be no more.

And old Asylum Lodge No. 57 still lives and the same named officers serve in the several stations, only then they were boys, now they are men, imitating the examples and emulating the worthy deeds of their fathers, and if any evidence might be required that they are the noble sons of noble sires, the notice in the last TROWEL, that Asylum Lodge No. 57, Stonington, Connecticut, sent one hundred dollars to the Chicago sufferers, will be sufficient.

T.

Another Clandestine Lodge.

The trouble that has so long existed between the Grand Lodge of Hamburg and the Grand Lodges of the United States, which has been thought by some would result in an amicable adjustment, has now been dispelled by the arbitrary and unjustifiable action on the part of the Grand Lodge of Hamburg, in chartering and constituting a new lodge in the jurisdiction of New Jersey, under the name of "Lodge Zeton zum Licht No. 3." A number of years ago, that Grand Lodge constituted Pythagoras No. 1, in Brooklyn, and Franklin No. 2, in this city. This was done in the face of the protest of our own Grand Lodge, but Hamburg persisted in maintaining and supporting these lodges, and the result has been that all official recognition has been cut off, and members hailing from any lodge holding charters from the aforesaid Grand Lodge are treated as clandestine, and are not admitted into lodges in jurisdictions of the United States.

The ground taken by the Grand Lodge of Hamburg is that they have the right and will establish and constitute lodges in any jurisdiction whenever application is made for charters. This ground is untenable and must be considered by all grand lodges that acknowledge the right of jurisdiction as a Masonic usurpation. That Grand Lodge refused to withdraw the charters of Pythagoras No. 1 and Franklin No. 2, so long as these lodges expressed a desire to remain under its authority. For this reason the Grand Lodge of this State cut off its fraternal relation with the Grand Lodge of Hamburg and Masons hailing from that jurisdiction are treated as clandestine in this country, whether hailing from Pythagoras No. 1, of Brooklyn, or Franklin No. 2, of New York, or from any other lodge no matter where located that has received a charter from Hamburg.

For a long time hopes have been entertained that experience would open the eyes of the Grand Lodge of Hamburg, and that justice would be eventually done to our Grand Lodge by an acknowledgement of wrong in the invasion of our territory. But this cherished hope has now disappeared in the constituting of this new lodge at Hoboken. To those who do not understand the exact topography of the country we will say that Hoboken is in the jurisdiction of New Jersey, and is located across the river opposite this city.

It is understood that the originators of this lodge first applied to the Grand Master of the State of New Jersey for a dispensation, but it was refused. They then applied to the Grand Lodge of Hamborg and it was granted. Notice was given by one J. M. Barchard, signing himself presiding officer, and another individual named R. Bastelman, of the same stamp, as the secretary, that the installation of officers would take place last Sunday at No. 172 Washington St., Hoboken. An invitation was also extended to all German lodges in this city to participate in the ceremonies, but which, of course, was promptly refused.

The existence of these lodges here is a fixed fact. That they have received their charters from the Grand Lodge of Hamburg cannot be and is not denied. Their ultimate success depends upon the amount of material used and the means employed to obtain it.

Now we do not believe it to be our duty to remain quiet and see these clandestine concerns fostered in our midst. It is better that their standing be publicly known that those who are about seeking admission to our lodges may not be deceived.

The profane has no means of knowing what lodges are regular and what are not unless the knowledge is laid before him. If it is deemed best by some not to give them notoriety by speaking of them, we say it is wrong. If they are permitted to have their own track clear, what is there to prevent them from soliciting any or all persons that their members may come in contact with to become one of their number.

Nothing!

Their success depends on membership. And is it to be supposed for a moment that any so devoid of honor or so regardless of interrupting the friendly relations of Grand Lodges would stop to let their lodges grow up of themselves? Not much. Every one, the lame, the blind, and all objectionable material would have inducements held out to them to "jine in." Let them alone and we shall see this done. It is our duty and the duty of every Master Mason to warn all to beware of these clandestine lodges. It is necessary that every one who anticipates seeking admittance among the Fraternity should know their exact standing. It is necessary that all should know that any one made in one of these concerns can never be admitted to a regular Masonic lodge while such irregularity exists, and that it is impossible to hide their membership with one of these clandestine concerns from the remotest lodge in our sister jurisdictions. Any one knowingly seeking admittance into one of these concerns, must be excluded from the Craft. He cannot cover up his tracks. The mark of Cain will be forever on his brow; he will be laughed at, scorned and detested by all regular Masons.

To prevent this, therefore, it must be made known that these are clandestine concerns, and are not regular Masonic lodges and that Pythagoras No. 1, Franklin No. 2 and Zeton zum Licht are the ones particularly referred to. The first two named are of older date and are generally known, but this last one, with this J. M. Barchard, presiding officer, together with his deluded followers, many of whom have been drawn into his net in ignorance, is just getting under headway. To these we will here say that if they wish to be recognized as Masons outside their own lodge, they must renounce all allegiance to it, and be purified. They can exist among themselves, but as Masons they have arrived at the end of their journey.

The Grand Lodge of Hamburg, in invading the jurisdiction of the United States, is but carrying out its utopian idea of abolishing all Grand Lodges and higher degrees. "We must break with the old and form a new union," they say, "and this is the only possible way of reform." Its object appears to be to extend its authority wherever Masonry is found, regardless of any other jurisdiction. It may succeed in sustaining itself at home, but it will be knawing the file; it locks itself up in its shell, while all its subordinates are regarded as clandestine and its members are not received as Masons. No doubt this little autocrat feels his ambition too much circumscribed in his little seven-by-nine jurisdiction, with his twenty-seven lodges and membership of nearly 3,200, and thus seeks to enlarge his Masonic domain. His vanity may be gratified, but at what an expense.

All hopes of an amicable adjustment are now at an end. The action of the Grand Lodge of New Jersey is easily foreseen, as it is as jealous of its Masonic rights as any other, and it will not be behind in letting the world know that they are not to be interfered with.—Landmark.

Freemasonry Triumphant.

From "Reminiscences of Scenes in the West Indies."

BY A WEST INDIAN.

The year of grace 18— ushered into the world one of those wars between old England and France which were formerly of but too frequent occurrence. In no part of the British empire did the event create such intense excitement as in the West India Islands. The tropical heart, which is compounded of exceedingly combustible elements, was fired with volcanic heat; that is, with a heat some degrees more fierce than that which glows in our own "Southern heart." This may be accounted for on the hypothesis that Anglo-Saxon Creoles have a large share of Tipperary blood coursing through their veins, and that they vegetate many degrees nearer the equator than our American cousins.

As all advancing portentous events throw their shadows before them, the coming Anglo-Galican war was clearly discerned by the inhabitants of Virgin Gorda, one of the Virgin islands, and more joyfully anticipated than would have been the wreck of a dozen Spanish galleons on their coraline reefs, or even of a fight between two squadrons of Kilkenny cats. While the mass of the male population were preparing their arms and accoutrements for the coming fray, others were more wealthy or desirous of becoming so at the enemy's expense, were fitting out fast-sailing vessels, as privateers, to intercept and appropriate a part of the commerce of France. Chief among the latter class was as genuine a specimen of Milesian humanity as ever

> "Kissed his Cathleen,
> Or bruised a spalpeen."

This individual was parson Audain, Rector of St. George's Church, in Virgin Gorda. It is no more than justice to say that "his riverence" was not only thoroughly orthodox in his religious creed, but a very learned man, as the very significant D. D. accompanying his name amply testified. In short, the reverend doctor was esteemed the "prince of good fellows" by his compeers, and a special favorite with all classes of people. He was acknowledged, also, to be the possessor of the best old Madeira, and the fastest yacht, in the Virgin Islands.

About a week prior to the declaration of hostilities between the two great rival nations, Mr. Audain had armed and manned his beautiful schooner, which was facetiously named "The Sexton," "just for the oddity of the thing, you know."

On the following Sabbath, while the reverend Boanerges was engaged in his ministerial duties in church, a strange darkey, in seamen's costume, cautiously approached and opened the door of the sacred edifice, signaling the colored janitor within, slipped a letter into his hand, whispered a few words in his ear and vanished. The sub-official, impressed with the belief that the immediate delivery of the missive was of vital importance to his superior, advanced on tip-toe along the aisle, and ascending the pulpit steps, deferentially placed the letter on the cushion, in front of the pastor, and retired. During one or two impressive pauses, improvised for the occasion, parson Audain contrived to manipulate the mysterous document so dexterously as to become acquainted with its contents. An abrupt cessation of the exercises followed. The reverend gentleman deliberately divested himself of his gown, thrust the letter in his pocket,

> "Closed his book,
> His flock forsook,"

and was hurrying from the church, when he suddenly halted, retraced his steps and thrusting his head inside the church door, thus addressed his bewildered congregation:

"My Christian friends, a matter perhaps of life and death—or it may be of greater importance—summons me from you. At some more propitious time I will return and finish my discourse. I scorn to take an unjust advantage of any of you. I have just received an official announcement of the declaration of war by France against England. As a leader of the hosts of Israel, I go to meet the uncircumcised Philistines. The sword of the Lord and of Gideon! and the d—l catch the hindmost. D. I. O.!"

In one hour thereafter, parson Audain's privateer, with her owner on board, was ploughing the "vasty deep" in search of her prey.

Early one morning on the third week of her cruise, the privateer was hailed by the British sloop-of-war Vampire. Audain personally answered the challenge of her commander.

"Hallo! Audain, is that you?" shouted Captain Talbot through his speaking trumpet. "Taking a cruise, eh! I shall report you to the Bishop of London."

"Do so, sir," was the rejoinder, "and present my delightful regards to his lordship. We are both free-booters, with this difference: he preys on his countrymen, while I levy contributions on their enemies."

A few hours thereafter, chase was given to a French ship, which, although a merchantman, was armed, and made a gallant but futile resistance. Preparatory to going on board his prize, Audain accosted the Sexton's steward with, "sun's crossed the main-yard, Cupidon!" (a nautical phrase, announcing the hour of noon).

"Yes, sah, massa; boy know it sah; but de rum all done, massa."

"The rum done! Bad business, that. Hand me a glass of sangaree, then."

"Oh! massa, de wine all done, too, sah."

"Captain Wyatt," said parson Audain, addressing his first officer, "necessity compels me to become a member of the cold water society. The finger of God is in this. I accept the situation. Write me down a Baptist—not a hard-shell, though—in to-day's log."

On entering the French vessel's cabin, parson Audain was startled by the scene that was there presented to view. On a table lay the dead body of the late French commander, pierced through the heart by a bullet, while the strikingly handsome figure of his wife hung over it in speechless agony. After a considerable interval of time, Audain respectfully demanded the keys of two trunks that attracted his notice. They were surrendered without a word. On opening the nearest one, the first object that presented itself to the gentleman's view was—a Freemason's apron! For fully two minutes Mr. Audain contemplated the talismanic emblem in silent awe; then slowly and carefully re-locking the trunk he returned the keys to the lady, saying:

"Madam, your husband was a Freemason. So am I. I extremely regret the spectacle before me. I surrender to you your vessel and all that it contains. Farewell, lady."

A moment or two afterward, he stood on the quarter-deck of his own vessel.

"Captain Wyatt," said he, "write me down a Christian, in your log of to-day. The hand of God is in this day's doings, and his eye pierced my heart as soon as I unfolded that Mason's apron!"

GEN. J. C. Smith, of Galena, is Grand Master of the I. O. O. F. He is a first-class man and we hope to see him Grand Master of Masons. Just such men as he are wanted.

Proposed Constitution of the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois, as Amended and Seconded by the Grand Lodge and Submitted to the Lodges for Adoption.

WHEREAS, Every Grand Lodge is sovereign within its prescribed jurisdiction, and possesses the inherent power to form a Constitution, as the law of its Masonic action; to amend or alter the same; to enact by-laws from time to time, and to make such rules and prescribe such regulations for the administration of its subordinate lodges as will insure the prosperity thereof and promote the general good of Masonry. And

WHEREAS, Every Grand Lodge is the representative of all the Fraternity in communication therewith, and in that behalf is an absolute, independent body, with supreme legislative, executive and judicial authority: Provided always, That the ancient landmarks of the Institution be held inviolate. Therefore, upon these principles, which are indisputable, the Grand Lodge of Illinois does hereby ORDAIN, ESTABLISH and PROMULGATE the following Constitution for its future government:

ARTICLE I.

This Grand Lodge shall hereafter be known by the name and style of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, of the State of Illinois.

ARTICLE II.

OF WHOM IT CONSISTS.

The Grand Lodge shall consist of a Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, Senior Grand Warden, Junior Grand Warden, Grand Treasurer, Grand Secretary, Grand Chaplain, Grand Orator, Deputy Grand Secretary, Grand Pursuivant, Grand Marshal, Grand Standard Bearer, Grand Sword Bearer, Senior Grand Deacon, Junior Grand Deacon, four Grand Stewards, Grand Tyler, thirty District Deputy Grand Masters, together with the Worshipful Masters and Wardens of the chartered lodges duly constituted, under its jurisdiction; and such Past Grand Masters, Past Deputy Grand Masters, Past Grand Wardens and Past Masters as shall be present and are members of subordinate lodges in Illinois.

No Grand Officer shall officiate in the station to which he may be elected until he has been legally installed.

ARTICLE III

MEETINGS.

The Grand Lodge shall hold a stated communication once every year, at such time and in such place as may be designated in its by-laws.

ARTICLE IV.

QUORUM.

The Grand Lodge shall not be opened unless there be present the representatives from at least twenty of the chartered lodges; nor shall any business be done until there be present the representatives from at least fifty of the chartered lodges; less than a quorum may assemble until noon of the second day, when, if less than fifty chartered lodges are represented, the Grand Master shall declare the Grand Lodge closed until the next grand annual communication in course, in which case the Grand Officers will hold over for another term.

ARTICLE V.

STYLE AND RANK OF GRAND OFFICERS.

The officers of the Grand Lodge shall be styled and take rank as follows:

Most Worshipful Grand Master.
Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master.
Right Worshipful Senior Grand Warden.
Right Worshipful Junior Grand Warden.
Right Worshipful Grand Treasurer.
Right Worshipful Grand Secretary.
Right Worshipful Grand Chaplain.
Right Worshipful Grand Orator.
Right Worshipful District Deputy Grand Master.
Worshipful Deputy Grand Secretary.
Worshipful Grand Pursuivant.
Worshipful Grand Marshal.
Worshipful Grand Standard Bearer.
Worshipful Grand Sword Bearer.
Worshipful Grand Senior Deacon.
Worshipful Grand Junior Deacon.
Worshipful Grand Steward.
Brother Grand Tyler.

ARTICLE VI.

STYLE AND RANK OF MEMBERS, REPRESENTATIVES, MASTERS AND OTHER OFFICERS.

Past Grand Masters shall be styled Most Worshipful; Past Deputy Grand Masters and Past Grand Wardens shall be styled Right Worshipful: representatives of foreign grand lodges shall be styled Right Worshipful; Past Masters and representatives of lodges shall be styled Worshipful; Grand Lecturers shall be styled Right Worshipful, and Masters of lodges shall be styled Worshipful. Style and rank may be assigned to other brethren by law.

ARTICLE VII.

ELIGIBILITY.

No brother shall be eligible to or hold office in this Grand Lodge who is not, at the time of election or appointment, a member in regular standing of a chartered lodge subordinate to this Grand Lodge. And no brother shall be eligible to the offices of Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, Grand Warden or District Deputy Grand Master, who has not been duly elected and installed, and has presided over a subordinate lodge.

ARTICLE VIII.

VOTES, ELECTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS.

SECTION 1. At each regular annual communication there shall be elected, on or before the second day, by ballot, a Grand Master, a Deputy Grand Master, a Senior Grand Warden, a Junior Grand Warden, a Grand Treasurer and a Grand Secretary. All other Grand Officers shall be appointed by the Grand Master elect.

SEC. 2. In all elections, and in all questions before the Grand Lodge, each lodge shall be entitled to three votes, the Grand Master to one vote, the Deputy Grand Master to one vote, each Grand Warden to one vote, the Grand Treasurer to one vote, The Grand Secretary to one vote, each Past Grand Master to one vote, the Past Deputy Grand Masters to one vote collectively, the Past Grand Wardens to one vote collectively, and the Past Masters to one vote collectively. No representative of a lodge shall vote as a Grand Officer.

SEC. 3. In case a lodge has but one representative present, he shall cast three votes; if two representatives be present, the highest in rank shall cast two votes, and the lowest one; if three representatives be present, they shall cast but one vote each.

SEC. 4. The yeas and nays shall be ordered upon the demand of twenty representatives. In taking the yeas and nays, the lodges in their order shall be called first, the members secondly and the Grand Officers last. In all votes and elections a majority shall govern, unless otherwise provided by law.

ARTICLE IX.

VACANCIES.

SECTION 1. In the case of the death, absence or disability of the Grand Master, the Deputy Grand Master shall fill his place; in the case of the death, absence or disability of the Grand Master and the Deputy Grand Master, the Senior Grand Warden shall fill the place of the Grand Master; in the case of the absence or disability of all three, the Junior Grand Warden shall fill the place of the Grand Master, and in the case of the death, absence or disability of all of the above Grand Officers, the Master of the oldest lodge shall be Grand Master.

SEC. 2. All vacancies shall be filled by the Grand Master. The office of Grand Master is never vacant.

ARTICLE X.

SOVEREIGNTY AND JURISDICTION.

SECTION 1. This Grand Lodge is the only source of authority, and exercises exclusive jurisdiction in all matters pertaining to Ancient Craft Masonry in the State of Illinois.

SEC. 2. Any organizations, associations, parties or persons, professing to have any authority, powers or privileges in Ancient Craft Masonry, not derived from this Grand Lodge, within the State of Illinois, are declared to be clandestine, and all intercourse with, or recognition of them, or any of them, is prohibited.

ARTICLE XI.

POWERS OF THE GRAND LODGE.

SECTION 1. This Grand Lodge may

First—Grant dispensations and charters for holding regular lodges of Free and Accepted Masons with the right to confer therein the several degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason, and when deemed expedient and for good cause, may annul, revoke or amend such dispensation or charter, or any pre-existing dispensation or charter.

This Grand Lodge has

Second—Original and exclusive jurisdiction over all subjects of Masonic legislation and administration; appellate judicial and administrative jurisdiction from the decisions of Worshipful Masters, and from the decisions and acts of lodges, and, when expedient, has original judicial jurisdiction over its officers, members and Worshipful Masters; and its enactments and decisions upon all questions shall be the supreme Masonic law of the State.

This Grand Lodge may

Third—Assign the limits and fix the location of each lodge under its jurisdiction, and settle all controversies that may arise between them, and has the final decision and determination of all matters of controversies or grievances which may be brought up by appeal or otherwise.

Fourth—It may make and adopt general laws and regulations for the government of the several lodges under its jurisdiction, and at pleasure may alter, amend or repeal the same.

Fifth—It may assess and collect from the several lodges under its jurisdiction, such sums of money annually as may be provided for by law and found necessary for the support and maintenance of the Grand Lodge.

Sixth—It may supervise the state and condition of its own finances, and adopt such measures in relation thereto as may be deemed necessary.

Seventh—It may reprimand, suspend or expel any member from its own body for a violation of the constitution, by-laws and regulations of the Grand Lodge, or for any other unmasonic conduct; and may suspend or expel any accused person upon trial by appeal.

This Grand Lodge shall

Eighth—At each annual communication consider and review the reports and doing of its Grand Officers for the past year, as well as those of its several lodges, under its jurisdiction.

This Grand Lodge may

Ninth—Establish a mileage and per diem rate for its officers, the representative highest in rank from each lodge, and its standing committees, not exceeding five cents per mile each way, and two dollars per day.

Tenth—And finally may do whatsoever may be considered necessary to the well-being and perpetuity of Ancient Craft Masonry.

ARTICLE XII.

POWERS OF THE GRAND MASTER.

The Grand Master has the power

First—To convene the Grand Lodge in special communication, in case of emergency.

Second—To preside at all special and regular communications.

Third—To exercise the executive functions of the Grand Lodge when not in session.

Fourth—To decide all questions of usage, order and Masonic law.

Fifth—To require the attendance of, and information from any Grand Officer respecting his office.

Sixth—To convene any lodge within the jurisdiction, and, in person or by deputy, to preside therein with the Master on his left hand, inspect their proceedings and require their conformity to Masonic rules.

Seventh—To issue his dispensation to any regular lodge to make a Mason, or confer any degree at sight.

Eighth—To suspend the functions of any lodge for good reasons.

Ninth—To command every Grand Officer, and to call on any of them for advice and assistance, on business relative to the Craft.

Tenth—In person or by deputy, to constitute lodges, dedicate Masonic halls, lay corner stones of Masonic halls, public buildings and structures.

Eleventh—To appoint representatives, by warrant, in any other Grand Lodge, and receive and accredit such representatives from other recognized Grand Lodges.

Twelfth—To command the Wardens or any member of a lodge where he may visit, to act as Wardens for the time being.

Thirteenth—To see that the ancient landmarks and charges are observed, and to do and perform the duties of Ancient Grand Masters, agreeably to the requirements of Masonry and this Grand Lodge.

ARTICLE XIII.

NEW LODGES.

SECTION 1. During the recess of the Grand Lodge the Grand Master may grant dispensations for new lodges.

SEC. 2. No dispensation shall be issued by order of the Grand Lodge or by the Grand Master, in any city or town having three or more chartered lodges, (except the city of Chicago,) without the recommendation of the three oldest lodges, nor in any other place without the recommendation of the three nearest lodges.

SEC. 3. No petition for a new lodge shall be considered by any lodge until it has laid over four weeks for consultation and consideration.

SEC. 4. No dispensation for a new lodge shall be issued until the sum of one hundred dollars shall be paid to the Grand Secretary, which shall be in full for dispensation and charter fees.

SEC. 5. Every petition for a new lodge shall be signed by eight Master Masons, accompanied by a certificate from a Grand Lecturer, that the proposed Master is able to open and close a lodge, and to confer the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason correctly and in full, with a plat and description of the halls and ante-rooms to be occupied, and statement in regard to the ownership and use of the same.

SEC. 6. No new lodges shall be established in towns or cities as follows:

Where the population is less than 3,000, and there is one lodge; less than 6,000, and two lodges; less than 10,000, with three lodges; after which no new lodge shall be formed without an addition of 5,000 population for each one.

SEC. 7. No dispensation or charter, for constituting a new lodge, shall be granted to any person or persons whomsoever, residing out of the State of Illinois if within the jurisdiction of any other constitutional Grand Lodge.

ARTICLE XIV.

DISTRICTS AND DISTRICT DEPUTIES.

SECTION 1. Immediately upon the adoption of this Constitution, the Grand Master shall divide the State into thirty districts, having regard to population, lodges and convenience. Said districts shall remain so until the year A. L. 5880, when the Grand Master shall divide the State into districts again, and so on once in every ten years.

SEC. 2. One District Deputy Grand Master shall be appointed and commissioned annually by the Grand Master, in each district. Each deputy shall be a resident of his respective district, and a member of some lodge therein.

SEC. 3. The duties of the said District Deputies shall be such as the Grand Master may generally or especially assign them, and may be defined by law.

ARTICLE XV.

INSTRUCTION.

The Grand Master shall provide for thorough instruction in the work and lectures already established by this Grand lodge.

ARTICLE XVI.

AMENDMENTS.

SECTION 1. This Constitution may be amended in the following manner only: The proposed alteration, addition or amendment must be submitted in writing at some regular communication; if seconded by the Grand Lodge, it shall be entered upon the proceedings, and in some convenient form duly certified, shall be immediately submitted to the several subordinate lodges for their approval or rejection; if approved by two-thirds of the lodges, such amendment or alteration shall thenceforth be a part of the Constitution, whereof the Grand Master shall cause due proclamation to be made.

SEC. 2. The by-laws of this Grand Lodge may be amended in the following manner:

Every alteration, addition or amendment shall be proposed in writing, at a regular communication of the Grand Lodge; if seconded by twenty representatives, the amendment shall lie over one year, be printed in the minutes, and if adopted by a two-thirds vote, it shall become a part of the by-laws.

SEC. 3. Regulations, rules of order, code of jurisprudence and standing resolutions, may be repealed, altered or amended at any regular communication, by a vote of three-fifths of the legal voters present.

General Grand Masonic Bodies.

The triennial session of the Grand Encampment and the General Grand Chapter of the United States in Baltimore, last month, was an occasion of deep interest to Masons throughout our country.

The General Grand Chapter, M. E. James M. Austin, G. G. H. Priest, presiding, met at the Masonic Temple on Tuesday, September 19th, and closed on the 20th. The attendance was good and the session harmonious.

The G. G. H. Priest in his address alluded to the wishes and efforts of companions in various jurisdictions for the dissolution of the General Grand Chapter and ably urged the insufficiency of the reasons assigned therefor. He was able to report that since the last triennial session the Grand Chapters of Florida, Iowa, Vermont and North Carolina had pledged allegiance to the General Grand Chapter and that under its authority new chapters had been established in New Mexico, Nevada, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, Colorado, Shanghai in Chnia and Honolulu in the Sandwich Islands.

No action was had, or motion made, tending to the dissolution of the General Grand Body. Indeed, the impression was that the amendment making Past Grand High Priests members of the General Grand Chapter was a death blow to all movements of that nature.

The four Grand Chapters above named were represented, as was Rhode Island in fact, though her representatives took no active part in the proceedings. All the Grand Chapters in allegiance, except Oregon, were represented: Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Texas and Virginia are the only ones who now withhold their allegiance and the views are favorable in relation to the most of them.

The officers elected were:

Josiah H. Drummond, of Maine, G. G. H. P.
E. H. English, of Arkansas, D. G. G. H. P.
Charles H. Ohr, of Maryland, G. G. K;
Charles Marsh, of California, G. G. S.
John McClellan, of Massachusetts, G. G. Treas.
Christopher G. Fox, of New York, G. G. Sec.
Joseph Yentes, G. G. C. of H.
DeWitt C. Dawkins, of Florida, G. G. R. A. C.

The Constitution was changed so as to make Past Grand High Priests members of the General Grand Chapter.

An attempt was made to strike the P. M. from the list of chapter degrees, but it was decided to retain it.

The proper Royal Arch Word was determined upon, and will be uniform throughout the country.

The question of substitutes was fully discussed; and it was held that their use is not contrary to the landmarks or to ancient usage, but should be avoided if it can be without much inconvenience.

A vote was passed requesting the several Grand Chapters to pay annually a sum equal to one per cent. for each member in their respective jurisdictions, to defray the cost of printing proceedings and other necessary expenses of the General Grand Chapter.

The next meeting is to be held at Nashville, Tenn., on the last Tuesday of November, 1874.

The Grand Encampment met at eleven in the forenoon of September 19th, M. E. William Sewall Gardner, G. M., presiding. The Sir Knights were welcomed to Baltimore by M. W. John H. Latrobe, Grand Master of Masons, in a neat speech, to which Grand Master Gardner appropriately responded.

After the Committee on Credentials reported, the Grand Master delivered a brief address, in which he contrasted the condition of the Order at the time the last triennial conclave was held in Baltimore (1832), with its condition at the present time. Five thousand copies of this address were ordered to be published.

The next forenoon was devoted to the reading of his report, the appointment of committees and the reception and reference of memorials, &c., to facilitate which the States were called in order. Grand Commander Dickey was appointed upon the Special Committee upon Tactics, Uniform and Ritual; Sir Knight Drummond was chairman of Committee upon Masonic Jurisprudence, and Sir Knight Berry was on the Committee upon Memorials of the Dead.

The address of the Grand Master was of considerable length and great ability, and it is impossible to give even a synopsis of it; but our Sir Knights will have an opportunity of examining it, as measures were taken to supply each Commandery with at least one copy of the proceedings. Quite an amount of business was transacted, some of the more important items of which we notice briefly.

One memorial to make the Council Degrees pre-requisite to the Orders of Knighthood, was referred to the Committee on Jurisprudence before the appointment of the Special Committee on Ritual, &c.; but a resolution to the same effect was indefinitely postponed. The Committee on Jurisprudence reported, referring this matter, as well as a proposition to strike the order of the Red Cross from the System of Knighthood, to the Committee on Ritual, which, however, made no report in reference to them.

The Committee on Tactics, &c., made a majority and minority report: the former defined the uniform even to the cut of the coat, and was indefinitely postponed; the latter, signed by Sir Knights Dickey, of Maine, and Carpenter, of Wisconsin, proposed the substitution of the black belt for the red one, and made some suggestions as to tactics, &c. It was discussed somewhat and ordered to be printed with the proceedings and the further consideration of it postponed to the next triennial conclave.

A resolution offered by Sir Knight Drummond, that would allow our Grand Commandery to establish in this State either the white or the black uniform, was amended after discussion, by a small majority, in such manner as to limit its effect to the white uniform, and then was indefinitely postponed.

An invitation was received from the Sir Knights of Washington to visit that city on Friday, and a motion to decline it was lost by a vote of 27 to 30, taken by rising; but a motion to accept it was, after some remarks, also lost by a yea and nay vote of some four to one! Whether the remarks produced the change, or calling the yeas and nays did it, this deponent saith not!

The Committee on fixing place for next Conclave reported in favor of Chicago, but their report was recommitted, with instructions to name New Orleans and the first Tuesday of December as the place and time.

An annual tax of three cents for each Sir Knight in the jurisdiction was ordered to be assessed

The representatives of the Grand Commandery of Virginia, supported their request to be allowed to withdraw their allegiance by a very eloquent and able speech, but their request was denied by a nearly unanimous vote. Indeed, the sentiment was that the Grand Encampment was less disposed than ever before to adopt any measures looking to its dissolution, and the body is really stronger than ever before, in its support from the Sir Knights of the country.

A pleasant episode was the visit and reception of Sir David Ramsey in full costume, as the representative of the Grand Priory of Canada.

Sir Knights Hopkins, of Pennsylvania; Drummond, of Maine; Hornor, of Louisiana; Parvin, of Iowa, and English, of Arkansas, were appointed a Committee to compile a Digest of Templar law, to report at the next conclave.

Thursday was devoted to a grand parade and review, with between 3,000 and 4,000 Sir Knights in the line. The prize for perfection of drill was awarded to Detroit Commandery No. 1, of Michigan, under command of Sir Knight Garfield, author of the work on tactics, the superiority of which was thus practically tested.

We have no space to tell of the banquets, the grand hospitality of the Sir Knights and indeed all the citizens of Baltimore, the complaisance of the ladies, justly so renowned for grace and loveliness, or the beauty of the city and its surroundings. It seemed as if the days and manners of chivalry had come again.

We have room only for the names of the elective members, viz:

John Q. A. Fellows, of Louisiana, M. E. G. Master.
James H. Hopkins, of Pennsylvania, R. E. D. G. Master.
Vincent L. Hurlbut, of Illinois, G. Generalissimo.
Benjamin Dean, of Massachusetts, G. C. General.
John W. Simons, of New York, G. T.
T. S. Parvin, of Iowa, G. Recorder.
Irving M. Smith, of Michigan, S. G. Warden.
William S. Patton, of Mississippi, J. G. Warden.—Masonic Token.

About Marrying.

Occasionally young men of good character, indulge in gloomy doubts concerning the average American woman, but such doubts can easily be traced to disappointed affection, or perhaps it may be produced by the horrors of a cheap boarding house. Marriage is sanctified by God and common sense. It is the only means whereby a young man in this country can hope to lead a respectable and cleanly life. But there are two classes who are exempt from its joys and its sorrows.

If you, young man, are deaf, dumb, lame, blind and idiotic, and if your ancestors have been such, or if you are so mean that your life is that of a friendless, snarling cur, and you feel that you could not be anything else, even to your wife, you can stand aside.

If you, young man, have conceived that ambition, so common, nowadays, of being a "fast man;" if you have made up your mind to keep a fast horse and a concubine; if your idea of happiness is to have your hands full of cards and your stomach full of oysters: if you, in short, have made your arrangements to go straight to perdition, without change of cars, you had better not marry. You will spend the money that an honorable man lavishes upon a home and its "light and life," on painted creatures who drag your polluted name through every sink in the land; who will display the jewelry and the gifts you have bestowed on them, and curse you, with a glib, round oath, for a spooney and a fool. You, too economical to marry, will have plenty to spend on long haired cut-throats, who will leave you at last, it may be, to die wifeless, amid the dust and cob-webs of the garret.—Fanny Fern.

OUR exchanges from Chicago come shorn and diminished, but plucky and spirited. One good omen is the disposition to re-build the city more thoroughly every way.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

IS PUBLISHED BETWEEN THE FIRST AND FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH.

Price per year, - - - - - - $1.25.

THE TROWEL is the oldest Masonic journal in America now published in its present form, and is again presented to the Masonic Fraternity for renewed and generous support.

It has ever been the organ of the masonic people and their families—such it will remain. It has been the friend and advocate of law, order, morality, intelligence—of improvement, progress and toleration, and will continue so to be.

It is now printed on new type, superior paper, and will give the latest Masonic tidings.

But three pages of the paper will be given to advertisements; but, if sufficient inducement be offered, a cover will be added and made a part of the paper for that purpose.

Advertisements for one month, payable in advance; for three months, payable one-half in advance and the remainder after the first insertion; for six months or longer, payable one-third in advance, the remainder quarterly.

The space usually occupied by eight lines of nonpareil type, solid, will be regarded as one square, or, twelve squares to each column.

Equitable charges will be made for changes, alterations or withdrawals.

Orders for advertisements from abroad should state how much space is desired.

Editorial notices will in all cases be written by ourself, and charged for at the rate of one dollar for every ten words or less, payable in advance. The request for editorial notice should be accompanied by the money for the number of words desired, in no case exceeding fifty.

Any one who fails to pay bills when due without an acceptable excuse, will have his or their advertisement thrown out with an editorial notice to that effect. Suspension of business is a sufficient excuse.

No advertisement received from irresponsible houses nor for an immoral or disreputable business, and I reserve to myself the right to reject all such.

No one is authorized to receive any advertisement for me except by my written authority, nor will any advertisement be received without the written authority of the party ordering it.

Annual Elections.

We fraternally call attention to the remarks of Bro. Rounseville in this number of THE TROWEL concerning the election of officers. Of course every lodge is free to choose its officers within the limitations prescribed by Masonic law, and no restriction occurs to us, except in the choice of a Master, who must have served a regular course as Master or Warden. One position taken by Bro. Rounseville will probably admit of qualification, leaving the main point as he has stated it, in general terms, correct.

Oftentimes the material in a lodge—all good for some purpose—affords but few persons, and sometimes scarcely any, who are fit for Master. We have known brethren who knew every word of the work, who could detect every departure from the standard in utterance and action, who could work correctly nowhere; who would blunder in every place, and whose sorry performances would only create confusion and excite pity for the brother doing the very best he could. And yet they may have been the salt of the lodge, who should never allow themselves to act in any place requiring any participation in work, if it can be avoided, but whose presence and countenance is like the dew of Hermon. All this is peculiarly true of some small or youthful lodges. What we have often stated before, we state again. The election of every officer should be the unbiased judgment of the lodge. Every election effected by combinations, corrupt practices, or even over-zealous electioneering should be set aside. How often do we hear it said that the brethren do not support their Master. If all the facts connected with his election could be known, there would be no wonder about it. When the worthy men of substance who have contributed liberally to build up a lodge; when the members of education and talents, who have lent their aid to give it character and standing, find that the brethren have elected the weakest ones to the offices, and the whole is the result of combination, or effected by falsehood or partizanship, and that their ruler is jealous, ambitious or arbitrary, unfit to preside, unqualified to work, and unworthy of respect, is it at all singular that brethren who have delighted to work in unity under a capable Master should refuse to contribute to the triumph of unworthy men—men who have gained admission through their good nature and mistaken charity to confederate together to accomplish their own purposes, regardless of all consequences. The question may be asked can such things possibly exist in a Masonic lodge? We answer that such things exist in churches and in church High Places; they have ever so existed; and we are pained to admit that such is the case in Masonic affairs. Nothing is gained by covering up. Facts have come to our knowledge justifying the belief that there are lodges in this jurisdiction where the unworthy bear rule. The temper of the American people is favorable just now to the exposure of public corruption and the punishment of corrupt men. We hope that this spirit may enter every lodge, and that every incapable, arbitrary, jealous and unworthy brother may be thrust out and kept out of office. We want no profane swearers, no frequenters of drinking saloons or places of doubtful repute, no men of questionable veracity or honor, in any station in our lodges, and if a lodge has not enough of good men to fill the places, or if brethren of the baser sort see fit to elect their kind, that lodge is not fit to live, and if permitted to live will in some form prove to be useless and worthless and become a stench in the nostrils of every honest Mason!

And now is the time for every good Mason to act and for every brother who wishes to maintain a good character for his lodge to act—and to act in earnest. Let in the light of the sun at high meridian, brethren!

Every rule has an exception. The principle that every election should be unbiased, is correct. But if unworthy, incompetent or unfit brethren endeavor to obtain control of a lodge, it is the duty of every good man to prevent it if he can; watchfulness is a Masonic duty and self-defence justifiable. Above all things, brethren, put a man of good repute in the East. No amount of wealth, no commanding ability, no sum of human learning will justify the selection of an unworthy man for Master. By him will your lodge be judged more than by all things else. Rotation in office by all means, where character and fitness will justify it, otherwise RE-ELECT.

Order of the Eastern Star.

Our connection with this Order has been manifest to our readers for many months past. But we have refrained from any open advocacy of its value and necessity in these columns only so far as the selected opinions and narratives of others may have indicated our feelings.

The time has come to take a stand. We shall do so without regard to open or avowed opposition, but also without regard to covert meanness, unmanly sneers or mawkish sentimentality. We hope to do this as a Mason should, manfully, honestly and modestly.

It will be said that we have heretofore opposed the Order of the Eastern Star! When? Where? We stand by all we have said, so far as the Eastern Star itself is concerned; the objection we urged was to its fugitive, transient and unorganized condition. Upon invitation we received the degrees from R. W. Bro. Macoy and examined into the merits and intent of the organization of the National Grand Chapter of the Eastern Star, with its center in New York city. We saw at once how they could be utilized and be made immensely advantageous to women, incidentally so to brethren and a powerful adjunct to Masonry itself.

We will be met again by honest, well intended brethren, with the remark that it is an innovation upon the body of Masonry—that its real intent is to give ladies Masonic privileges. We intend, before we close the articles we have now commenced, to elaborate that matter at some length. But we state once for all that this Order is not Masonry; that it does not interfere with it, but that its main intent is to secure to every woman embraced in a Master Mason's covenant, the immutable and inalienable rights and privileges to which she is entitled. Instead of weakening Masonry it fortifies, supports and strengthens it.

We are met with another argument, that it is another name for "Woman's Rights." With the political aspects of that question this publication has nothing to do—neither has the Order of the Eastern Star. It provides the wives, mothers, sisters, daughters and widows of Master Masons the means of recognition; hence, it will readily be seen that our brethren are as vitally, socially and pecuniarily interested as the women themselves.

Having disposed of these matters we are prepared to enter upon a consideration of the utility, necessity and humanizing character of this Order.

And here, in starting, we reject all uncandid, evasive or indirect modes of dealing with this matter. The love and veneration we owe to our loving, sainted mother, demand of us to speak candidly and to treat women with tenderness, respect and Truth.

We shall proceed with this subject in future numbers.

R. W. Bro. William Rounseville.

One of the modest men in the Fraternity; a brother of true nobility; formerly a minister, but for several years past an editor of one of our political papers. About fifteen years since the Odd Fellows made him their Grand Master and no one has ever excelled him in that capacity.

At that time he was not a Mason, but he entered Peoria Lodge soon after and was rapidly raised to the East. Removing to his old home at St. Charles, he became Master of Unity No. 48, and now, after several years' residence in Peoria a second time, he is W. M. of Illinois Lodge No. 263. [illegible] report last year as chairman of the committee on Correspondence was a model; brief, yet full; apt, scholarly and clear.

His writings in THE TROWEL, have been copied with commendation into the Masonic publications, at home and abroad, that come to our table.

It will be found upon inspection of his articles that he has a remarkable command of the common and expressive words in use; that there is an entire absence of effort or display, but that he writes sensibly, easily, correctly and elegantly, and every critic will readily admit that the very first sentence in any article discloses complete knowledge of the subject in hand, and just as much familiarity with the concluding sentence as with the opening one.

We have set apart from three to four pages for every number for the "William Rounseville department." Whatever may be said of the merits of other editors or writers, no one who has carefully read Bro. Rounseville's articles will say that he has any superior.

Calvin H. Flower.

This excellent brother and amiable gentlemen died very suddenly a few days since, in the meridian of manhood, surrounded by the most alluring domestic and social relations and prospects, leaving behind him a wife and child. He was a Past Master of Central Lodge and an exemplary member of the Congregational church. He will be remembered as our clerk at the Grand Secretary's desk in Grand Lodge for several years.

Kent Jarvis.

The November number of the Review —which is an excellent one—has a striking likeness of one of nature's noblemen, Sir Kent Jarvis, of Massillon, Ohio. He has long been a faithful Mason and has served in many distinguished stations. From the position of Grand Commander in Ohio he passed to the positions of G. Capt. General and Grand Generalissimo in the National body.

Now, at seventy years of age, he enjoys a generous competency, excellent domestic relations, and the love of his fellow Christians, brother Masons and good neighbors.

An Old Mason.

On the 5th of September, 1871, the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Ebenezer Shaw, a committee of Rural Amity Lodge No. 70, at Athens, Penn., visited him, and one of the members delivered a beautiful address. The venerable brother was initiated in a lodge near his residence, Nov. 17th, 1801. It was among the early members of that lodge that arrangements were made which terminated a fearful strife among claimants holding adverse titles to lands under Connecticut and Pennsylvania. Over seventy years a Mason!

R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson.

The attention of brethren is requested to the advertisement of Bro. Thomson, in this number. He proposes to deliver his lectures on Scenes in the Holy Land and in and around Jerusalem, and his visits to English lodges. Having heard both lectures, we most cordially indorse them and hope that he may receive many calls. And in this connection it is proper to speak of our former relations. We are both positive men and during our differences some years ago we went wide apart. At this time we can say that we intended nothing wrong or even unkind, but we do not see now as we did then. We stand by our positions then taken, but all the bitterness and enmity we discard. If we are both positive men, the occasion offered for conference, the past was buried and we are friends. We are not at enmity now with any one; life is too short for enmities and, God helping us, they shall never again live in our heart.

Grand Commander.

We attended the Grand Commandery on the fourth Tuesday in October, held in Cleveland hall, in Chicago. Neither time or space will permit any comments upon the proceedings, but all our readers will learn with pride of the elevation of the spartan sailor and eminent citizen, Sir Wiley M. Egan, to the position of Grand Commander. We served under him one year as Grand High Priest and never served a better man.

ALEX. F. BLOHEIM, born at St. Petersburg in 1776, was made a Mason in 1806, and died recently at Fort Wayne at the age of 95 years.

Prompt Action.

The next day after the fire M. E. Comp. Jas. A. Hawley, G. H. Priest of the Grand Chapter, issued an appeal to the chapters, beautiful in expression, full of noble sentiments and pure charity, worthy of the man and of the imposing body he represents.

Miriam Chapter No. 1,

Eastern Star, at Chicago, lost everything. It was a fine body but most of its members are now destitute. They desire to start again and would gladly receive any contributions from associate chapters or their members to enable them to "rise again." We trust they will receive some help from every chapter. Contributions may be sent to us or to Bro. James Morrison, 175 West Twelfth street, Chicago.

THE following donations have been made for relief in various ways in Chicago.

From Crab Orchard, $25.00; sundry brethren at Columbia, $50.00! Lodge at Camden, $20.00; Huntsville, $25.00; Elbridge, $25.00; Somanauk, $25.00; McLeansboro, $50.00; Troy, $50.00; Lynnville, $25.00; Middleton, $25.00; Dongola, $5.00; Carmi, $50.00: Brethren at Warsaw, $28.35; lodges at New Boston, 50.00; Belle City, 10.00.

Washington Monument.

Neither Congress nor the people having completed the Washington Monument, it is now proposed that the Masonic Fraternity take the matter in hand and complete it. That is the work of a whole nation, not of a class. But how gladly would we see an asylum for the infirm or indigent Craftsman, his widow or orphan, erected in every grand lodge jurisdiction. Shall it be done!

The Second Half-Volume.

Now is the time to subscribe for THE TROWEL, at the commencement of the second half-volume. We have several famed contributors and in addition to our own editorial labors we have secured the exclusive services of Bro. Rounseville for the paper. All this involves heavy expense. Our paper is the oldest published in its present form; the cheapest by far for its size and matter, and in mechanical execution and material we hope that it is fit to lay side by side with the fairest and best. We hope that every brother who is now a reader will lend a helping hand to increase our circulation, both in and out of the State, either by subscribing or inducing others to send us their names and money. The past eight months have not only been days of solicitude, but of wearing labor, unforeseen cares and distracting anxieties, and had we foreseen the burden we are carrying we should not have reconstructed THE TROWEL. We have been generously treated and have no cause of complaint, but the labor is hard, constant and exacting. We have no alternative but to go on and we rely upon the generous alacrity and cheerful support of our brethren to make THE MASONIC TROWEL far more useful and entertaining than ever before. We want all our subscribers whose times expire at any time before next May to re-subscribe now, so that, with their names and the names of such new ones as we shall obtain, we may have 10,000 at least on the first of January and the means to live and carry on our paper for another year. We have a thousand friends in the Fraternity in this State who could get THE TROWEL up to 20,000 in one month, if each would give expression to the real friendship we know they feel, by a few hours given to procure subscribers for THE TROWEL, and nobody injured in the least.

The Knights of Yore.

In 1832, the National Anti-Masonic Convention, which met at Baltimore, nominated William Wirt for President and Amos Elmaker for Vice President—Vermont alone voted for them.

In November of the same year, the General Grand Encampment of Knights Templar met in the same city and held their triennial convocation. Rev. Sir Jonathan Nye—a Congregational clergyman—presided. The lamented Herring recorded; the distinguished Universalist minister, Paul Dean, officiated at the altar. Fourteen Knights, in the face of contumely, storm and fury, stood their ground. They all sleep well, but in September, 1871, ten thousand plumed Knights, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, in the same city, did reverence to their memory.

Galena Commandery.

Masonry, until about twelve years since, was as moody and variable in Galena as its population was transient and fluctuating. At that time Gen. Parker, the Seneca Chief, started Miners' Lodge and Galena Chapter. The progress of these bodies is greatly due to Gen. J. C. Smith, who has recently obtained a dispensation and charter for a commandery of Knights Templar. The first meeting had a large attendance from abroad. The orders were conferred on six candidates, Past Grand Commander Prentice, of Freeport, presiding. The occasion was signalized by a friendly call upon President Grant at his residence, who, though not a Mason, gladly welcomed his old companions in arms, his former neighbors and personal friends. We sincerely hope that the future of this youngest scion of Templar Masonry may be as prosperous as its commencement was joyous and successful.

Notices of Publications.

It is the practice of dailies and weeklies to notice their literary and class exchanges at certain set times. Some of the dailies are liberally paid and it is money well expended. Our paper is a monthly of wide circulation, and reaches all respectable classes. Any notice at advertising rates is worth ten times the value of any publication, yet we have expected nothing but an exchange; it seems that unless a notice is very frequently given and a marked copy sent, even that ceases.

In this number and hereafter, when any criticism is desired for any publication whatever, we will give our honest opinion as to its merits, but if the exchange is irregular or shall have ceased, we shall mention that to its discredit. Injustice in one direction is evidence of ability to be unjust in any other.

The Michigan Freemason

For October comes to us bright as a twenty dollar gold piece just from the mint and as pure. Published by Chaplin & Ihling, and edited by Rev. W. J. Chaplin, editor-in-chief, and M. W. Bro. S. C. Coffinbury, P. G. M., assistant editor. Great efforts have been made to drive Bro. Chaplin to the wall by inuendo, misrepresentation and downright lying, but he has calmly and patiently bided his time. We can say truly to Bro. Chaplin, that he who would strive to build up himself by misrepresenting a brother in adversity would not hesitate to rob a brother of a home or drive a brother to the wall. Possess your soul in patience, brother.

PHŒNIX Lodge No. 663, built upon the ruins of Kingston Mines Lodge, at Kingston Mines, was recently constituted by R. W. Bro. Sylvester Stevens, D. D. G. M.

Origin of Masonry in New Jersey.

We are under many obligations to R. W. Bro. Joseph H. Hough for Part II. of "The Origin of Masonry in New Jersey" and the entire proceedings of the Grand Lodge from 1786 to 1857.

Part II. commences with the session of 1839, Charles Burroughs, G. M.; Joseph H. Hough, Grand Secretary. We give the names of the Grand Masters since that time with the year of first election: Daniel Bowen, 1839; Daniel B. Bruen, 1841; William H. Earl, 1844; Ira Merchant, 1846; John P. Lewis, 1848; Edward Stewart, 1850; Daniel Babbitt, 1856.

Part I. was burned; upon its receipt again we propose to give a good epitome of New Jersey Transactions.

Bro. Hough was elected Grand Secretary in 1838 and has held the position ever since: either he or Bro. Dove is the Senior Grand Secretary; which?

Masonic Record of Western India.

We are very glad to welcome this excellent monthly in its regular visitations. It shows a rapid progress of Masonic light in the oriental countries.

The Ladies' Magazine

For November, published by Margaret L. Johnson, at 407 North Fourth street, St. Louis, came early to hand. It is worthy of the great city of the Mississippi and a credit to its artists and printers. It is lady-like, outspoken, with matter for practical use subjects for thought, and is agreeable, with abundance of wit, repartee, spice and stories. Take it, fair readers, by all means.

Church's Musical Visitor

Is published monthly, at $1.00 per year, by John Church & Co., 66 West Fourth street, Cincinnati. It purports to be devoted to music and the fine arts and is much after the style of Loomis' Journal. It is a nice paper and worthy of family support. The first number is on our table and promises well.

Peters' Musical Monthly

Is all music and has a large circulation; it is worthy of extensive patronage. J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York. $3.00 per year.

Wood's Household Magazine

For November, is pretty good. The price is one dollar per year. Published at Newburgh, N. Y. It has a good variety, and no discreditable articles. Much pains is taken to give valuable information in different matters and entertainment for a leisure hour or fireside evenings. It reaches us when it wants a notice.

THE Grand Lodge of Kansas contributed five hundred dollars for Chicago relief.

GRAND LODGE.

October 3, 1871.

Owing to the great fire in Chicago, our report of matters in Grand Lodge was very meagre and unsatisfactory in our October number. The address of the Grand Master was in his possession at the time of the fire, and was consumed; no copy has been furnished as yet, and it will be difficult to supply it, from the fact that much of the matter upon which it is based is also destroyed. The address was very able, prepared with great care and it is greatly to be regretted that we cannot furnish even a synopsis of it.

Tha committees were as follows:

On Correspondence.—Joseph Robbins, M. D.; A. M. Thompson; J. C. McMurtry.

On Jurisprudence.—H. G. Reynolds, J. R. Gorin, John M. Pearson, A. W. Blakesley, Wm. Rounseville, Wiley M. Egan, Geo. O. Ide.

On Lodges U. D.—R. D. Hammond, William Floto, A. T. Darrah, N. J. Bloomfield, M. S. Bowman.

On Credentials.—G. W. Davis, W. E. Ginther, D. O. Wilkie.

To Examine Visitors.—T. J. Wade, Rodney Ashley, John L. McCullough, John Sutton, Joseph Schultz, J. W. Banker, Chas. Trowbridge.

On Chartered Lodges.—John D. Crabtree, Joseph Holland, D. Lamb, Daniel Dustin, G. R. McClellan, J. H. Barton, H. B. Pierce.

On Finance.—Edward Cook, S. W. Waddle, A. H. Wooster.

On Appeals and Grievances.—A. A. Glenn, H. W. Hubbard, Wilson Hoag, Sylvester Stevens, J. E. Church.

On Mileage and Per Diem.—A. S. Babcock. A. Demaree, H. T. Woodruff.

On Petitions.—A. B. Davidson, Thomas Moore, E. Powell, M. L. Stansbury, D. C. Jones.

General Committee.—John C. Bagby, G. W. Batchelder, B. F. Newlon.

On Obituaries.—J. C. Smith, H. G. Dearborn, Levi Lusk.

On the Library.—Grand Secretary, J. O. Cunningham, C. H. Brennan.

M. W. Bro. John H. Brown, Grand Master of Kansas, was introduced and welcomed with the Grand Honors, and responded in eloquent remarks.

After the address was delivered, it was referred to Breth. Joseph Robbins, D. A. Cashman, R. Adams, C. H. Patton and J. W. Clyde.

Breth. Thomas J. Turner, W. S. Easton and W. A. Levanway, were appointed a committee to count the votes given for and against the proposed new Constitution and report.

Past Grand Master Michel, of Iowa, was introduced, and welcomed with the Grand Honors, to which he responded in fitting terms.

The M. W. Grand Master presented his credentials as Representative of the Grand Lodges of Indiana, Mississippi, Connecticut, District of Columbia and Quebec.

The Committee reported Representatives present, 627. Representatives present from 538 lodges, of whom 363 were Masters, 142 Wardens and 122 proxies.

The returns and records of South Park, Mayo, Normal, Greenland, Fillmore and Morrisonville were pronounced correct in every particular. Charters were granted to the following lodges, ranging in order from 662 to 682: South Park, Phœnix, Mayo, Greenland, Crawford, Erie, Burnt Prairie, Herder, Fillmore, Farina, Eddyville, Normal, Waldeck, Pawnee, A. O. Fay, Enfield, Sheffield, Illinois City, Clement, Morrisonville and Blue Mound.

The dispensations of Libanus, Burnside, Rio, Cashman and Wayne were continued. These lodges show 170 initiations, 126 passings, 110 raisings, 37 rejections and 456 members.

Mileage was allowed to grand officers, representatives, committees and deputies; per diem for three days to the grand officers, representatives and district deputies, and four dollars per diem to each member of a committee for each day's actual attendance.

Springfield No. 4, Central No. 70, Fayette No. 107, Illinois Central No. 178, Chenoa No. 292, Tyrian No. 333 and St. Pauls No. 500 having lost their lodge-rooms by fire, had their dues remitted.

Much carelessness and inattention was alleged in making up returns, and the Committee specified the lodges which are deficient by their numbers. It is alleged that a majority of the secretaries are guilty of gross carelessness; that some of the blunders and inaccuracies are inexcusable,; thirty-five returns are not under seal; three are not signed by either Master or Secretary; ten others are not signed by the Master, and two others are not attested by the Secretary. Twenty-one lodges made no returns; the returns of eleven others required explanation. Then follow specifications of irregular work, various violations of Masonic law and short payments of dues.

The number of members reported this year, 35,538; number of members in ten lodges, as reported last year, 525; members in lodges U. D., 456. Total, 36,519.

A resolution thanking Bro. W. H. Cutler and his assistants, Bros. C. F. Saxton, F. A. Brown, J. L. Williams, D. A. Kimbark, T. P. Lawrence, R. R. Stephens, C. C. Philips and C. M. Smith, for their beautiful music at the opening, was heartily adopted.

Called off until morning.

Wednesday, October 4.

The Grand Secretary reported that he had collected from 631 lodges, $24,213.90; from nine lodges, dues of 1870 and deficiencies collected by Bro. Luckey last year, to correct errors in returns, $370.75; from three lodges, dues 1869, $126.75; for charter fees, $154.00; and that he had received from the Grand Master $1,288.-00: total, $26,153.40.

Amount of Orders drawn, $19,997.54.

Bro. Robbins presented the Report on Masonic Correspondence, which, without reading, was ordered to be printed.

Leave to change the name of Norton Lodge to H. R. Caberry, to change the ocation of Clement Lodge from Green River to Cleveland, was refused. Petitions for new lodges at Clifton, Galva and Morris were granted.

Petition for a new lodge at St. Elmo denied upon the ground that the petition was not signed by the proposed Master.

The location and name of Greenbush Lodge was changed from Greenbush to Youngstown.

The petition for the restoration of the charter of Mt. Pleasant Lodge No. 224 was referred to the Grand Master.

The name of Hydepark Lodge changed to Landmark.

Bro. Joseph Robbins presented his credentials as the Representative of the Grand Lodge of Iowa and Bro. D. A. Cashman presented his credentials as Representative of the Grand Lodge of Maryland.

An elaborate report was made on printing by Edward Cook, Albert Demaree, N. J. Bloomfield, O. H. Miner and D. C. Cregier, which with the time and labor spent by the Committee, will cost the Grand Lodge twice as much as is saved; their duties properly belong to the Grand Secretary and he alone, under his oath of office and official bond, should be held responsible; the delay occasioned by their red-tape rules, which keep the proceedings from the eyes of the Craft, cannot be less than two or three months, for which the Grand Secretary is in no way responsible and is utterly powerless to avoid.

The Committee upon Lodges U. D., in response to so much of the Grand Master's address as was referred to them, allege that the reason why there are so many irregularities among such lodges is that they are not provided with the code adopted for their use, the same being out of print, and recommended that one thousand copies be printed.

At the very moment that report was made we had one thousand copies printed and bound, and studiously arranged to compare with existing laws, and which we have kept on hand and for sale at the rate of $8.00 per hundred and have constantly sold them for ten years past. The printing of this one thousand copies will cost the Grand Lodge from $150 to $250, while we would have gladly furnished them for $75, to say nothing of the delay and cost occasioned by the red tape printing committee.

Formerly the recommendation of one lodge was deemed sufficient to warrant the issuing of a dispensation for a new lodge; then it was increased to two, and in special cases to three, and fees were increased accordingly. Under this system the Grand Lodge of Illinois has grown to wonderful proportions; the new constitution provides that no dispensation shall issue for a new lodge unless the petition be recommended by three lodges and the sum of one hundred dollars be paid.

This very stringent rule is of very doubtful policy, but the Committee recommend that it shall require a two-thirds vote to recommend, and that the number of members be reported with the recommendation, and express the wish that it required five to recommend instead of three. Not one of the lodges represented by the Committee on Lodges U. D., would ever had an existence if such a rule had been applied to them, and it would be an absolute denial of a just right to hundreds of towns springing up all along our new lines of rail road. The respectable members of that Committee certainly did not consider the hardships already imposed, nor the utter impossibility, in nine cases out of ten, of complying with their suggestions, to say nothing of the reflection cast upon the action of lodges themselves.

The Committee appointed to count votes for and against the new constitution, reported that the number of lodges entitled to vote is 626; majority, 314; that 323 voted for the new constitution, being a majority of 20; that 302 had voted for section 7, article 13, lacking 12 of a majority; whereupon the Grand Master proclaimed that the New Constitution is adopted with the exception of said section 7, and is now the supreme Masonic law in this jurisdiction.

The Grand Lodge proceeded to the election of grand officers, which resulted as follows:

D. C. Cregier, Chicago, G. M.; Jas. A. Hawley, Dixon, D. G. M.; Geo. E. Lounsbury, Mound City, S. G. W.; Joseph Robbins, Quincy, J. G. W.; Harrison Dills, Quincy, G. Treas.; Orlin H. Miner, Springfield, G. Sec.

One hundred dollars was donated to Mrs. Martha Davis, widow of the late Samuel H. Davis, deceased.

A communication from Tarbolton Lodge represented that for four years Bro. S. G. Barnes had been blind and helpless, together with his wife and six children, and that it had cost said Lodge four hundred dollars per year to maintain them, and praying for relief. The sum of one hundred dollars was granted.

A resolution was adopted requiring the archives of the Grand Lodge to be kept in Chicago and that fire proof offices be provided for the same. This resolution was subsequently reconsidered and laid on the table.

The report of the Committee on Finance was a splendid declamation; a sensational denunciation; a highly laudatory document and a scorching indictment of several hard-working, self-sacrificing brethren, among whom we find members of the Legislature, judges and several brethren appointed by the Grand Master to serve upon Committees, which culminated in making the same allowance of $1,500 to the Grand Master, that was made the year before, with the sum of $460.94 office and traveling expenses, with the sum of $250 for clerk hire, an item new, while the Grand Secretary, who must of necessity be the active financial and business brains of the Grand Lodge was singularly left without any provision for clerk hire. To this report we propose hereafter to pay our very best respects.

The report presented by W. Bro. Smith, of Galena, was a beautiful tribute to the memory of the dead of the past year, and pages were set apart to their memory.

All pending amendments to the By-Laws were referred to the Committee on Jurisprudence.

The debit side of the account of the Grand Treasurer was $33,667.30; credit, $27,120.30; balance, $6,546.99—which should have been $6,547.00—one cent more!

Among these credits we find $17,324.05 paid for mileage and per diem and $791.03 for expenses of Grand Lodge for 1870, being $18,515.08 for mileage, per diem and meeting expenses, leaving only the sum of $8,605.22 actually expended to defray all the salaries, expenses and compensations paid to run such a Grand Lodge as that of Illinois!

The report on Grievances was presented by Bro. Glenn, and showed much labor and a careful summing up and decision in each case; but we have never allowed the matter detailed therein to find a place in THE TROWEL. Several cases of expulsion were reversed or sent back for new trial; a large majority were confirmed.

On motion of Bro. Miner, it was

Resolved, That the thanks of this Grand Lodge are due, and are hereby fraternally tendered to Bro. Leon Hyneman, of Philadelphia, for his very acceptable present of several volumes of Masonic literature, as a contribution to the library of this Grand Lodge.

Several resolutions of thanks for various favors were adopted.

The Grand Lodge called from labor until 9 o'clock Thursday morning.

Upon the meeting of the Grand Lodge Thursday morning, the Grand Master announced the following appointments:

Rev. J. W. Agard, Wyoming, G. C.; J. R. Gorin, Decatur, G. O.; J. F. Burrill, Springfield, D. G. Sec.; W. H. Eastman, ———, G. Pur.; T. J. Whitehead, Odin, G. Mar.; H. W. Dyer, Mound City, G. St. B.; Isaac E. Hardy, Alton, G. Sw. B.; W. J. A. Delancy, Centralia, S. G. D.; H. E. Hamilton, Chicago, J. G. D.; W. H. Long, Mt. Carroll, W. E. Ginther, Charleston, John O'Neil, Chicago, John McLaren, Chicago, Grand Stewards; J. P. Ferns, Chicago, G. T.

The Grand Master was then installed by Past Grand Master Turner. The other officers were installed by the Grand Master in person.

The report of the Committee on Mileage and Per Diem was read at length, and after amendments, and two hours spent in reading, was adopted.

Several changes were subsequently made; some proper and some questionable.

On motion of Bro. Munn, the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

WHEREAS, Several brethren failed to obtain their orders for mileage and per diem at the Grand Communication of 1870, and the same were afterwards burned in the office of the Grand Secretary, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Grand Master appoint a committee of three to examine all claims for such burned orders, and if they shall find that any such orders were so destroyed and remain unpaid, the Grand Master and Grand Secretary shall issue a duplicate therefor and the same shall be paid by the Grand Treasurer.

The Grand Master, Grand Treasurer and Grand Secretary were appointed said committee.

To the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois, A., F. and A. M.

The Committee on Masonic Jurisprudence would respectfully ask leave to report upon certain portions of the Grand Master's address and other matters referred to them as follows:—

1. Rev.———died at Normal, Oct. 2, 1870; he had been dropped from the roll of members by Mt. Pulaski Lodge No. 87, for-non-payment of dues. Bro. A. L. Otis, a member of Wade Barney Lodge No. 512, assumed the payment of fifty-nine dollars, funeral expenses; upon application to said Mt. Pulaski Lodge No. 87, for repayment, the lodge paid one third, but declined to pay any more upon this state of facts. Bro. Otis prays that said Mt. Pulaski Lodge be required to pay the whole sum.

In the absence of any definite law upon the subject, your Committee are of the opinion that no brother or lodge can bind any other brother or lodge for the payment of any funeral, sickness or other expenses, unless by express consent.

2. Rev.———a member of Jerusalem Temple Lodge No. 90, claimed exemption from payment of dues upon the ground that by usage, and practically in law, clergymen are exempt from the payment of dues. Your Committee are of the opinion that the usage is a mere matter of comity, in no sense binding, and that no clergyman can claim exemption from the payment of dues unless by authority of express law.

3. The charter of ——— Lodge No. 357, was arrested and subsequently the Grand Lodge vacated its charter; immediately after said arrest, a dispensation was granted to sundry brethren at ——— for a new lodge, with the expectation of having the old charter restored or a new one granted to them. While the dispensation was in life, —— Lodge No. 106 received petitions from the territory covered by the old charter, upon the ground that a Lodge U. D. has no jurisdiction as against a chartered lodge. This view has long had the force of law in this Grand Lodge, but was never intended to apply to cases of this character. This position having been reversed by the Grand Master, the lodge at —— demanded the fees taken from its jurisdiction by —— Lodge 106, and the matter is brought here for decision.

While your Committee feel obliged to say that the action of —— Lodge 106 was not generous or courteous, yet she acted within the letter of the law and is not bound to pay said fees. In this connection your Committee submit the following amendments to the By-Laws:

SEC. —. The territorial jurisdiction of a lodge U. D. shall be the same as in the case of a chartered lodge.

4. In the matter of —— Lodge No. 394 and —— Lodge No. 249, the facts are substantially as follows: In 1867, said —— Lodge 394 received the petition of ——, who lived within the jurisdiction of said —— Lodge 249, and rejected his application. This was again repeated in 1869. In 1871, said —— Lodge 249 received the petition of said —— and conferred upon him the degrees. Said —— Lodge 394 preferred charges against said —— Lodge 249, upon the ground that she had conferred the degrees upon a candidate who had been rejected by said —— Lodge 394, and upon full investigation the Grand Master made the following decision.

"Mr. —— residing nearer —— than ——, the reception and rejection of the petition by —— No. 394, was a violation of Sec. 36, and, being unlawful, was void. Hence by an unlawful act —— Lodge No. 249, could not acquire jurisdiction over the candidate. If this is so, —— Lodge No. —, need not ask for that which —— Lodge 394 did not possess, viz: jurisdiction. Sec. 26 refers to those who have been legally rejected; were it otherwise, the labors of a lodge might be crippled by neighboring lodges, who by mistake should receive petitions and reject candidates residing beyond their jurisdiction. I think —— Lodge 249 erred in not sooner asserting her jurisdictional rights; however as it is not in the power of one lodge to interfere with and suspend the labors of another without cause, —— Lodge 249 has not violated the law, and, as the case appears to me, —— Lodge 394 has no ground for complaint."

Your Committee concur in this decision, such having been the law uniformly held by this Grand Lodge.

5. Your Committee approve and commend all the acts of the M. W. Grand Master in cases of discipline, and submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the charter of Mt. Pleasant Lodge No. 224 be vacated and that the M. W. Grand Master be requested to grant no dispensation for a new lodge in Farmer City for one year.

Resolved, That all the acts and decisions of the M. W. Grand Master in the matter of Ashton Lodge No. 551 be confirmed.

Resolved, That the acts and decisions of the M. W. Grand Master in the matter of D. C. Cregier Lodge No. 643, Rock River Lodge No. 612 and John Dennis, is specially commended and confirmed.

In the matter of the right of objection, while your Committee are of opinion that the right of objection is as sacred in all degrees as the private ballot and should be as strenuously guarded, yet they are constrained to say that the decision of the Grand Master is in conformity with our statute law.

Your Committee concur with the M. W. Grand Master in decisions Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32 and 33, and recommend that they be confirmed.

All which is fraternally submitted.

Com. on Masonic Jurisprudence.

The report was so amended as to authorize the Grand Secretary to issue dimits to the members of the late lodge at Farmer City.

Bro. Ide, from the Committee on Jurisprudence, reported that amendments proposed to the By-Laws Nos. 27 and 28 are opposed to the spirit and provisions of the organic law;—that Nos. 11 and 23 were unnecessary, and that Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 should be acted on as one proposition.

Bro. Munn, from the Committee on Lost Records, reported a plan for republication, which was referred to the Finance Committee, and in the end was not adopted.

The Grand Secretary was directed to prepare a plan for a complete registry, to report at the next Grand Communication.

A vote of thanks was passed to Bro. Robbins for his able report on Correspondence, and $100 was allowed him for the preparation of the same.

The Committee on Finance recommended the payment of bills and sums to the amount of $1,347.47.

Proposed amendments to the By-Laws printed on pages 250, 251 and 252, of the proceedings of 1870, were taken up for consideration; numbers 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 25, submitted by the Committee on Jurisprudence last year, were adopted. Numbers 1 and 24 were rejected.

Amendments number 2, 3, 5, 11, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27 and 28 were laid on the table.

The amendments proposed to the By-Laws will hereafter be published and will form the basis of several articles for THE TROWEL.

Given under my hand and seal of the Grand Commandery of Illinois, at Chicago, this 30th day of October, A. D. 1871, A. O. 753.

JAMES H. MILES, G. Rec.

GRAND COMMANDERY OF K. T.,
OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS.
OFFICE OF THE GRAND RECORDER.

To all true and courteous Sir Knights of the Valient and Magnanimous Order of Knights Templar to whom these presents may come, greeting:

At the annual conclave of the Grand Commandery of Illinois, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of three Sir Knights, of which the R. E. Grand Commander shall be Chairman, be appointed to receive and disburse such contributions as shall be made by grand or subordinate commanderies and Knights Templar, for the relief of Sir Knights of Chicago and their families, and that the Grand Recorder be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to the Grand Commanderies of the United States and to the subordinate commanderies of this jurisdiction.

The Committee, under the above resolution, consists of R. E. Sir Wiley M. Egan, Grand Commander E. Sir Robert H. Foss, G. Treas., and E. Sir James H. Miles, G. Rec.

Contributions sent to W. M. Egan, No. 3, Masonic Building, West Chicago, or to James H. Miles, 49 South May street, will be gratefully received and acknowledged, and carefully distributed to the needy and distressed Sir Knights of our stricken City.

Courteously yours,
JAMES H. MILES, G. Rec.

Iowa.

The Grand Chapter, Council and Commandery met at Council Bluffs, October 14th to 19th.

In the Grand Chapter, Dr. E. A. Guilbert was elected G. H. P.; W. J. Law, Deputy; B. F. Montgomery, G. K.; Andrew Legg, G. S.; J. S. Chase, G. Treas.; W. B. Langridge, Muscatine, Grand Secretary. We are glad to see M. E. Comp. Guilbert on his feet again, and, after serving in the chief places of the Grand Lodge and Grand Commandery, and looking the King of Terrors calmly in the face, it must be as gratifying to him as it is pleasing to his friends and admirers to find the warm hand extended to make him Chief among the Royal Craft.

In the Grand Council, Benjamin Crabb was chosen M. P. Grand Master; J. L. Enos, Deputy; H. Y. Smith, G. R. I. M.; H. A. Turton, G. C. P. W.; R. F. Bower, Grand Treas.; W. B. Langridge, Muscatine, Grand Recorder.

In the Grand Commandery, Pitkin C. Wright was elected Grand Commander; John A. Boone, Deputy; B. R. Sherman, G. G.; Geo. W. Lininger, G. Capt. Gen.; W. E. Woodward, G. Treas.; W. B. Langridge, Muscatine, Grand Recorder.

Sir Knight Lininger served as Grand Puissant of the Grand Council and Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter of this State, with ability and distinction, and we are glad to see his rare worth acknowledged among the Craftsmen of Iowa.

The Grand Lodge, Grand Chapter and Grand Commandery of Kansas

Met on the 16th, 17th and 18th of October, at Topeka. In the Grand Lodge, John M. Price was elected Grand Master; G. W. Hogeboom, Deputy; J. L. Philbrick, S. G. W.; J. W. Peck, J. G. W.; C. Beck, G. Treas.; John H. Brown, of Leavenworth, Grand Secretary. Two notable things here. Bro. Brown, after three or four years' service as Grand Master, passes into the position of Grand Secretary; and Bro. Peck, but a few years since, the architect of Masonry in Fairbury, in this State, is a Grand Warden. They are first rate live men.

In the Grand Chapter, E. D. Hillyer was elected G. H. P.; R. A. Hayes, Deputy; J. W. Peck, G. K.; I. N. Smallwood, G. S.; M. S. Adams, G. Treas.; E. T. Carr, Leavenworth, Grand Secretary.

In the Grand Commandery, John H. Brown was elected Grand Commander; J. M. Price, Deputy; T. J. Anderson, G. G.; J. D. Rush, G. C. G.; Christian Beck, G. Treas.; E. T. Carr, Leavenworth, Grand Recorder.

DOUBTLESS some things are omitted that should be in this number. It crowds close upon the October issue, and we have been hurried and embarrassed very much, and hope our readers will be patient with our unintentional shortcomings.

Jurisprudence.

To the law and the testimony.—ISA. 8, 20.

1. Question. Can an amendment be entertained without the consent of the mover? If an amendment is adopted should the original motion be put to vote?

Answer. A. makes a motion; it is the privilege of B. to move an amendment, which, if pertinent and seconded, must be entertained. It is then the privilege of C. to move an amendment to the amendment, which, if germain to the subject and seconded, must also be entertained.

Unless disposed of in some other parliamentary way, the first question is, Shall the amendment to the amendment prevail?

If decided in the affirmative, the second question is, Shall the amendment as amended prevail.

If decided in the affirmative, the third question is, Shall the motion as amended pass?

2. Ques. A. petitions Lodge number 10 for initiation and is rejected; subsequently he removed into the jurisdiction of Lodge 12, and desires to petition it for the honors of Masonry; Can he do so without the consent of Lodge 10?

Ans. "No lodge acting under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall knowingly receive any candidate in any of the degrees of Masonry, who has been rejected by any other lodge, without receiving the unanimous consent of the lodge that rejected him."—Sec. 26, Grand Lodge By-Laws.

3. Ques. The following charge is preferred against B.:

"I hereby prefer a charge of unmasonic conduct against Bro B."

Is that all that is necessary, or must he specify some act of B.'s that is unmasonic?

Ans. A charge may contain a specification of the offense, or a charge may be in general terms accompanied by one or more specifications. A charge of unmasonic conduct without specifications is no charge, for want of certainty. So, too, a specification that the accused has been guilty of stealing, is not a charge that the accused can meet; what was stolen, where it was stolen, when it was stolen, of whom it was stolen and the value of the property stolen must one and all be stated. And so in regard to any other crime or accusation.

THE recent fire at Chicago threw a large number of traveling men, living in various places in the State, out of employment. Our wholesale dealers in Peoria, Quincy, Alton, Springfield and other places can now secure them. Chicago employed live men.

Plea for Chicago.

We were preparing an article on the sad calamity which has befallen the great and beautiful city of Chicago, in which we urged our brethren to prompt and united effort in sending aid to the afflicted and distressed; but before it was finished, we learned that our brethren, who are ever ready to aid in time of need, were laboring most assiduously to send relief to the sufferers. We also received the touching and eloquent appeal of our M. W. Grand Master, which sets forth so powerfully the sorrow and distresses of that city, and pleads so touchingly and earnestly for their relief, that we give it instead of our own:

To the Worshipful Masters, Wardens and brethren of all lodges of Free and Accepted Masons in the State of New York:

Brethren: A calamity, one of the most appalling either of ancient or modern times, has befallen one of the fairest, and hitherto, most prosperous cities of our Union. Within a brief space of time, the devastating elements has swept out of existence the public and private edifices of Chicago, destroying millions of dollars worth of property, and leaving homeless and penniless thousands of its people, among whom are many of our brethren and their families. The cry of distress and the prayer for relief, speedy and sufficient, reaches our ears; our hearts should not be shut to the appeal, nor our hands be idle in extending aid. We should show that our ancient order is founded upon Brotherly Love, and that we are ever willing to extend relief to suffering humanity.

Therefore, I, John H. Anthon, Grand Master of Masons of the State of New York, desire to lay before the Masons of the State of New York the appeal of our suffering brethren of Chicago, and all the desolate and oppressed of that afflicted city, in order that a fund may be raised for their immediate relief; and I do fraternally and earnestly beseech my brethren, to give toward this object as liberally as their means will allow. I suggest contributions in money, knowing that relief committees will be organized, and that such sums as may be raised will be disbursed by them in a proper and efficient manner. Contributions sent in drafts on New York to the order of the Grand Master, at his office, No. 271 Broadway, will be by him forwarded to Chicago.

J. H. ANTHON.

Grand Master's Office, Oct. 9, 1871.

In the appeal, M. W. Bro. Anthon says committees of relief will be organized. While large amounts of money are pouring in, we may reasonably expect that some of it will be injudiciously applied; it will not be so with moneys contributed by our Masonic brethren, as that will pass from Bro. A.'s hands to the G. M. of Illinois, who will hand it over to the most honorable and reliable men in the Fraternity, who, after due investigation, will relieve according to the wants of the sufferers.

It is with pleasure we record the following donations from lodges and brethren:

Marsh, $100; Isaac H. Brown, $50; Hoeg & Sturtevant, and employes, $80; Davis & Corson, $1; Central Lodge 361, $300; G. Artenstine, Calvary Lodge 150, Kansas, $5; Rising Star Lodge, $150; Corner-stone Lodge, $50; Euclid Lodge, $100; Masonic Quarter Club, $25; Albion Lodge 26, $250; Gate of Temple Chapter, $50; Grand Commandery, State of New York, $2,000; Richey & Boniface, $100; Holland Lodge 8, $1,070; J. H. J., Crescent Lodge 402, $10; W. J. Seacor, Huguenot Lodge, $15; Lafayette Lodge, $50; Montauk 206, $500; Cope Stone Lodge, $250; Welland Lodge, U. D., Morrisania, $175; King Solomon's Lodge, $150; Polar Star Lodge, $250; Park Lodge 516, $100. Total, $5,830.—dmark.

From the Keystone.

The Pageant at Baltimore.

Never has chivalric Knighthood been so brilliantly illustrated in America, as during the present week in Baltimore. The air has been gay with waving plumes and resplendent beauseants; the streets of the Monumental City have echoed with the measured tramp of six thousand gallant Knights, gathered from all parts of the Union; the spirit of true courtesy has been awakened anew in all hearts; and our Baltimore fraters have distinguished themselves for all time, by their unequalled reception of their Masonic brethren, and the honors that have been so generously accorded them, as well by the civic authorities as by the whole population of Baltimore. The ovation could not have been excelled in brilliancy, had the Knights only just returned from the burning sands of Palestine, and from the fields of deadly conflict with the unbeliever. The days of "Ivanhoe" and "The Talisman," of Hugh de Payens and Richard the Lion-Hearted, seemed reproduced once again; the centuries were rolled back; and as the sun flashed from the gleaming swords that were borne by the countless multitude of Knights, this western land was, as if by magic, changed into an oriental country; and it looked as though Knightly Christian warfare had once more become the real business of life.

Romance and reality both have been illustrated by these scenes. All the flutter of banners and waving of plumes have not been in vain, merely as a spectacular display. The gaiety is over, but its lesson remains. The spirit of chivalry in the middle ages was instinct with a lofty purpose, and a true spirit of self-sacrifice. The followers of the cross did not doze away their lives, nor merge all their desires in the now common, but ignoble, lust for money-getting. They heard the voice of duty and followed it. This was the spirit of the hour:

"The trumpet calls. The banners point
To sacred Palestine's bright skies;
Raise high the Cross, and follow on
The crowds that march to Paradise.

"Fair lady, bind the helmet on,
And bid thy lover quick arise;
Go, bid him take the battle-axe,
To cleave his way to Paradise.

"Forsake the world; bind on the Cross;
Join the crusader's battle-cries:
For 'merrie England and St. George!'
With this, march on to Paradise.

"List to the shout that fills the air!
'It is the will of God,' he cries;
With this the soldier of the Cross
Enters the gates of Paradise."

Now just as ancient craft Masonry symbolizes all the instruments of labor of the operative craftsman, and applies them for the furtherance of the loftiest moral purposes; so Christian Knighthood uses the insignia and knightly armor and display of the early Crusader's, with the view to inculcate the most solemn religious truths. True, the outside world can only see the brilliant array of the armor-clad host; but even these at once suggest the ancient spirit of self-sacrifice and genuine courtesy and religious fervor, that ever distinguished the true champions of the Cross. But, to the Knights Templar, there is a still deeper significance than all this. He knows full well the thrillingly solemn lessons that are lodged in every breast within the walls of the Asylum, when his Commandery is assembled for work. We have beheld many impressive scenes and joined in many solemn observances; but any one of them in comparison with the ritual of the Templars, is comparatively barren of lasting impressions.

Burglars and pickpockets were very active at the Canton Fair; results did not pay.

The Faculty and students of McKendree College contributed one hundred dollars, St. Clair Lodge, I. O. O. F., contributed one hundred and the citizens of the town (Lebanon) contributed $445.85 more, being in all $645.85; of this sum $300 was sent to Mayor Mason for Chicago; $100 to Alexander Mitchell, Milwaukee, for the Wisconsin sufferers and the remainder will be sent where it is most needed.

FREEMASONRY IN THE HOLY LAND.

THESE interesting lectures became so popular last winter that I found it impossible to fill engagements required in this State, and at the earnest solicitation of friends, have concluded to spend a portion of the winter here. I therefore make the following proposition to the several Masonic lodges in Illinois and elsewhere.

To deliver my Lodge Lecture on Masonic Researches in the Holy Land, verifying the truth of Masonic ritual and tradition, and exhibit some interesting relics from Jerusalem. I will also give an account of my visit to the English lodges, with the forms of initiation, passing, raising, schools of instruction, banquets, signs, passes, &c., &c. My charge for this Lecture is twenty dollars and expenses while at your place.

My Public Lecture is descriptive of Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Easter Week in the Holy City, Gethsemane, the Mount of Olives, and the surrounding country.

My charge for the two Lectures is thirty dollars and expenses while at your place. For admission to the public lectures you can charge such sum as you see fit. Properly managed, it will pay the entire expenses and ought to leave a fair surplus for the benefit of the Lodge.

EASTERN STAR CARDS.

I HAVE A SURPASSINGLY beautiful card, which will answer the purpose of a certificate as a member of a Chapter of the Eastern Star, three inches wide and four and a quarter inches long. On the face side is

THE STAR,

with its five points in Blue, Yellow, [illegible] Red and Green colors, with the emblems in each and the Pentagon in the center, with its usual divisions, letters and devices.

Over the Star, in Gold are the words,

"I have seen His Star in the East,"

while beneath it, in Green are the words,

"And have come to worship Him."

The border is blue and red, and the spaces are filled with ornaments in gold.

On the opposite side is a certificate embordered in Red and Blue, with large letters "E. S.," in light shading, in the centre, over which is printed a blank certificate, with room in one corner for seal, to be signed by the Matron and attested by the Secretary. On the end is a line for a signature of the lady receiving this certificate. The thought came from Bro. Hubbard—the design is our own.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms• almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

"Masonry has Secrets."

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

"Masonry has secrets!" True, sir; it is granted!
Nature is full of them; the human soul,
As ever hart for water-brooks, has panted
For mystery: 'tis his life and being's goal!

Man is a mystery—a secret! When he goeth,
Or what he is—what will be—whence he come;
None but the Father of all Secrets knoweth—
Then why not man's Creator bear the blame?

Even good is secret: oft are we commanded,
Ever in secret to bestow our alms:
He who reveals his gifts is reprimanded
And revelation robs of half their charms.

Nature is secret in her dark recesses—
In deepest solitudes that man has trod,
She treasures up the mystery that blesses—
Why not, Oh caviler, find fault with God?

Our God is secret: who presumes to gather
The awful thoughts that hover round the throne?
With bended knee all men have chosen rather
To worship the mysterious God alone.

And Masonry is secret, mystery blending,
As God and nature, with the action done,
Thus mystery on good is e'er attending
And God and good and mystery are one!

Extent of a Protest.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Shall the effect of a protest against the reception of an applicant for the degrees in Masonry be perpetual, or shall it be limited? I propose to briefly discuss this question. The Grand Lodge has very wisely provided that when an applicant for the degrees has been rejected he may renew his application upon the expiration of a year and some of the best Masons we know have passed through this ordeal. The second trial is frequently successful when the first one has failed. This fact shows that objections to candidates that are good and valid this year may be good for nothing the next, and that those objecting for what to them are good reasons, on the first application, are satisfied of the fitness of the candidate on the second. It also shows that the limitation of the effect of a ballot, when unfavorable, to a single year, is a wise and judicious provision, which results in the admission of many good men who make valuable members of the Institution, who, were the effect perpetual, would be forever debarred from all the rights and benefits of Masonry.

Why, then, should a protest, entered after the candidate has passed the ordeal of a ballot, be of longer duration or of more effect than the ballot itself? We can conceive of an argument against allowing a protest from being entered at all after a ballot, for it is the duty of a member to attend the communications of his lodge and to reject unworthy applicants, and if he fails to do this it may be argued with a show of reason that he has no wish to interfere with those who do attend to their business, have passed upon the application and have declared the petitioner to be worthy of a seat in the lodge. But waiving all this, and allowing that the protestant has the right to protest after the lodge has voted unanimously to receive him, why should that protest be perpetual? Is not the candidate who has passed the trial of the ballot, by a unanimous vote of those present at a regular meeting, and is halted in his Masonic career by the protest of an absentee, as likely to be a fit subject for our mysteries a year thereafter, as one who may have received a half-dozen unfavorable ballots in the lodge?

And yet in the case where numerous ballots are cast of the unfavorable color we allow the rejected candidate to again apply after the lapse of a year, but when we have the protest of a single member instead, we very inconsistently make the barrier perpetual, or during the pleasure of the protestant. In our view there is no justice in this rule. It is inconsistent as well as unjust. A member may absent himself from the regular communication of his lodge for the express purpose of taking advantage of this rule, that his objection may be perpetual. It is not only inconsistent with the rule of the ballot, but it is inconsistent and greatly at variance with the principles of Freemasonry. Our Order does not hold that there is no forgiveness or evidence of reformation. On the contrary it does hold that he who reforms his life by so much fits himself for our mysteries. But to say that an objection once made shall forever stand, without further action, precludes forgiveness and the rewards of reformation. If the candidate conducts himself guilelessly still the objection stands, and he is judged, not by the voice of the lodge, but by a single member thereof.

To this it is answered, when the candidate shows evidence of reformation the protest can be removed. This is a beautiful theory but it is exceptionable in practice. The protestant may become indifferent to the lodge; he may remove, still retaining his old membership; he may not be aware of the removal of the fact that caused him to protest, and a thousand other things may prevent the removal of the protest. Those who have had experience in these matters will bear witness to the truth of this sentence. In our experience of the working of these matters in the lodge we have not found one protest withdrawn where ten candidates rejected on the first have been elected on the second trial. Whether the protest more frequently arises from personal dislike and therefore intensifies the opposition and prolongs it, we will not now inquire, though this possibility ought by no means to be overlooked. If it be so there is an additional and very strong reason why the effect of the protest should be limited.

But as the protest now stands we give the rejected candidate no opportunity to retrieve his character as long as the protest stands upon the records, whether it be through ill-will, forgetfulness, indifference, or for real cause removed. We have decided by the protest that he is not fit to be made a Mason. We afterward refuse him the benefit of another investigation and compel him to remain with a stigma upon his character which that investigation might remove. Thus we hold out small, if any encouragement for reformation. If the candidate so conducts himself after his rejection as to merit the approbation of the lodge, he has no way to make that reformation known. The protestant may be ignorant of his reformation and the lodge can do nothing. Could he apply for membership, as he could if the protestant had cast a dark ballot, the scrutiny of his character might remove the objection and he appear in a better light than before. It appears to us that so much is due the petitioner, and certainly so much should be conceded to the principles of our Institution. If we have rejected a man he should have the right thereafter to prove himself worthy. This the course pursued when rejected by the ballot secures him. If the above reasoning is correct the protest after the ballot should have no more force or duration than the unfavorable ballot, and that is the rule for which we contend. If a member fail to be in his place to cast a ballot against the admission of one whom he believes to be unworthy give him the privilege of entering his protest to farther procedure for the year. Then give the petitioner the right to another scrutiny of character, and perhaps the cause of the protest will appear to have been groundless and a valuable member be received. But if the candidate is still unworthy the ballot or the protest will not fail to pronounce against him. Then we shall do no injustice, and our principles will, in this regard, be sustained.

Aspiring to Office.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

He has a noble aspiration who desires to be found worthy to preside over a Masonic lodge. It is no small thing that he is able to fill the East—to sit with dignity in the Oriental Chair, and satisfactorily discharge the duties which that station imposes. To "preside over the sons of light," is a dignity of which any man may be proud, if he does it well—not otherwise.

Hence, when a member aspires to the chief position in a lodge, he should be careful that he renders himself equal to the situation; that he fits himself for the important and honorable position. There are so many requirements necessary that they ought to discourage any ordinary man, and we have no doubt that many have been seated in the East whose first year's experience cured them of all desire to be continued in the same place. We know there are some such, and this among those who have performed the duties incumbent upon them in an acceptable manner. But as all experienced Masons know, those who shrink from the assumption of those duties are about as likely to be those who have rendered efficient service, as those who could not get through the business at all.

To make a good Master a man must have a commanding presence. An inferior physique will impress a lodge in an unpleasant manner, when one of perfect form and stature would leave a good impression. This may not be the most important requisite, but it is one that should not be overlooked. We can think of many who otherwise were well qualified, who failed because they were like St. Paul: Their "bodily presence was contemptible."

The voice has much to do with a successful discharge of the Master's duty. There is a power in a strong and well modulated voice, as there is a weakness in one which is the reverse. We have all noticed the difference in the effect which has been produced by these two classes of officers, and there is no necessity to elaborate the point. The one has an orderly, well governed lodge; the other, almost inevitably, is troubled with confusion.

A faculty of clearly expressing an idea; of facility of communication, is necessary in an officer. This is necessary, not only in the performance of the work, but in doing the ordinary business of the regular communications. Half of the trouble in the adoption of measures for promoting the objects of the Institution results from misunderstanding. A clear, lucid statement of a question will do more to produce a union of sentiment than the most learned discussion. We do not differ very much when we clearly understand each other.

An acquaintance with parliamentary rule is absolutely necessary in a presiding officer. Though these rules may be somewhat modified by lodge rules, yet the general privileges which govern deliberative bodies are the same everywhere, and when unknown or unenforced, there must be confusion, and then follow strife and possibly acrimonious debate, which the necessary knowledge would have banished at once.

We need not say that a correct knowledge of the principles, objects, aims and requirements of Masonry are absolutely necessary in a Master of a lodge. All will admit this point; as they will, also, that a thorough acquaintance with the ritual and work of the Order must be required of those who would preside over a lodge. These qualifications must not be foregone, if the prosperity of a lodge is desired.

There are other qualifications for office, but these will suffice to show that the member who aspires to the Oriental Chair must be thoughtful, studious and persevering. It is no easy task to fulfill its duties. Though honorable, it is no sinecure. The honors, by one who confers dignity upon the office, are dearly earned.

When a member would permit his brethren to seat him in the East, let him reflect whether he is competent to perform the duties that will be incumbent upon him. If he is not willing to study long and eagerly to fit himself for his station, he should never aspire to the principal seat in his lodge. We are aware that the superficial Mason will think that we require too much, but those who have experience in the matter will say: "All these and more are necessary to constitute a perfect Master."

Masonry Among Savages.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

It is a claim which Masonry puts forth that its members are found among all nations of civilized men. This claim for its universality is well supported, and even among savage tribes distinct traces of it have been found. The following narrative, related to the writer many years ago by an old sea captain, who then traded to the Pacific, will show that in the least expected places Masonry creeps out, and that even among savages its benign and humanizing effects are maintained. We give the incident as near as possible in the language of the principle actor, after the lapse of so many years.

"I was in command of a brig which sailed for the Pacific coast for a cargo of hides, but finding it impossible to procure it, and having an opportunity to ship a cargo for the Sandwich Islands, I abandoned the original intention and sailed for the Islands. The voyage was prosperous, and an offer was received at the Sandwich Islands for a freight for New Zealand, on terms that I did not feel free to refuse, and accordingly we sailed for those islands. We had discharged our freight and were about to return to the Sandwich Islands in ballast, when it became necessary to take in a supply of water for the use of the brig. To obtain this, we were compelled to go ashore in boats, taking our casks along, and after landing, to proceed around the point or spur of a bluff about a mile from the shore, which completely hid the men engaged in getting the water from the vessel, which laid off the shore about a mile and a quarter.

"Early in the morning a boat's crew of ten men were sent off for the water. I followed them with my glass until they passed out of sight behind the bluff. They were expected to return by noon, but that hour passed and still there were no indications from them. To heighten my anxiety and increase my apprehensions, I had noticed during the forenoon a large number of natives in the vicinity of the way by which the men approached the spring, armed after the manner of their nation, with war clubs. The afternoon was nearly half spent, and my anxiety became so great, that I concluded to take another boat and go myself in pursuit of my men. Accordingly, with a crew of like number with the first, the boat was launched and we were quickly on shore. The two men who had been left to take care of the first boat were equally ignorant of the whereabouts of their companions with ourselves, and we had nothing to do but press forward.

"Leaving two more to watch the two boats, with orders to push off to the brig rather than allow them to fall into the hands of the natives, with the other ten men I directed my course to the spring. In order to curtail the distance as much as possible, we passed over instead of going around the point of bluff before spoken of. When we arrived at its summit I was astonished and dismayed to see my boat's crew surrounded by about a hundred warriors, engaged in defending themselves as best they could with such arms as they could improvise, and in fact in the midst of a rather warm as well as dangerous encounter.

"Determined to be in the fight against whatever odds might be brought to bear upon us, if it must be a fight, and still anxious to prevent bloodshed if it was possible, I called to my men to follow and dashed down the declivity at the top of my speed. The men responded nobly and were close at my heels when I arrived at the scene of action. As I was anxious to stop the fighting, if possible, I involuntarily placed my hands in the most natural position on such an occasion that could be adopted, and which every Mason will understand without description. A grim looking chief had raised his war club to fell me to the earth, and I really thought that the barbarians would make a supper off of my carcass; when he saw the position I had assumed. The club was instantly lowered to the earth, the chief caught my hand, and if ever a mortal was astonished that mortal was myself when he gave me the mystic grip of a Master Mason! At his command the affray was stopped—not another blow was given—and after some explanations by the chief to his followers, the whole band passed me and gave me the 'grip and sign' that saved us.

"But this was not all. They were our friends and brothers, and acknowledging the tie, they conducted themselves as such. The weapons and implements of war were laid aside and the hundred stout barbarians, who but a few moments before had hoped to make a good meal of us, were engaged side by side with my boats' crews in filling the casks and rolling them to the beach, and the evening sun had not descended behind the mountains in the interior of the island, before all of our casks, filled by friendly hands, were safely on board our boats and on the way to our vessel.

"Of course we understood no word of their native language and could communicate with them only by signs. These they understood with difficulty, except those which pertained to Masonry. These were as familiar to them as to me, and that they not only understood th Mason ic, but also their moral signification, their conduct abundantly proved.

"Whether these savages—even then and since cannibals—were instructed by some member of the Craft who had been left among them, or they procured their knowledge of the "moral art" from ships which at long intervals stopped there, we could not ascertain. But however their knowledge of the secrets of Freemasonry was obtained, that knowledge saved myself and companions from being cooked for the suppers of those whom Masonry caused to regard us as friends. Whoever it was that communicated the information, though it is quite possible that it was done irregularly, to the latest period of my life I shall say with all the fervor of which my soul is capable: 'God bless him!'"

Could Not Take the Oath.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Not long ago a member of the Masonic fraternity was traveling through our State, and as he always made it a practice to attend lodge when convenient to do so, a certain evening found him in a lodge which is located in a thriving little city, the exact location of which we must be excused from revealing. When he arrived but few members were present, and after introducing himself to them, he busied himself with examining the furniture and decorations of the lodge.

Not a long time passed before his ears were assailed by a volley of profane language. Wondering that it should be heard in a place where all are taught not to pronounce the sacred name of Deity but with that reverence which is due from the creature to the Creator, he bore it in silence. As others came in the profanity was continued at intervals, until a question was raised whether those present could take an oath on the Holy Scriptures that they were Masons in good standing, neither suspended nor expelled and that each for himself could say in that solemn manner that he knew no reason why he should be.

To the astonishment of the traveler, the first that avowed his willingness and ability conscientiously to pronounce the oath was the profane swearer. He laid his hand upon the Holy Book and was proceeding to pronounce the words, when the traveler withdrew his hand with the remark that he could not become a party to such an act, and turning suddenly to the brother whose polluted lips had scarcely ceased the motion which had poured forth such a torrent of profanity, he said:

. "I cannot take the oath, my brother, can you?"

"Most certainly!" was the reply.

"What, can you solemnly protest that you know of no reason why you should be suspended or expelled, when but a moment ago your lips pronounced the most awful curses against your fellow men; imprecated vengeance upon your own head and profanely and impiously called on the Deity that Masonry teaches you to revere and honor, to witness your words?"

The swearer stood for a moment as if astonished. Soon he withdrew his hand from the sacred volume, and with downcast countenance answered: "I cannot take it!"

The traveler proceeded to set before the members assembled the inconsistency and impiety of such language, and had the satisfaction of hearing a unanimous expression of approval of the course he had taken and the justness of the rebuke he had administered. The offending member made a sacred promise that from that hour he would use no more profane language while he lived, and henceforward he would conduct in such a manner that he could take the proposed oath of fitness for membership.

It may be astonishing to some that such a scene could have occurred in a Masonic lodge-room, but we fear that other cases of a similar infraction of a fundamental law of Masonry may be found by looking for them. We give this little history of an actual occurrence for the benefit of Masonry in general and for that lodge in particular which harbors such members, if such there is. We are not sure but it would be a good thing to have a standing rule that at stated times the members, with their hands upon the Book of the Law, should examine themselves to see if they know any reason why they should be suspended or expelled. A little of such examination would do no harm.

The Ark and Mercy Seat.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW, 32°.

Among the holy utensils and furniture of the tabernacle and temple, the sacred chest—the Ark of the Covenant, or of the testimony—may well be esteemed the heart of the worldly sanctuary. It was the first holy implement the inspired artist Bezaleel formed, and resided in in the most venerable apartment of the holy places made with hands. Its dimensions were small, but its materials were rich and magnificent. It was made of the best cedar or shittim-wood, and overlaid with pure gold both within and without. It was edged around with a border or coronet, and covered above with a lid of the same precious metal, called the mercy-seat. For the convenience of carriage from place to place, in the ambulatory state of their commonwealth, there were fastened to its four corners so many golden rings, into which they put staves of shittim-wood, overlaid with gold, that were never taken out, but suffered to remain, even after the ark rested in the temple and ceased to be a burden to the shoulders of the Levites.

Within this splendid chest were deposited the two tables of stone that were hewed by Moses, and inscribed by the hand of God, after the first were broken. Also the miraculous bread that was preserved in a pot, and the wonderful rod of Aaron that blossomed and brought forth fruit. The first was a standing memorial of the choice regard of heaven to the whole nation of Israel; and the last was a perpetual sign of His favor to the priestly tribe of Levi and family of Aaron.

Above the ark were two cherubims of beaten gold, arising out of the two ends of the mercy-seat, and looking towards it and one another with outstretched wings. Besides these small cherubims, there were other two, of gigantic stature, which Solomon reared up in the most holy place of the temple. But their precise shape it is impossible for us, at this distance of time, to define with certainty.

This was that venerable utensil which it was death to touch or look into, unless by the persons appointed for that purpose. The sudden fate of Uzzah, and the severe correction of the men of Bethshemish, are terrible instances of its vengeance. When Israel marched through the wilderness, the ark is said to have gone before to explore a place of rest for the congregation. The parted wave of Jordan and the falling walls of Jerricho confessed its power. Once it was a prisoner in a heathen temple, but the victory of Palestine was short! Soon were the proud enemies obliged to refund their spoil, and Dagon could neither defend himself nor his worshipers from perpetual infamy. Once it blessed the house of Obed-edom. But at last, after many removals, the splendid temple of Solomon received it for several ages; and from the ruins of that holy and beautiful house, the symbol was taken and preserved by the Royal Craft.

THE Provincial Grand Lodge, of Durham, England, recently voted twenty-five younds to ordinary charities, twenty-five to the boys' school, twenty-five to the girls' school, twenty-five to the institution for aged Freemasons and twenty-five to the widows' institution.

WHAT is the Kerr and Dunlavy swindle we hear so much about?

THE FIFTH ARTICLE.

THE HAPPY SURPRISE.

Perhaps no State, or I might say Territory, had such an influx of what might be termed border roughs than Illinois, some forty years ago; the country swarmed with adventurers, squatters, land speculators, counterfeiters, horse thieves and regulators.

Many a man left the East to visit the State and invest in the rich lands, then coming into market, but, alas! never to return. As soon as it was known that he had any amount of money about him he was almost sure to fall into the hands of one or the other of these robber bands, and that was the last seen or heard of him.

About this time Bro. Smith, of Peekskill, N. Y., had, by close economy and attention to business, saved a few thousand dollars, for which he sought a safe and profitable investment. Hearing of the rich lands of Illinois, he determined to visit the West, and if it suited him there, as he expressed it, to "salt down" about three or four thousand acres. So putting his business in order for a journey that would take him weeks if not months, he set his face westward and in due time arrived at the then little town of Chicago, where he bought a horse, a pair of blankets, a good saddle and what he considered necessary to make a journey through the country horseback. In a leathern belt around his body he carried about three thousand dollars, in National Bank currency (for we had a National Bank then and its money was good at all land offices), with a coarse suit of clothes, a fur cap drawn over his head, his blankets in a roll behind his saddle, his beard uncut for the last three weeks, he looked more like a ranger than a land hunter. Thus equipped, he started for Vandalia, then the capital and principal land office in the State. For the first few days all was as pleasant as could be expected in a new country; beautiful land, fine locations, but squatters rather wary of a stranger. The fourth night found him near where now stands the city of Danville. It was about the time of the regulator war which raged through that part of the State, and of which he had heard long before he got there.

Now Bro. Smith, like all great men, had his weaknesses, and his mortal dread was that he might be robbed, if not murdered, and to the oft-repeated question if he came out to buy, he had returned an evasive answer.

Towards evening he drew up before a log house that looked as if it might afford shelter for man and beast, and inquired if he could have supper and stop all night, and was informed that he could if he would put up with what they had; tired and hungry as he then was, he was glad to get his head into the cabin with a prospect of even side bacon and corn dodger.

While at supper, a stranger reined up and requested supper and lodging. He was a rough specimen of humanity, unshaved and unshorn, a keen black eye that appeared to look through you, read your very thoughts and determining the amount of money you had about you, and whether it would pay to set you up.

Bro. Smith did not like his looks, nor the searching look with which he appeared to weigh him physically and financially. It was that kind of a look that compels you to acknowledge that in an encounter you must succumb. During supper little was said; each watched the other; conversation flagged, and after a vain attempt or two on the part of the stranger to draw Bro. Smith out, he asked to retire and was informed by the landlord that he and the other gentleman would occupy the same room, although there were two beds. This did not appear to suit either, for there was not that hearty response, "That's all right, I like company," or "It's all the same to me," so in silence the landlord showed them to their room up-stairs; the roof rather low, the beds tucked under the eaves and not more than a three-foot alley between them; the light was put on the floor, the landlord bid them good night, and the two men were left alone. It was evident to each that the eyes of the other were upon him. The stranger took the only chair (an old rickety thing that stood in the corner), and waited for the other to retire. Smith set down on the edge of the bed, waiting for the stranger to retire, but soon saw that the stranger had the advantage, as he must get out of the way before the stranger could well get to the bed. This was getting awkward, so Smith determined to make a necessity of the situation, undress, go to bed, but keep one eye open for the stranger; so with a "Well, I think I'll retire," commenced to pull off his coat; as he did so, a small Masonic emblem on the vest collar became exposed. The stranger rose to his feet and advanced. Bro. Smith supposing that his time had come, determined to sell his life as dearly as he could. What was his surprise when the stranger pointing to the emblem, asked, "What is that?" Without taking his eyes for one moment from the face of the stranger, Bro. Smith felt on the collar of the vest until his hand came in contact with a small square and compass (placed there by his wife as he was leaving home). "A pin," was the reply. "Yes, I know, but what kind of a pin?" "A Masonic pin." "Are you a Mason?" "Why do you ask?" "Because I am a Mason." "Are you?" asked Bro. Smith. In a moment each sat on the edge of his bed, with knees close together, their heads inclined forward, while in a suppressed tone questions were asked and answers returned—now they hold each other by the hand, then they fall into each other's arms, and the whispered words, "God bless you, my brother," was the outpouring of the pent-up feeling of brotherly love and affection that had been welling up in their hearts for the last few moments.

"Yes, God bless you," says Bro. Smith, "and what a relief; do you know that I took you for one of them regulative cut-throat bandits, and did not know but what I was in one of their dens and you the appointed instrument to rob and murder me; for I have no fear in telling you now that I have three thousand dollars in that belt to purchase government lands, soon as I can get to Vandalia."

"Well," said the stranger, "it is a strange coincidence, for do you know that I had about the same opinion of you, and I also can tell you now, I have six thousand dollars about me to locate lands for a small colony."

As the night was cool and the bed clothes were rather scant, the brothers concluded to join covering and both occupy the same bed, and thus terminated the HAPPY SURPRISE.

Help for Chicago.

The tremendous conflagration at Chicago is one of those catastrophies which awake a universal thrill of interest and terror in the human breast. Calamities like fire and sword and pestilence, have in all ages wrought ruin and destruction upon the earth, but there are degrees of desolation, and man has seldom had to mourn such havoc as has recently befallen the young but magnificent city of the west, which was so justly esteemed the pride of the great American Republic. It is true that some disasters have occasioned greater loss of life than the burning of Chicago—as when Pompeii and Herculaneum were overwhelmed by the fiery flood, or when Lisbon reeled and tottered in the giant grip of a deadly earthquake. These were, indeed, terrible events—scarcely paralleled in the history of the world. Still, the only fitting comparison of the wide-spread misery caused by the Chicago conflagration is to be found in a misfortune of similar nature and extent, and happily, as yet, the annals of mankind afford us but one example—in the fire of London, of 1666, which, for magnitude, can be likened to the rapid ruin which has overwhelmed Chicago. No wonder, then, that our hearts are stirred to their inmost cores with emotions of mingled pity and amazement. No wonder that true men in every land—and not least of all in this of ours—are stretching forth their arms across the Atlantic in practical sympathy with their afflicted brethren. From the patrician pound to the plebeian penny, from the extremes of wealth and poverty, in the British islands, help is being freely offered to the homeless and foodless citizens who, though far away, are the descendants of our own kith and kin. Already much has been done to assist them, and yet the stream of benevolence has but begun to flow—of that we feel assured, because the occasion is a great and a sad one, and English liberality is not wont to flag until substantial and permanent aid has been given to the distressed. We have, therefore, no misgiving that the free-will offering of our countrymen will not be worthy of themselves, or of the sacred causes of charity to which it is dedicated; but there is one section of our countrymen whose views we are proud to represent; a section not inconsiderable in numbers, in wealth, or in influence; a body whose principles peculiarly inculcate noble deeds; in a word, we desire to see the Masonic Craft identified with the movement for the relief of Chicago. It is not solely on the ground that Freemasonry has greatly flourished in the State of Illinois, although it is worth noting that more than six hundred lodges and forty thousand Masons were on the roll of the State Grand Lodge when it held its last communication in the doomed city. It is not, however, simply for this reason we hold that the Grand Lodge of England should contribute to the relief fund; but upon the more comprehensive ground of a Mason's susceptibility and ready response to the cry of affliction, wherever and whenever it may be heard. We gave to Patriotic fund, good; to the Indian Mutiny fund, good; to the Lancashire Relief fund, good—each time a thousand pounds. Latterly we have subscribed to the Peruvian Earthquake fund, and in aid of the sick and wounded in war. We quote these instances, not boastfully or vaingloriously, but merely as precedents by which to shape our course, now that a greater, a more dire calamity has befallen our friends in America. Still, although we advocate the extension of aid to all who have suffered in the Chicago catastrophe, we hope that some special effort will be made to reinstate the Masonic lodges of the city in something approaching their former prosperity.

Not many weeks ago we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Bailey, the editor of the Voice of Masonry, an influential magazine published in Chicago, and he assured us that Masonry was worked to perfection in that city. Little then did he dream that the splendid edifices and spacious streets which he described to us so graphically, were so soon to be consumed and reduced to ashes. It will, however, be some consolation to the unfortunate citizens to know that the appalling scourge which has swept away their homes has awakened feelings of regret and compassion throughout the civilized globe; sentiments, too, that have ripened into practical deeds, the true test of genuine emotion.

The Freemasons of England must bear their part of this noble work; they must be prepared to vindicate the credit of the Order by a substantial donation, irrespective of their own private subscriptions to the relief fund. Recent events have brought us into closer communion with the American Craft—an interchange of compliments has taken place; a vow of mutual friendship has been recorded. Let us now waft across the Atlantic something more than courtesies—a tangible evidence of sympathy; a kindly offering of our good will. Then will be realized, indeed, what we faintly foreshadowed upon hearing of our Grand Master's reception at Washington—observations which have evoked so friendly a response in the breasts of several eminent American brethren, that we cannot better close this article than by quoting one of many, culled from Dr. Mackey's National Freemason, where, in allusion to the meeting of English and American Masons in the Masonic Temple, he remarks that "it is already producing the happiest results, in securing a warmer and kindlier feeling between the peoples of the two countries."

Lodge of Sorrow.

In memory of Grand Master T. J. H. Anderson and P. G. M. Wm. M. Taylor, the brethren of Holland and Gray Lodges held a lodge of sorrow at Houston, September 30. We have been kindly furnished with a copy of the impressive proceedings. Having already alluded to Bro. Taylor, we take the following extracts relative to Bro. Anderson.

Thomas J. H. Anderson was born in Pike county, Alabama, on the 26th day of November, 1828. He was liberally educated and a graduate of Franklin College, Athens, Georgia.

The best evidence of the soundness and thoroughness of his mental training was found in his prudent reserve and his habitual economy of speech.

In 1852, at the age of twenty-four, he emigrated to Texas and established himself as planter on the banks of the Brazos, in Robertson county. From this time the cultivation of the soil was the business of his life.

In 1859, at the age of twenty-nine, he married in Washington county a most estimable lady, who survives to mourn his irreparable loss.

One who knew him well in his domestic relations, writes: "He was a kind and affectionate husband, a loving and indulgent father. His loving nature yearned rather for the sweeter and purer enjoyments of domestic life than for the glare and excitement of public position. Happy in the love of an amiable and devoted wife and blessed with a young and interesting family, home was the centre of his affections." Thus writes his family physician and bosom friend. More honorable is this testimony to the heart of him of whom it is given than any formal panegyric.

In the year following his marriage. he removed to Port Sullivan, Milam county, where he continued to reside until his decease.

In the year 1854, in Pierce Lodge No. 144, he was raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason. In 1858, he was elected Worshipful Master of St. Paul's Lodge No. 177, in which capacity he served for twelve consecutive years. This extraordinary term of service is declarative of the estimation in which he was held by those of the Craft who knew him best, It shows that not only must he have eminently illustrated in his life the ethical principles of Masonry, but that in its ceremonies and ritual he was a trusted teacher and guide.

As a member of the Grand Lodge, his merits early attracted the attention of the Fraternity. He was soon placed in the line of promotion, and at each successive step fully warranted the confidence reposed in him.

At length, in June, 1871, he was elected Grand Master, and thus received, in the 17th year of his Masonic history and in the 43d year of his age, the highest honor that Ancient Craft Masonry can award.

On the 16th day of August last, summoned by the duties of his office, he left his home for this city. On the succeeding day, he had the first monition of his disease, and the next developed the fatality of its character.

All medical skill was baffled, and on the 29th day of August, at 2 o'clock P. M., he expired.

By-Laws of the Grand Lodge.

Section 1. The annual communication of the Grand Lodge shall be held in the City of Chicago, on the first Tuesday of October, when the Grand Lodge shall have power to charter new lodges, by letters patent, under its seal.

VISITORS.

Sec. 2. No brother, admitted as a visitor during the sitting of the Grand Lodge, shall be permitted to speak on any matter before the Grand Lodge without leave of the M. W. Grand Master.

ELIGIBILITY.

Sec. 3. No brother shall be eligible to either of the offices of Grand or Deputy Grand Master, Senior or Junior Grand Warden, unless he shall have passed the Chair in some regular lodge.

Sec. 4. No member shall be eligible to any office in this Grand Lodge who is not a member of a subordinate lodge in this jurisdiction.

PROXIES.

Sec. 5. Whenever the Master or Wardens of a lodge cannot attend in person, he or they may depute any Master Mason to act for him or them: Provided, That such members so deputed shall be members of the lodge from which the proxy is given.

ANNUAL RETURNS.

Sec. 6. Every lodge under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall, on or before the first day of September, annually transmit by mail, express, or some more expeditious mode, to the Grand Secretary, the annual returns of such lodge, which shall embrace a list of officers and members; of all known non-affiliated Master Masons within the jurisdiction of such lodge; of all initiations, passings and raisings; of all admissions, rejections, suspensions, expulsions, restorations, dimits and deaths, with their respective dates, signed by the Master and attested under the Seal of the Lodge and the hand of the Secretary.

ANNUAL DUES.

Sec. 7. Every lodge subordinate to this Grand Lodge shall, on or before the fifteenth day of September, annually pay to the Grand Secretary, for the use of the Grand Lodge, the sum of seventy-five cents for each Master Mason belonging to their lodge at the time of making the annual return; but every lodge shall pay at least ten dollars annual dues, and no representative of any lodge shall be entitled to a seat in the Grand Lodge until the dues of his lodge are paid and the Grand Secretary's receipt therefor produced; and in case of the neglect or refusal of any lodge to pay its annual dues at the time herein specified, or on or before the next annual communication of the Grand Lodge, such lodge may be stricken from the books of the Grand Lodge and their warrant or charter considered null and void. But on proper application to the Grand Lodge, making full returns and paying all dues such lodge may be restored to its former rank and privileges.

Any lodge failing to comply with the requirements of this section shall forfeit its claim for mileage and per diem for its representative in the Grand Lodge.

Sec. 8. No lodge shall be required to pay dues for members who shall have permanently removed without the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Sec. 9. No brother, after having taken his seat as a member, shall be permitted to leave without obtaining permission of the Grand Master.

COMMITTEES—THEIR DUTIES.

Sec. 10. The Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, Senior and Junior Grand Wardens, Grand Treasurer and Grand Secretary, for the time being, or a majority of them, shall be a standing Committee on Charity, under whose direction charities shall be distributed.

Sec. 11. At each annual communication of the Grand Lodge, as soon as practicable after its organization, the Grand Master shall appoint the following committees:

First.—A Committee on Credentials, to consist of three members, whose duty it shall be to examine the credentials of all Masons claiming the right of membership, and report their names and Masonic connection to the Grand Lodge.

Second.—A Committee to examine visiting brethren, to consist of seven members, whose duty it shall be to examine all visitors not properly vouched for, and report their respective names, address and Masonic connection to the Grand Lodge.

Third.—A Committee on Finance, consisting of three members, whose duty it shall be to examine and report on all accounts and financial matters to them referred, to destroy all paid Grand Lodge orders surrendered to them by the Grand Treasurer, after being satisfied that the same has been paid, cancelled and listed, and their report on the same has been approved by the Grand Lodge, and to make a full report, before the close of each annual grand communication, of the financial condition of the Grand Lodge.

Fourth.—A Committee on Petitions, consisting of five members, who shall examine and report all petitions for new lodges U. D, for changes on location, or for change of name, and upon all petitions and matters pertaining to the education of the children of deceased and indigent Master Masons.

Fifth.—A General Committee, consisting of three members, whose duty it shall be to report upon all unfinished business and upon such other matters as shall be referred to them.

Sixth.—A Committee on Obituaries, to consist of three members, who shall make report upon such subjects as shall be referred to them.

Sec. 12. Before the close of each annual communication of the Grand Lodge, the Grand Master shall appoint seven standing committees for the ensuing Masonic year, as follows:

First.—On Masonic Correspondence, to consist of three members, whose duty it shall be to examine the correspondence and documents from other Grand Lodges in correspondence with this Grand Lodge, and report at each annual communication whatever may seem of sufficient importance and interest to demand its attention or action.

Second.—On Masonic Jurisprudence, to consist of seven members, whose duty it shall be to examine and report upon all questions, documents and papers requiring investigation and decision upon points of Masonic law; and to make report upon the same.

Third.—On the Library, to consist of three members, of which the Librarian shall be one, to examine, select and purchase books, charts, magazines and such other documents and articles as may seem proper; to procure the binding of such proceedings, works and documents as they may judge expedient; to draw orders for the payment of the same, in amount not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of one hundred dollars in any one year, unless by the special order of the Grand Lodge; and to report all their doings and the condition of the Library annually to the Grand Lodge.

Fourth.—A Committee on Returns and Work of Lodges U. D., consisting of five members, whose duty it shall be to examine the by-laws, records of work and the returns of lodges under dispensation, and to make report to the Grand Lodge if (or not), in their opinion, charters should be granted to such lodges.

Fifth.—A Committee on Returns and Work of Chartered Lodges, consisting of seven members, whose duty it shall be to examine the returns of proceedings and Work of chartered lodges, and report the same to the Grand Lodge.

Sixth.—A Committee on Appeals and Grievances, consisting of five members, whose duty it shall be to examine and report upon all appeals, memorials and petitions in relation to any matter of complaint or grievance within this jurisdiction, which shall come before the Grand Lodge.

Seventh.—A Committee on Mileage and Per Diem, consisting of three members, whose duty it shall be to ascertain the distance necessarily traveled by each officer and representative entitled to mileage and per diem, and report the same to the Grand Lodge. The grand officers, members of the Committees on Masonic Correspondence and Masonic Jurisprudence, and the representative highest in rank from each lodge under this jurisdiction, shall be allowed five cents per mile, going and returning, for every mile traveled from his place of residence, computed by the necessarily traveled route, and two dollars per day for each day's actual attendance at the Grand Lodge. No one shall draw mileage both as a grand officer and representative. Said Committee shall make up the orders for mileage and per diem and issue the same, and may employ such assistance as may be necessary.

[Sections 13, 14 and 15 are superseded by Article XIII. of the Constitution.—Editor.]

Sec. 16. All dispensations for new lodges granted after the first of July in any year, may be made returnable to the Grand Lodge to convene in one year from the first Tuesday in October thereafter: Provided, That such lodges shall make regular returns at the next grand communication.

Sec. 17. No charter shall issue to a lodge under dispensation until it shall have conferred the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason, in manner and form as prescribed by the rules and regulations of the Grand Lodge.

Sec. 18. Lodges under dispensation shall be governed by the code of by-laws adopted for the government of lodges under dispensation by this Grand Lodge, A. L. 5856. And the secretaries of such lodges shall record at length, with the proceedings, the dispensation under which the lodge is convened; and when chartered, the Secretary shall likewise record at length the charter.

Sec. 19. No lodge of Free and Accepted Masons can legally assemble in this State unless authorized to do so by this Grand Lodge.

Ask! Seek!! Knock!!!

ASK, and ye shall receive;
  SEEK, ye shall surely find;
KNOCK, ye shall no resistance meet,
  If come with ready mind;
For all that ASK, and ask aright,
Are welcome to our lodge to-night.

Lay down the bow and spear;
  Resign the sword and shield;
Forget the arts of warfare here,
  The arms of peace to wield;
For all that SEEK, and seek aright,
Are welcome to our lodge to-night.

Bring hither thoughts of peace;
  Bring hither words of love;
Diffuse the pure and holy joy
  That cometh from above;
For all that KNOCK, and knock aright,
Are welcome to our lodge to-night.

ASK help of HIM that's high;
  SEEK grace of HIM that's true;
KNOCK patiently, the hand is nigh,
  Will open unto you;
For all that ASK, SEEK, KNOCK aright,
Are welcome to our lodge to-night.

What Masonry Did.

We find the following story, strange, but vouched for as true in the Masonic columns of the Texas Family Visitor, of November 6th. The editor says:

When we resided in Wisconsin, a case came up in Mineral Point Lodge No. 1, which we shall never forget. There lived a man there, of wealth and influence, who had become a confirmed inebriate, whose conduct was very bad, who sent in his petition to the lodge for initiation. The Grand Master happened to be present on a visit from a neighboring town, and was occupying the chair when the petition was presented.

On hearing the name of the petitioner, the Grand Master, who knew the character of the man, spoke up with great emphasis, and said: "The friends of that candidate had better withdraw that petition, for no such man can be received into this lodge."

Gen. G. W. J., who has since represented the State of Iowa for twelve years, in the United States Senate, had presented the petition and took a deep interest in the welfare of the candidate, rose and stood mute for some time, and finally asked permission to approach the chair, which being granted the following conversation occurred:

"M. W. I am exceedingly anxious that my friend Col. N. should be admitted into our Order. I know his habits are bad and he knows that he has no just claims to our favorable consideration; but he has taken up the idea that if any institution on earth can save him, it is Masonry. He has tried to reform by every other means, and all to no purpose, and he asks it as a favor to grant him the benefits of the Order, as a mercy to him, and I do hope you will waive your objections and give him a trial."

"Bro. J.," said the G. M., "do you believe that there is good material in him if he was duly sober to make a Mason? Was he ever a man of moral integrity?"

"I have known him for many years, and I can assure you that if he pledges reformation, he will manfully maintain his pledge under our care."

"Then," said the G. M., "I will withdraw my objections, on one condition, and that is: upon the maturity of his petition, if the lodge elects him, he may take the E. A. degree; and if he shall stand firm and conduct himself in perfect sobriety and Masonic decorum for six months, he can then be passed to the degree of F. C. And he must again stand a probation of six months more, before he is raised; and if he will agree to this, I will withdraw my objections and let the petition take its course."

To all of this Bro. J. agreed, and communicated the same to the candidate, who accepted the terms. On the next regular meeting of the lodge, the candidate was elected and the G. M. was present and initiated him in person, when the first six months' probation began.

Before the six months had expired, Col. N. was a new man; his appearance, habits and condition were entirely changed, and he was again prospering in business. He took a second degree and entered upon his second probation of six months. Before the expiration of that term, Col. N. had made a profession of religion, and became a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Twelve months or more after the initiation of Col. N., he met the G. M. in the city of Madison, the capital of the State, and approached him with a smile of delight upon his face; but his dignified and gentlemanly appearance so widely differed from the former Col N. that he was not recognized by the G. M. until he announced his name.

So soon as his name was heard, the G. M. stood with emotions of unspeakable pleasure, for a moment, surveying the man once detested for his vice and debauchery—now bearing the aspect of a refined, intelligent and dignified Christian gentleman.

Col. N. continued to do honor to the Order to which he owed his salvation; to the Church of which he was a ruling elder, until he closed his life never having forfeited his word of honor, and is, doubtless, now enjoying the rest and refreshment which is prepared in the Celestial lodge above, where he rests beneath the smiles of the Supreme Grand Master of the Universe, who delights to confer the honors and rewards of a faithful life on earth, with the inheritance of eternal life in heaven.

It was the faith which Col. N. had in our Order that gave it the power over his mind and conduct. He joined it for the purpose of salvation and realized his object by diligent care and watchfulness over his heart and life. We would wish all others would do likewise.

Death of Hon. Wm. M. Taylor, of Texas.

We are pained to learn from the Family Visitor (Houston), that P. Grand Master Wm. M. Taylor died at his residence in Crocket, Texas, on the 30th of September. In announcing his death, the Visitor says: "Words can hardly do justice to the feeling of sorrow which this announcement will cause throughout Texas. First among his equals, a very Bayard in all noble qualities, no man in Texas was more widely known and loved. For nearly thirty years a leading spirit in the Grand Lodge of Texas, having enjoyed every outward honor in the power of the Fraternity to bestow; and better, having the heartfelt regard of every worthy Mason in Texas, his death makes a chasm which will be painfully felt for years."—Freemasons' Magazine.

A Mason Buried at Sea.

In mid-ocean when death comes 'tis tangible desolation—a little world's visible depletion without the possibility of replenishing the number or filling the void—unlike a death on land, where the surgings of humanity, like forest leaves, cover the space of lost. This fact became indelibly impressed on me on the homeward bound voyage of the ship Horatio from the East Indies, many years ago. Among the passengers returning to America was a gentleman who had contracted consumption by his business as a tea-sampler or taster, which is done by taking a small quantity of tea in the hands and breathing on it and then smelling the flavor. The fine dust being inhaled into the lungs for any considerable length of time induces disease. He fully realized that he must soon die, but thought that he might reach home for the endearing adieux of his friends and more especially for that burial from the hands of his brethren in Masonry, which would seem the crowning act of his life's religion. But his vitality deceived his hopes. After passing St. Helena he failed rapidly and finally; seeing that he could not reach land, begged the captain, who was a Mason, and the few who stood around him, to do all that could be done to symbolize his burial as a Masonic one, the only door through which he wished his body to pass to oblivion and his spirit to the Infinite Lodge of tried and perfect Masons. How well we all fulfilled the request, our limited resources spoke eloquently. The simple little tributes to the good man's wishes were to me more impressive than all the gorgeous funeral trappings since then witnessed. In the canvass he was sewed up in we placed his "gold mark," showing the symbol he was known by in his chapter. His lamb-skin apron and all the leaves we could pluck from a sickly geranium, the nearest approach we could make to the sprig of Acacia; one fore-castle sailor, with divine tenderness of soul, presented his all (and a god could do no more), a few twigs of willows gathered at St. Helena beside the empty grave of Napoleon. At the foot of this canvass coffin was placed a cannon shot, to ensure a speedy burial. We all assembled at the leeward side of the ship, with the body placed on a plank poised on the rail above the bulwark. The order was given to "back the main-yard," which caused the ship to lose headway and remain nearly stationery, with all sail set. It was like the sun standing solemnly still in the mid-heaven to respect this small world of woe. With tremulous voice we sang the Masonic burial hymn, "Solemn strikes the funeral chime." The captain read the Episcopal burial service—in place of "ashes to ashes" he used the words, "we therefore commit his body to the deep."

As the sentence was being pronounced the end of the plank was raised and a quick plunge entombed the remains of our fellow passenger, where no human eye will ever rest on his grave while mumbling faint praises to his virtues. Scarcely had the rising bubbles on the water ceased to break when the sonorous order of "fill away" brought the deck in noisy tumult, and we were sailing on again to eventually all arrive by different routes to the same port.—Masonic Jewel.

Selected Poetry.

Three Words of Strength.

There are three lessons I would write—
Three words as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light,
Upon the hearts of men.

Have Hope! Though clouds environ round,
And gladness hides her face in scorn,
Put thou the shadow from thy brow—
No night but hath its morn.

Have Faith! Where'er thy bark is driven—
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth—
Know this: God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

Have Love! Not love alone for one;
But man, as man, thy brother call;
And scatter, like the circling sun;
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, Faith and Love—and thou shalt find
Strength when life's surges rudest roll,
Light when thou else wert blind.
—The Evergreen.

A Mason Under Torture.

Between the years 1740 and 1750, the Freemasons were subjected to the greatest persecutions in Portugal. A jeweler of the name of Moulton was seized and confined in the Inquisition, and a friend of his, John Coustos, a native of Switzerland, was arrested. The fact was that these two persons were the leading Freemasons in Lisbon, which constituted their crime. Coustos was confined in a lonely dungeon, whose horrors were heightened by the complaints, the dismal cries and hollow groans of several other prisoners in the adjoining cells. He was frequently brought before the inquisitors, who were anxious to extort from him the secrets of Masonry; but refusing to give any information, he was confined in a deeper and more horrible dungeon. Finding threats, entreaties and remonstrances in vain, Coustous was condemned to the torture of the holy office. He was therefore conveyed to the torture room, where no light appeared but what two candles gave. First they put around the unfortunate man's neck an iron collar, which was fastened to the scaffold; and this being done they stretched his limbs with all their might. They next tied two ropes around each arm and two around each thigh, which ropes passed under the scaffold, through holes made for that purpose. These ropes were of the size of one's little finger, and pierced through his flesh quite to the bone, making the blood gush out at eight different places that were so bound.

Finding that the tortures so described could not extort any discovery from him, they were so inhuman, six weeks after, as to expose him to another kind of torture, more grievous, if possible, than before. They made him stretch his arms in such a manner that the palms of the hands were turned outward; when, by the help of a rope that fastened together at the wrist, and which turned by an engine, they drew them nearer to one another behind, in such a manner that the back of each hand touched and stood exactly parallel one on the other, whereby both shoulders were dislocated, and a quantity of blood issued from his mouth. This torture was repeated thrice, after which he was again sent to his dungeon and put into the hands of physicians and surgeons, who, in setting his bones put him to exquisite pain.

He was finally released, we believe through the intercession of the English Consul, prompted thereto by the Grand Lodge of England.

The Close of the Year.

Heretofore, when approaching the close of the year, we had also reached the close of the volume. The great fire of the 22d of February changed all this, and now our volumes close in April and the new ones commence in May. Therefore this is not exactly the time to review our editorial year, tho' we are fain to acknowledge many mistakes and errors, and to confess that years have impaired our memory as well as vision. We work as many hours as ever, but not so fast. We labor as diligently, but we have to look up numbers, names, dates and facts which were readily supplied a few years since from memory. That vast power of memory which we once wielded was, to us, system and resources, the want of which now shows the value of early systematic training, method and rules. Now, we do the best we can, laboriously and persistently, but we realize every day the want of that business culture and order supplied by our business colleges, and that editorial faculty and readiness evolved from regular training.

The year now closing has, to us, been one of great sorrow, most of which must be unspoken. Some of our cherished hopes and fondest anticipations have been stranded; of these, the fire, with its terrible consequences to us, is but a small part. We look around us and see many suffer as we do, and even more. We look over the mercies vouchsafed us and with the companion of our youth, two of our sons in active and honorable employment, and the younger children reputably settled or acquiring the learning to fit them for the future, and we are able to say with filial trust, "Shall we receive good at the hands of the Lord, and not evil?"

And how has it been with our brethren? Financially it has been a severe year in the west. Any one can see that who will examine the applications for Masonic honors and advancement and note the classes from which they come. To men engaged in certain employments, like railroading, express offices, telegraphing, grocery business or public business, pay is certain; for people must live and business must be done. From such as these come a large proportion of our accessions, while from the major portion of the community, dependent upon the results of productive labor, the applications in proportion have been much less.

While, as a class, the brethren of the Masonic Fraternity have been in fair prosperity, it is most likely that many have been unfortunate in business affairs, or have suffered from their own imprudences and faults, or from domestic troubles or the wrong doings of others. And how prone are men, especially when in fault themselves, to accuse others, or shift their blame on to others' shoulders If every brother would manfully bear his own burden, be assured that all the burdens would be much lighter. We do not mean by this that we are not to lend a helping hand; but we do mean that every brother should throw no responsibility upon others which is justly his own. A Freemason has no right to plead the force of habit. It is his duty to resist an evil habit, break it up and drive it from him.

Can any Freemason who will think and reason five minutes justify himself at the bar of conscience in pleading the force of habit? Will he acknowledge that he is a brute and not a man? Will he confess that habit has acquired such strength over his powers of resistance and ability to amend, that he must day by day set an evil example before his brethren, his fellow men, and the rising generation? Grant that it takes time to amend, but let it be short, and the shorter the better. Some of the best men we have known, turned a short corner.

A few questions, brethren:

Have you squared your lives by the golden rule?

Have you done unto others what you would not like to have them do unto you?

Have the husbands been thoughtful, tender and forbearing, ready to assist and relieve, careful in speech and kindly in act?

Have the fathers trained up the children in the ways of virtue, truth, industry and honor?

Have brothers remembered a brother or sister in adversity, trouble or misfortune?

Have sons rendered the honor to parents which is their due?

Have citizens honestly discharged the duties which they owe to their country?

Have neighbors been kindly disposed, waiving unimportant rights and striving for the peace and harmony of society?

Have brethren striven to promote brotherly love in their lodges? Have they been careful to give no reasonable cause of offense? Have they quietly laid aside their own preferences and stifled their personal ambition for the general good?

Dear brethren; pray consider these questions, with any others that may suggest themselves, and take an evening and think them over, and whereinsoever you find yourselves in fault, seek pardon and strength from Him in whom you put your trust, and in your future life amend!

Who are Eligible.

Where there are no chapters the degrees may be conferred upon any affiliated Master Mason in good standing, and upon certain female relatives. This we regard as being a pastime—instructive it is true—and, did it end there, harmless. But to give these degrees in an unorganized manner with inducements we hold to be every way objectionable, and far more likely to bear pernicious fruit than good. Hence, where there are chapters, it is unlawful to confer any degrees outside of them, nor should any member of a chapter ever confer them, except with a view to chapter organization.

Persons eligible for the Order in chapters are:

First. Affiliated Master Masons in good standing.

Second. The wives of such Master Masons. The question may here arise, suppose the husband is not a member, may the wife become one? She can. But, suppose the husband be opposed to her becoming a member; she is still eligible, but in such case it is not advisable to entertain her application.

Third. The daughters of Master Masons in good standing, or who, being deceased, were in good standing at the time of death. In case such daughter be unmarried, she must be eighteen years of age. In case she be married, or a widow, the question of age is not considered. The query may here arise, suppose her husband is not a Mason, is she eligible then? She is. But in case he is opposed to it, how should the matter be treated? The chapter should use its cool judgment, after taking plenty of time to consider.

Fourth. The widow of a Master Mason who was in good standing at the time of his death. The highest rank is that of a wife, her relation to her husband being the holiest, purest and tenderest of all earthly ties. The daughter stands next in rank, being next to the wife, more nearly related to the father, and certainly next to the wife in the father's love! Next to the daughter we class the lonely widow, who, though not a wife, was one. Every wife should comfort her, and every husband respect her.

Fifth. Mothers. The remarks in regard to daughters, apply to mothers, except in the matter of age.

Sixth. Sisters. The remarks in regard to daughters apply to sisters; only, sisters must be of full blood—that is, of the same father and mother.

The question may be asked, in case a lady is the wife, the daughter, mother and sister of Master Masons, may she choose the relation in which she may apply? We answer, a lady never should and a true woman never will degrade her rank, and though her affection may be stronger for her son, her respect greater for her brother, and her love greater for her father than for her husband, she is never to forget that she is a wife, and as a wife, a priestess and a queen.

Origin of Masonry in New Jersey.

We are under great obligations to R. W. Pro. Joseph H. Hough, Grand Secretary of New Jersey, for a copy of the first volume of the History of Masonry in New Jersey, and this with the record heretofore acknowledged, makes the History complete.

A deputation was granted to Daniel Cox as Provincial Grand Master of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, June 5, 1730, and it is believed that he was the first Provincial Grand Master in the New World. He was succeeded by Richard Riggs, Francis Goelet and George Harrison. After the latter ceased to act, various grand jurisdictions exercised authority in New Jersey until December 18, 1786, when a large number of Masons, representing lodges in that State and hailing from various lodges in the adjoining States, met at New Brunswick, examined each other, and elected Chief Justice David Brearly Grand Master, and men of distinction to the other offices. Maskel Ewing, Jr., Clerk of the General Assembly, was elected Grand Secretary.

At the regular session, held at New Brunswick, Dec. 20, 1787, five lodges were represented. Warrants were issued for two new lodges. David Brearly was elected Grand Master, and John N. Cumming, Grand Secretary.

We will now give the times of each new election.

GRAND MASTER.

David Brearly, Dec. 18, 1786. John Beatty, Jan. 11, 1791. Samuel W. Stockton, Jan. 7, 1794. John N. Cumming, Jan. 12, 1796. Joseph Bloomfield, Jan. 9, 1799. John Beatty, again, Jan. 4, 1801. Aaron D. Woodruff, Nov. 12, 1805. James Giles, Nov. 11, 1817. Jephtha B. Munn, Nov. 14, 1820. Samuel J. Reid, Nov. 9, 1824. John S. Darcy, Nov. 20, 1826. Isaac H. Hampton, Nov. 11, 1828. Joseph Warren Scott, Nov. 9, 1830. Elias Vanarsdale, Jr., Nov. 11, 1834. Charles Burroughs, Nov. 11, 1836.

GRAND SECRETARY.

Maskell Ewing, Jr., Dec. 18, 1786. John N. Cumming, Dec. 20, 1787. Maskell Ewing, Dec. 30, 1788. Jacob Benjamin, Jan. 12, 1796. Samuel J. Read, Nov. 11, 1807. Andrew S. Hunter, Nov. 10, 1812. Richard L. Beatty, Nov. 10, 1814. Zachariah Rossell, Nov. 8, 1825. John C. Chambers, Nov. 11, 1828. E. Vanarsdale, Jr., Nov. 9, 1830. Phillip Dickerson, Nov. 8, 1831. John Mershon, Nov. 9, 1832.

Chief Justice Brearly held the office of Grand Master four years; John Beatty, seven years, and Aaron D. Woodruff held the office twelve years.

Grand Secretary Ewing held the office nine years; Benjamin eleven years, and Beatty eleven years. Grand Secretaries Cumming, Read and Vanarsdale were elected Grand Masters.

October 26: Charter issued to Rebecca Chapter No. 94, at Kankakee; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: Bro. N. C. Clark, W. P.; Mrs. Martha Hatch, W. M.; Mrs. Charlotte W. Warriner, A. M. This is at a fine locality and amidst a large number of brethren.

October 28: Charter issued to Livingstone Chapter No. 95, at Chatsworth, Livingstone Co.; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: N. C. Kenyon, W. P.; Mrs. Mary C. Bullard, W. M.; Mrs. Rosalthe Kenyon, A. M. With such ladies failure is impossible.

November 10: Charter issued to Cordova Chapter No. 96, at Cordova, Rock Island Co.; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: Bro. Dr. James W. Morgan, W. P.; Mrs. Julia Cool, W. M.; Mrs. M. E. Morgan, A. M. The name of Cool calls to mind old associations and friendships, which we should be very glad to renew.

Eastern Star in Iowa.

November 22: Charter issued to Ruth Chapter No. 6, at Iowa City; formed by Bro. D. W. Thomson: Bro. J. N. Coldren, W. P.; Mrs. Nellie Elliott, W. M.; Mrs. Maria Tree, A. M. Correspondence is solicited from Iowa.

Eastern Star in Missouri.

November 27: Charter issued to Queen Esther Chapter No. 1, at Hannibal; formed by D. G. Patron for the Northwest: Bro. O. A. Elliott, W. P.; Mrs. Susan Crosby, W. M.; Mrs. Sarah E. Kidd, A. M. We expect to install the officers in person, December 20th.

An Eminent Man Gone.

M. W. William M. Taylor, Past Grand Master, Past Grand High Priest and Past Grand Commander of Texas, was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, April 17, 1817, graduated from Marion University in 1839, and emigrated to Galveston, Texas, in 1843. He came on to Baltimore to attend the triennial meeting of the Grand Encampment, and as a representative to the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of which he was a distinguished member, being also Judge of the District Court. His death, which occurred at his home soon after, has created a feeling of profound sorrow.

ON the 16th of October the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, Wm. S. Gardner, presiding, upon the invitation of the President of the United States, laid the corner-stone in Boston of the building intended for the use of the treasury and post-office. Extensive civic and military processions graced the occasion and the Grand Lodge and Masonic procession were escorted by the Grand Commandery, M. E. Sir Grand Commander Dean presiding, supported by twenty-nine subordinate Commanderies.

Rail Roads.

Main Trunks—Branches and Extensions—Miles—Connections—Principal Towns—Country—Character.

The new roads built in the west, having many facilities unknown in the early history of building railways, are much better graded, tied, ironed and equipped than was possible ten years ago.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL.

Main Trunk	456	miles.
Chicago Branch to Centralia	253	"
Extension from Dubuque to Sioux City	326	"
Extension from Waterloo, Iowa, to Mona	80	"
Total	1,115	"

Connects at Effingham and runs thro' passenger trains twice each day to St. Louis.

Connections east and west at DuQuoin, Ashley, Odin, Effingham, Mattoon, Tolono, Champaign, Gilman, Sandoval, Vandalia, Pana, Decatur, Clinton, Bloomington, El Paso, LaSalle, Mendota, Dixon and Freeport, and incidental connections at Carbondale, Edgewood, Gilman, Matteson, Normal, Wenona and Freeport. General connections at Chicago and St. Louis. River and Lake connections at Cairo, Dunleith, Chicago and St. Louis.

The road is kept in excellent condition and under superior management. The passenger trains to St. Louis are elegantly equipped.

Saint Louis and Chicago are among the large cities of the United States. Cairo, Bloomington, Decatur, Galena and Freeport are acknowledged among the principal places in Illinois. Effingham, Tuscola, Kankakee, Vandalia, Clinton and Dixon, county seats, with Carbondale, DuQuoin, Centralia, Mattoon, Tolono, Champaign, Gilman, Pana, Normal, El Paso, LaSalle, Mendota and Amboy are large and flourishing places. This road drains the great fruit region in Illinois, traverses as fine lands as can be found in the world and is now opening up a fine region of Iowa to enterprising settlers.

CHICAGO & ALTON.

Main line—Chicago to Alton	280	miles.
Branch via Jacksonville	157	"
Branch, Dwight to Washington	70	"
Extension from Louisiana to Mexico, Mo	51	"
Total	568	"

An extension is now being built from Roodhouse, on the Jacksonville branch, to Louisiana.

Connections east and west at Joliet, Chenoa, Bloomington, Lincoln, Springfield, Delevan and Jacksonville.

Incidental connections at Alton, Brighton, Springfield, Normal and Whitehall.

General connections at Chicago, St. Louis and Bloomington. River and lake connections at East St. Louis and Chicago.

The condition and management of this road is equal to any in the country; its passenger, dining and sleeping cars are princely; the machine shops at Bloomington are handsome, spacious and model structures.

Springfield is the capital of the State and its fourth city in size. Alton and Joliet are among the large places in the State. Jacksonville is the seat of the State Institutions for the Deaf and Dumb, Blind, Insane and Idiots, and of several institutions of learning. Carlinville, Lincoln, Jerseyville and Carrollton are county seats; and, with Whitehall, Mason City, Delevan, Chenoa, Dwight, Wilmington, Pontiac, Lexington and Lockport are large places. No better country or handsomer landscapes attract the eye in our prairie State. Not less than seven colleges are along its lines, with most of the beneficiary and reformatory institutions in the State.

TOLEDO, WABASH & WESTERN.

Main line, from Toledo, to Quincy	476	miles.
Branches, Decatur to St. Louis	109	"
Branch, Clayton to Keokuk	42	"
Total	627	"

This road also operates the Naples and Hannibal road.

Connections north and south, or east and west at Fort Wayne, Peru, Logansport, La Fayette, Danville, Tolono, Decatur, Springfield, Jacksonville, Chapin, Camp Point, Keokuk Junction, Taylorville and Litchfield.

Incidental connections at Bement, Bluff City and Carthage. River and lake connections at Toledo, Meredosia, Naples, Hamilton, Quincy and Hannibal.

General connections at Toledo, Quincy and St. Louis.

Toledo, Ohio; Fort Wayne and La Fayette, Ind., and Quincy, Ills., rank among the minor important cities in the U. S. Peru and Logansport, and Danville, Mt. Sterling, Bement and Carthage are reckoned important places in Indiana and Illinois.

This important railway is looking to extensions from Hannibal and Keokuk westward.

The management is good, and great efforts have been made for two years past to put the track and equipments in first-class condition. Its direct connection with eastern and western roads makes it a desirable route for travel and transportation. It traverses Illinois through its widest part and most valuable stock-raising region, and its three western termini, in Hancock, Adams and Pike, add immensely to its resources.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON & QUINCY.

Main line to Quincy	263	miles.
Main line to Burlington	48	"
Branch, Galesburg to Peoria	53	"
Branch, Aurora to Streator	60	"
Branch, Aurora to Galena Junction	11	"
Branch, Buda to Rushville	110	"
Branch, Galva to Keithsburg	54	"
Branch, Burlington to Quincy	72	"
Branch, Burlington to Keokuk	43	"
Total	709	"

It is understood that the ownership o the Michigan Central and the Burlington and Missouri River Rail Roads and of this are mainly the same. At least their interests are identical.

Connections north and south or east and west at Mendota, Wyanette, Galva, Bushnell, Keokuk Junction, Monmouth, Canton, Vermont, Carthage and Wyoming.

Incidental connections at Aurora, Camp Point, Carthage and Streator.

General connections at Chicago, Galesburg and Quincy.

River and lake connections at Chicago, Peoria, Burlington, Keokuk and Quincy.

This road, with its divergencies at Galesburg and its numerous branches, commands more of the military tract—the Illinois Garden—than all other roads put together. Of its 709 miles, 666 are in Illinois. Its immense accumulations of freight from different points up to Buda, render it difficult to keep the road in first-class condition, and a double track is indispensable. It has three passenger trains from Quincy, four from Galesburg, five from Mendota and six from Aurora, every week-day. As a well managed, well made, thoroughly equipped road, none is superior.

Peoria is certainly the third and claims to be the second city in the State, while Burlington and Keokuk, Iowa, are reckoned among the minor important places in the Union. Aurora, Ottawa, Galesburg and Monmouth are placed among important Illinois towns. Princeton, Knoxville, Macomb, Oquawka, Aledo, Rushville, Lewistown and Carthage, county seats, with Riverside, Hinsdale, Naperville, Sandwich, Mendota, Princeton, Bushnell, Canton, Yates City, Galva and New Boston are large places.

Several colleges, and numerous institutions of learning are on the main and branch lines.

In our January number we shall give like notices of the Ohio & Mississippi; Rockford, Rock Island & St. Louis; Springfield & Illinois Southeastern; Gilman, Clinton & Springfield; Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western; Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville, and Rock Island & Peoria.

This will be followed by similar articles, collated from the latest publications, until all the railways in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and west of them have passed in review. We believe that very few, outside of intelligent railroad men, are aware of the immensity of our vast investments in these great thoroughfares, which enterprising men say are only in infancy.

Spirit of our Correspondence.

One brother writes, that the pulpits are fulminating anathemas against our beloved Order all through his region, and that some heretofore very zealous, are drawing away: others stand firm.

We say to the faithful brethren, be steadfast, and on the bed of death, great will be your reward.

The Grand Chapter of England

Met in quarterly convocation in London, November 1, Rev. John Huyshe in the chair. Charters were granted for seven new chapters, two of which are in the East Indies.

Kentucky.---Grand Commandery.

Through the politeness of Sir W. C. Munger, G. R., we are in receipt of the proceedings of the Grand Commandery of Kentucky, which occurred at Mt. Sterling, July 12, R. E. Sir W. A. Warner, presiding.

Due honors were paid to the memory of Past Grand Master, B. B. French.

The Grand Commander, in his address, insisted upon the uniform use of Welsh's Templar Drill and Tactics.

Rock River R. A. Chapter No. 151.

M. E. Comp. James A. Hawley, assisted by M. E. Comps. Dodge, of Dixon, Glen, of Franklin Grove, and several Companions of Nachusa and Nathan Whitney Chapters, constituted Rock River Chapter No. 151, at Oregon City.

W. E. Thorpe, H. P.; G. M. Dwight, K.; L. Hormell, S., H. A. Mix, C. H.; H. L. Currier, P. S.; H. P. Sargent, R. A. C.; L. Wilson, R. Ray, J. Harris, Masters of Veils; J. D. Lott, Treas.; J. E. Hitt, Sec.; G. M. McKinney, Tyler.

M. E. Comp. Hawley gives much praise to Comp. S. O. Vaughn for the acknowledged working ability of the excellent companions in this chapter. Comp. Thorpe, recently from Western New York, is thoroughly posted and an efficient officer.

THE following donations have been made for relief in various ways in Chicago:

From Grand Chain, $30.00; Magnolia, $13.00; Jeffersonville, $25.00; Rossville, $16.00; McLean, 28.00.

The Newspaper Union,

Weekly, at 13 North Jefferson St., Chicago; a business journal. Its publishers furnish paper printed on one side to rural publishers, Charles E. Strong, manager, $1.00

The printer's warehouse, by Messrs, Rounds and Kane, is in the second story of the Newspaper Union office, 13 North Jefferson St., who are now ready to fill all orders for type, cases, ink, electrotyping and matters in their line.

The Newspaper Union occupies the third floor, and The Legal News is printed in the same office.

The press room of the establishment occupies the basement, and the Taylor Printing Press Company occupy the first story.

The great fire has proved our friend Rounds to be the real Sterling.

WE are always glad to hear good things from our former Illinois brethren "out West." Our Past Grand High Priest, Geo. W. Lininger, is doing good service in organizing industrial enterprises at Council Bluffs, which now bids fair, ere many years, to be one of the first cities of Iowa.

The National School Festival,

By Alfred L. Sewell & Co., is a pamphlet of thirty-two pages, published at 132 Fifth Avenue, Chicago; quarterly, at 50 cents a year.

It is devoted to schools, school exercises, habits, customs, sports, exhibitions and gala-days, with some Sunday School thrown in. Mrs. M. B. C. Slade of Fall River, Mass., is assistant editor.

The Little Corporal

Was routed but not conquered in the great fire, and the December number has come to hand as fresh, sparkling and vigorous as ever. It contains a full-page illustration by Thomas Nast, the prince of artists, and among the articles we notice one from Horace Greeley, on "Art and Industry."

This number contains many rich things and is beautifully illustrated throughout.

The publisher announces that in the next number will begin the $500 prize story, written by Helen C. Weeks, noted writer for the young. This will no doubt be a charming story, and all the boys and girls will be delighted with it.

She was a Woman.

We concur in the main with the sentiments expressed in the following article taken from the Masonic Mirror, with the exception of the last sentence, which, while in some sense true, is severe and unjust in its indiscriminate condemnation. Besides, while repentance should be as cordially commended and cherished in women as in men, yet, there is an argument on woman's side, which in their delicacy they seldom use, but which is more powerful than any denunciation or sweeping accusations. There are more good women in the world than men.

We have heard time and again of the prodigal son. What of the prodigal daughter? She exists. A Rochester newspaper brings us the meagre outline of the career of one whose condition seems to us so peculiarly sad, and at the same time so representative of the experience of many another prodigal daughter, whose case has never been recorded, that we take it as a text of a paragraph here. The girl, when residing at home, was a teacher in the Sunday school, and enjoyed the respect of her friends and the love of her family. For some time past she had been living at a house of ill repute in a city distant from her native place. At the solicitation of her family her former pastor communicated with her, and finally went to visit her, and informed her of the conditions upon which she might return home and be shielded from the necessity of clinging to her present mode of life. Those conditions were, that she should give up that mode forever, return to her native place and enter an asylum. The heart-broken penitent expressed her willingness to embrace the first two conditions, but shook her head at the third. Her soul was hungering and thirsting for love—for a father's blessing, a mother's kiss, the sympathy of the brothers and sisters among whom she had spent a happy childhood. She was longing to be forgiven, yearning to be received back into the good old path once more. It was the old story over again of the inhumanity of society and the family to women. The prodigal son is received with open arms; the prodigal daughter is given the cold shoulder. The fatted calf is killed for one; the broken bits are given to the other. The girl asked for her family, and they gave her an asylum—demanded love and they yielded charity.

And who makes and enforces these laws of society, which accepts the libertine and destroyer of female virtue into society and thrusts out the victim? It is woman. She it is who courts the society of the rake, and lavishes her smiles upon the roue and debauchee, and gathers her skirts about her with a holy horror of being contaminated by the touch of one of her own sex who has stepped from the path of virtue and innocence; no matter if that one single act has been washed out with the tears of true repentance, and made white with the forgiveness of our Heavenly Father, woman never forgives nor overlooks. Surely, woman's inhumanity to woman make countless thousands mourn.

THE Masons at Galveston, Texas, are making an effort to build a Masonic Temple in that city. A lot 128x120 already belongs to one of the lodges of that city, and it is proposed to raise $100,000 by subscription to erect a temple thereon.

Selected Poetry.

Opening Ode, E. S.

When the scene of life changes from pleasure to gloom,
And the soul sees its midnight unset by a ray,
When the spirit droops low 'neath the weight of its doom,
As the hopes that once lighted its halls die away,
Then there shines through the windows of heaven afar,
Bright gleams that shed peace from a beautiful Star,
The "Star of the East," that most beautiful Star.

When the willows are waving o'er graves wherein lie
The first-born of mothers whose tears will not dry;
Or the widow bends, crushed with the blight of despair,
All the comfort departed that made life so fair,
Then there comes through the vista of sorrow afar,
For the cheerless a light from a beautiful Star,
The Star of the East, that most beautiful Star.

This Eastern Star blends in its mantle of light,
All the colors that make up a picture as bright
As charity, patience, long suff'ring and love,
Can catch from the rapture of angels above,
As it shines through the windows of heaven afar;
And we bless and adore thee, our beautiful Star,
Thou Star of the East, oh! most beautiful Star.

Old Grandfather Graybeard's Corner.

Dear Bro. Reynolds:

I was very sorry that I did not get an article ready for the November number; but do you know that the great National calamity, the fire in Chicago, so upset me that I could do nothing but grieve. To think that the beautiful city, where only the week before we had met in annual communication and which we left only the day before the fire with the fond hope (if the author of our existence would spare our lives) of meeting there next year, should now be a heap of smouldering desolation. Our beautiful temples destroyed; our brethren impoverished; some beggared—the hard-earned accumulations of years swept away in a moment with the besom of destruction, and the bright enterprises of the future all buried in the overwhelming calamity—it was awful to think of. But I thank God there is not a cloud so black but that it has a silver lining; no providence so dark but that behind it is our Heavenly Father's smiling face, and as the cloud passes away and the effect of the first shock is over, we feel to thank our God that it is no worse. Such has it been with Chicago; as one said: "I have my wife and children left, my trust is still in God; and, although I cannot foresee the dangers and difficulties that beset my pathway, yet with implicit confidence I place my hand in his and say I will follow thee wheresoever you conduct me." Then the silver lining began to appear and the smiling face seemed to say: "Your trust is well founded; arise, stand up and I will show thee that the almighty dollar has not crushed out all of man in man." And the great telegraph of Christianity, of Masonry and humanity was set in motion; whole trains of provisions, millions of dollars in money and piles of clothing came in, and oh! those heart-cheering, warm words of sympathy that flashed along the wires: "Stand fast but a few hours, help is at hand;" and the millionaire of yesterday and the poor man of to-day mingled their tears together; not at their losses, but broken down by the warm, generous sympathy of his brother man, in this his hour of distress. And they took courage; the cloud had passed and the silver lining was reflecting, and the bright smile cheered them on.

"I will arise," says one, "Chicago shall arise; my wife and children shall have an earned support, shall have a home again, and if ever I forget the poor and suffering, the homeless and the destitute, may my right hand forget its cunning; if I do not remember them, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." So the black cloud of Chicago is not without its silver lining, and Chicago will rise, and man will be more merciful, having passed through the fires of affliction; they will know how to succor those in distress. Yes, Chicago will be rebuilt and with more substantial buildings, and her society will be rebuilt with more substantial man and womanhood; a society not of fashion and vice and cold selfishness, but one to whom the burdened heart may pour out its sorrows; to whom distress may prefer its suit, whose hand will be guided by justice and whose heart will be expanded by benevolence.

Yes, Chicago will rise again, better, I trust, for the burning; and, please God, we will meet there next year in grand annual communication, unless sooner called to meet in everlasting communication in the Celestial Lodge above, where the Supreme Architect of the Universe presides.

GRANDFATHER GRAYBEARD.

Two thousand dollars was donated to the Chicago sufferers.

Miscellaneous.

Poor Humanity.

More than half a century since, the following lines were found in the Royal College of Surgeons, London, beside a skeleton remarkable for its symmetry of form. They were subsequently published in the London Morning Chronicle and a vain effort made to ascertain the author, even offering a reward of fifty guineas:

Behold this ruin! 'Twas a skull
Once of ethereal spirit full.
This narrow cell was life's retreat!
This space was thought's mysterious seat.
What beauteous visions filled this spot
With dreams of pleasure, long forgot!
Nor hope, nor joy, nor love, nor fear,
Have left one trace of record here.

Beneath this mouldering canopy
Once shone the bright and busy eye,
But start not at the dismal void!
If social love that eye employed;
If with no lawless fire it gleamed;
But through the dews of kindness beamed:
That eye shall be forever bright
When sun and stars are sunk in night.

Within this hollow cavern hung
The ready, swift and tuneful tongue;
If falsehood's honey it disdained,
And when it could not praise, was chained;
If bold in virtue's cause it spoke,
Yet gentle concord never broke;
The silent tongue that plead for thee,
When time unveils eternity.

Say, did these fingers delve the mine,
Or with the envied ruby shine!
To hew the rock, or wear the gem,
Can little now avail to them.
But if the page of truth they sought,
Or comfort to the mourner brought—
These hands a richer meed shall claim
Than all that waits on wealth or fame.

Avails it whether bare or shod,
These feet the path of duty trod?
If from the bowers of ease they fled,
To seek affliction's humble shed;
If grandeur's guilty bribe they spurned,
And home to virtue's cot returned—
These feet with angel's wings shall rise,
And tread the palace of the skies.

A Child's Coffin.

The other evening, after attending the theatre, we strolled down Main street and suddenly encountered a man carrying a coffin—a child's coffin—so small and tiny that it seemed only death in miniature. Now, there is nothing so remarkable, after all, that a child should die, and that a man should carry home it's coffin; but the man was very poor—his homely garb spoke of the unremitting struggle against want—and as he walked onward his footsteps smote upon the listening ear like a muffled funeral knell. Gazing and listening intently, we were suddenly aroused by the expression: "Why that's only a Swede, his child died this morning." Turning around, we saw that the heartless words eminated from Charles Augustus Jacksnipe, a fast young gent of much cane and tall silk hat. He was in company with a coterie of kindred spirits, and passed onward, intent on a "high old time." "Only a Swede!"—Oh, gay and noble Jacksnipes! your philosophy is consoling; but for all that Swedes will mourn.

In the cool, birchen woods of Sweden, perchance, not long ago, a young married couple, with their blue-eyed, fair-haired child, walked down the well-remembered path to the music of the Sabbath bells. They were on their way to the old church for the last time, for early the next week they would sail for America, that mysterious yet golden Eldorado where there is work and bread for all. The venerable pastor blesses them, and the neighbors pray for them, simply, yet earnestly.

The day of departure from their native land comes all too soon for them, and the young mother, with the baby clasped to her breast, gazes with tear-dimmed eyes on the receding shores of Sweden. After a perilous and wearisome voyage, they at last reach the ultimatum of all their mingled hopes and doubting fear—the new world. Surely here is rest. Alas, no! They wander westward. The willing husband labors hard and faithfully when he can find anything to do, and the patient wife sews, washes, or does anything else to make a dollar, and thus they struggle on. For their hearts were strong, their hopes were high, and they had determined to fight the battle of life together to the end. But a sad day came, however; a crushing, withering blow. The little winsome blue-eyed girl; the mother's constant solace, and the father's daily relief and pride; the fond object of their united afection and ceaseless toil; their all, sickened and died. And thus it was we met the man carrying home a child's coffin.

"Only a Swede," forsooth! And yet, that stricken mother, in the humble garb of those who toil for the needs of life, will wail and mourn as bitterly as a bereaved queen. In that lowly home, once joyous with infantile prattle, all is sorrow and gloom, for in the first terrible hours of this their most grievous affliction, the light of life seems forever darkened, and among strangers in a strange land, the mother weeps over the little form that she will never press to her heart again. All that remains now is the sad and dreary march to "Potter's field," and the lowering of that little coffin into earth. Then the night of silent sorrow in the laborer's rude home, and the cheerless thought of future toil without their darling.

But why this sad picture? The child, from poverty has gone to wear the diadem of an angel. All this and still the mother is weeping and weary; still to plod the comfortless round of humble life unnoticed by the happy world. Blessed be the poor, for their afflictions are sore and many. And may He who chastens sorrow look down with pity and mercy upon many a stricken mother who only waits to rejoin her darling in paradise—in that eternal and never-fading city where sorrow and death shall never come, and where mothers never weep.—Joe Pryor, in Galesburg Register.

The Great Fires in Chicago, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Our readers are already aware through the voluminous reports of the daily press, of the great fires in Chicago and the northwest, hence we shall enter into no details of them, even if we had words to do justice to our feelings.

The loss of life in the northwest was far in excess of that in Chicago, hence it was a far greater calamity than the loss of the city, were it not that so many persons were rendered homeless. The destruction of property is nothing in comparison to the loss of life, except where it produces suffering almost equal to death itself. Thank God the sympathetic heart of the civilized world beat in one throb of pity for the sufferers and millions of dollars poured in from the north, south, east and west, not only of this continent, but from all Europe, and thus will the tempered sufferings of the city be soon obliterated and forgotten. We are glad also that the northwest sufferers are being rapidly provided for and hope soon to hear that "all is well" there again. No question of sect or section was asked by the national heart—it was enough to know that humanity was suffering, and humanity sprang forth with generous relief. It has been the grandest spectacles of human aid the world has ever witnessed, and it stamps "divinity" upon the record of the human race.

The Chicago Masonic Board of Relief is doing a noble work, under the presidency of the Grand Master, Bro. DeWitt C. Cregier, a whole-souled, generous and energetic gentleman. Our State and subordinate bodies have already contributed, but they will do much more if it is known that more is needed, and of which we can be informed in a few hours.

Even from far off New Mexico, at Elizabethtown, one of our youngest lodges, "Kit Carson 326," under jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, mailed $100 as early as the 16th of October. That shows how the chord of human and Masonic sympathy extend around the world, like the wires of electricity.—Freemason, St. Louis.

An Obstinate Elephant.

O'Brien's menagerie exhibited in Meriden yesterday, says the New Haven Register of October, and after the close of the afternoon performance, the great elephant Mogul took it into his head to enact a tragedy not in the bills; so walking majestically out of his enclosure he went for his keeper in a fit of rage. The keeper sought refuge under the cage containing the kangaroos, which Mogul disdainfully turned over in a jiffy, and walked through the canvass out of doors. Then he went on a tour of inspection, and, if not "seeking whom he might devour," he certainly seemed willing to accommodate anybody or anything that might wish for a set-to. Meeting a pile of lumber in the adjoining lumber-yard, he quickly spread the boards in good shape for seasoning. Then meeting in his path one of the mules belonging to the company, he ran his tusks completely through the body, pining it to the ground, and killing the animal instantly.

The next obstruction in his majesty's path was a wagon belonging to Messrs. Grethers & Hall, which he scornfully seized with his trunk, and raising it, smashed it to pieces; then he returned to the dead mule, and again plunged his tusks through it, and breaking off one of his tusks close to the jaw, sauntering carelessly into State street, with none to molest or make him afraid, the crowd following at a safe distance, while before him and about him everybody seemed to be very busy in getting out of his way. The keeper, and other attaches of the menagerie soon rallied, and by strategy and good tactics he was induced to enter a field belonging to Mr. Camp, thence into an orchard, where he indulged in the pastime of tearing and smashing whole lengths of picket fence.

The novel mode of subduing him, temporarily, by shooting him in the face and trunk with buckshot was adopted. Some fifty heavy charges were fired at him; the stinging effect acted well as a slight check upon his operations, during which his keeper fearlessly approached and chained him to an apple tree about twelve inches in diameter, which was no sooner discovered by the enraged animal than he instantly and without apparent effort, but the greatest ease, tore it up by the roots and again created the greatest consternation among the immense crowd who had now collected in the immediate vicinity. All went, and stood not in the order of going, but some tall running was done and some laughable incidents occurred in the stampede, leaving the ground free to Mogul and his would-be captors.

He was, by great daring and agility on the part of his keeper, again secured by chaining his hind feet to a very large tree; here he was left for the night and a guard stationed with rifles loaded with ball to kill him should he again break loose during the night. He was evidently much chagrined at the confinement, and continued to "snort" and struggle to break the chain, affording much excitement throughout the city the entire night, but fortunately he was held until about five o'clock this morning, when the entire force of the concern and about five hundred citizens undertook the job of punishing and subduing the monster. Large ropecs and chains were procured, and after many attempts, in which the same were broken quite easily, he was finally at the end of two hours thrown down and secured in that position, when simultaneously his beating began by a dozen strong men with clubs, iron bars, spears and pitchforks and continued until the men were exhausted, and again renewed from time to time for about two hours. After many wounds and pounding enough to seemingly kill him, he was obstinate as ever. Refusing to surrender, he was left to his own reflections in this condition and the beating abated for a time. At the present time of writing (12 hours) he seems determined not to succumb. A choice he has of doing so or being killed, as in his dangerous mood he will not be allowed to rise without evidence of a change of heart. It is estimated that the damage done in his tantrums will cost over $700.

Fortunate it is that no lives were lost.

Recommendation by M. W. Bro. J. R. Gorin, P. G. M. at the Grand Communication of 1867.

The Masonic Trowel has been published among us for several years, and has been conducted with such ability as to command the respect of all who are in the habit of reading it. It has at no time "trimmed its sails" to catch the popular breeze, but has maintained an independence greatly to be admired. Highly dignified and moral in its tone, it receives a hearty welcome into the families of those brethren who have taken it. * * * * I cheerfully recommend that it be taken by every Mason in this jurisdiction, who is able to do so. Especially do I think that every officer of a lodge should read it.

The Committee to whom the address of the Grand Master was referred, reported as follows in relation to The Trowel, which was adopted:

"It is invaluable to the Craft in this State, and your Committee are of the opinion that it should be in the hands of every Mason within this jurisdiction."

Press Comments.

Welcome The Trowel.—Our M. W. Bro. H. G. Reynolds, P. G. M. of Illinois, and editor and proprietor of The Trowel, published at Springfield, Illinois, it will be remembered, lost his whole establishment by fire on the 22d of February last. Like a phœnix he has risen a new Trowel from the ashes, well filled with Masonic matter. We wish him success.—N. Y. Dispatch.

The Trowel is very ably edited.—Loyalist.

The Trowel.—We were exceedingly gratified a few days since on receiving the second number (the first failing to reach us), of the new series of this, one of the most popular and able of the Masonic periodicals of the country. Our readers have already been informed of the great loss which its estimable editor, R. W. Bro. H. G. Reynolds, sustained by the calamitous fire at Springfield, in which his office, including printing materials and his valuable library, was destroyed, together with the books, records, regalia and furniture of the grand and subordinate lodges which held their meetings in the same building. The loss to Bro. Reynolds personally was ruinous. It swept away the fruits of years of hard labor and left him with little else than his own commanding abilities and untiring perseverance and industry for the future. His brethren have generously sympathized in his misfortune and he starts off again in the battle of life with renewed energies and, we most sincerely trust, with brighter and better prospects before him.—Magazine, Boston.

The Masonic Trowel is the acknowledged organ of the Fraternity in the West. It is edited with marked ability.—Ripon Commonwealth.

Masonic Trowel.--This valuable publication is again established on sound basis and comes to us laden with much useful knowledge. Every member of the Order in Woodford county should send $1.25 to the publisher and assist Bro. Reynolds to spread the light abroad. We know of no better publication for the benefit of the Craft than The Trowel.—Woodford Sentinel.

In regard to The Trowel, we believe that it ought to be the companion of every Illinois Mason.—Tazewell Register.

The Trowel.—We are glad to welcome Bro. Reynolds again, after his severe loss by fire. The Trowel looks as fresh and inviting as ever, and we trust it may have a long and successful career. It is one of our best exchanges, and Bro. Reynolds is one of the most experienced and scholarly editors in the country.—Review.

The great interest to which The Trowel is devoted is expounded by it in every particular, so plain that every one can understand. Every Mason should take The Trowel.—Argus, Miami, Kan.

The Masonic Trowel makes its appearance this week, looking better for having passed through the fiery ordeal. Typographically, it is equal in appearance to any of the most pretentious papers of the older cities. Mr. Reynolds merits, and we doubt not will receive, the hearty co-operation of the Masonic Fraternity in making The Trowel as useful as it is ornamental—and if they do, he will soon regain all his material losses by the fire.—Illinois Atlas.

The Masonic Trowel fully deserves the encomiums lavished upon it by the press, and we heartily commend it to all "Eastern Travelers." —Journal, Bennettsville, S. C.

Out of the Ashes.—The Masonic Trowel reaches us bright and new. It has risen from the ashes of the great fire in Springfield of Feb. 22. We congratulate Bro. Reynolds on his success in getting started again. The new Trowel is printed in almost exactly the style of the old one, giving it a familiar, friendly look. We have no doubt the lodges throughout the State will extend to The Trowel a friendly hand, and aid Bro. Reynolds in retrieving the heavy losses sustained by the fire. The terms are only $1.25 per annum, which is certainly cheap enough for such a paper. Subscribe for it.—El Paso Journal.

The May number—number one of the new series—of The Masonic Trowel is before us. It is a real gem, and speaks volumes of praise in behalf of Bro. Reynolds, the editor and publisher, whose zeal and industry is seldom surpassed. It will be remembered that the office of The Trowel, together with the editor's large and valuable library of law, theological, miscellaneous and Masonic books and papers, also those of the Grand Lodge of this State, were totally destroyed on the 22d of February last. Bro. Reynolds has now succeeded in resurrecting The Trowel and gets it up in the nicest style from new type which merits the hearty support of the entire brotherhood. All records of the Order in this State, also any printed matter from anywhere pertaining to Masonry sent to the office of The Trowel will be thankfully received.—Guardian, Olney.

The Trowel.—It will be recollected that a short time since our confrere of The Trowel, M. W. Bro. Harman G. Reynolds, had the misfortune to lose his printing office, library and worldly goods, generally, by fire. We are rejoiced to learn that with true grit he has bent his back to the new burden, and started in the race again. He expected to have the new issue out on the 5th, ult., and will doubtless soon fill up the gap caused by his misfortune. Meanwhile there is nothing better than to help those who try to help themselves, wherefore we solicit all who can do so, to at least send him the price of one year's subscription to The Trowel, viz: $1.25. Beside the comfortable feeling arising from a good act, every one who takes the paper will more than get his money back in good Masonic and entertaining reading.—New York Dispatch.

We had missed The Trowel from our exchange list, but it came to hand a few days since in a new dress, which sets most gracefully upon it and renders it the neatest, as it has long been the best, Masonic publication that we see. It is invaluable to every Mason who wishes to keep posted.—Advertiser, Kewanee.

We are pleased to welcome The Trowel again on our table. The terrible fire that destroyed the office has not destroyed the paper, which phœnix-like rises from the ashes.—Courier.

Is an excellent Masonic paper—full of news and literature.—Token.

The Masonic Trowel.—We perceive that the publication of this journal—the oldest Masonic publication in the State—has been resumed by its conductor, Harman G. Reynolds, Esq., at Springfield. It will be recollected that the office was entirely destroyed by fire on the 22d February last. The many friends of the editor will be glad to learn that he is on his feet again. The Trowel is very neatly printed, and contains a large amount of reading of value to the Craft, besides much of a miscellaneous character. Issued monthly at $1.25 a year. Every Mason in the State would find benefit by taking The Trowel.—Belleville Democrat.

It is a jewel in appearance and matter and deserves the greatest encouragement.—Orient, Taylorville.

The Trowel Redivivus.—Our friend Reynolds, as will be seen by the Tidings of to-day, has resurrected his Trowel from the ashes. He makes a tip-top Masonic paper, and we wish him entire success.—Tidings.

While Masonry has so able a champion in the West as Bro. Reynolds, our Masonic friends have no need to look to the East for light.—Memento.

The paper is excellent and the letter-press clear and legible, and we commend The Trowel to the brethren throughout the State.—State Register.

The Masonic Trowel is a work of great value to the Craft, contains sound Masonic instruction and should be read by every Mason.—Dispatch, Pine Bluff, Ark.

The Masonic Trowel is a publication that cannot be dispensed with; it gives the laws and recent decisions of our noble Order; it throws light upon disputed points, and each number is filled with short lectures upon subjects pertaining to the Craft, valuable to every Mason wishing "more light."—Lacon Journal.

In its zeal for the good of the Craft, the ability of its editorials and diversity of matter interesting to Masons it is second to no publication of the times.—Olive Wreath.

Every member of the Order wishing to keep himself well-informed, should subscribe.—Experiment, Texas.

As we become more familiar with its pages, the better we appreciate its value, as every Mason would who wants knowledge pertaining to the Craft.—West Union Gazette.

The Masonic Fraternity in the State of Illinois need no introduction to this periodical, nor to its worthy editor, Bro. H. G. Reynolds. It is par excellence, the home organ of the Craft, and indispensable to every member of the Mystic Order who would keep fully posted on Masonic topics.—Freeport Journal.

Mr. Reynolds is a veteran in the field, having received his instructions from the fathers among our own Green Mountains; he teaches no false doctrine, but ever true to the faith he received in his youth, is constant as the sun. His journal contains a variety well fitted to be read in the family circle as well as among the Craft. No publication in the United States of its character has so sterling merit or gives better counsel, and what it teaches is reliable.—Herald, Rutland, Vt.

It is now in its seventh year. Price, $1.25 per year. Every number is worth the money paid. —Home Advocate.

America.—One of the most popular and ably conducted Masonic journals in America, The Masonic Trowel, we can confidently recommend to our Masonic brethren as a most useful and entertaining periodical.—Record of Western India.

The best Masonic paper published is The Masonic Trowel. It is valuable on account of its reliability and the jealous eye with which it guards the ancient landmarks.—Frontier Democrat, Kan.

Of its teachings, we can only say, if the Fraternity live up to them, the millenium cannot be distant, for the Masonic brotherhood are, in numbers, almost sufficient to control the world and their influence for good would be great indeed.—Home Journal.

Every number contains several pages of reading matter of especial interest to the Fraternity, by eminent Masonic writers, besides matters of interest to all reading, thinking people.—Register, Canton.

It contains all the main points of the proceedings of the different grand bodies, as well as all other items of interest to the Craft.—Quincy Herald.

The paper is filled with matter of interest to the Craft, and should be well patronized. We wish The Trowel success, and trust that it may long continue to "spread the cement of brotherly love and affection."—Cal. Sunday Mercury.

A.F. and A.M.—The Masonic Trowel, published at Springfield, by H. G. Reynolds, Esq., Past Grand Master and Past Grand Secretary, in the interest of the Masonic fraternity, is one of the oldest of its kind in the country. We learn that the November number will contain articles from the pen of Mr. William Rounseville, well known to the Fraternity both in this and other States Being the initial number of the second half of Vol. 10, it is now an excellent time to subscribe and we know of none—exclusively Masonic in its character—more worthy of the support of its friends.—Centralia Sentinel.

The Masonic Trowel, a comprehensive and ably edited journal, conducted by Bro. H. G. Reynolds (a leading member of the Masonic Order), is again received. We are glad to notice many improvements in the paper since it was resurrected from the Springfield fire, by which Mr. Reynolds was a large loser in printing materials and Masonic documents. The Rounseville department of The Trowel is a new and notable feature, of which all Masons should be fully advised. We regard Tue Trowel as a gem in the sphere of Masonic literature, and hope it will extend its circulation many thousands.—Streator Monitor.

Should be in the hands of every member of the Order.—Press, Mich.

The Masonic Trowel is a periodical of great worth, and would afford the brethren much valuable information.—Register, Springfield, Tenn.

We have received The Masonic Trowel, a paper published at Springfield, Illinois. It is a handsome sheet and is devoted to literature and Masonry.—New Era, Atlanta, Ga.

We commend it to all Masons as an instructive and entertaining companion.—Chatham Tribune.

The Masonic Trowel of November contains several very interesting articles from the pen of Bro. Rounseville, who, we understand, will be a constant contributor. This number is the first number of the second half of Vol. 10. We rejoice at the prosperity of The Trowel, as indicative of good to the Order and success to an editor (H. G. Reynolds) who, for his many virtues, deserves the patronage of his brethren.—Crisis.

FREEMASONRY IN THE HOLY LAND.

These interesting lectures became so popular last winter that I found it impossible to fill engagements required in this State, and at the earnest solicitation of friends, have concluded to spend a portion of the winter here. I therefore make the following proposition to the several Masonic lodges in Illinois and elsewhere.

To deliver my Lodge Lecture on Masonic Researches in the Holy Land, verifying the truth of Masonic ritual and tradition, and exhibit some interesting relics from Jerusalem. I will also give an account of my visit to the English lodges, with the forms of initiation, passing, raising, schools of instruction, banquets, signs, passes, &c., &c. My charge for this Lecture is twenty dollars and expenses while at your place.

My Public Lecture is descriptive of Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Easter Week in the Holy City, Gethsemane, the Mount of Olives, and the surrounding country.

My charge for the two Lectures is thirty dollars and expenses while at your place. For admission to the public lectures you can charge such sum as you see fit. Properly managed, it will pay the entire expenses and ought to leave a fair surplus for the benefit of the Lodge.

THE STAR,

with its five points in Blue, Yellow, White Red and Green colors, with the emblems in each and the Pentagon in the center, with its usual divisions, letters and devices.

Over the Star, in Gold are the words,

"I have seen His Star in the East,"

while beneath it, in Green are the words,

"And have come to worship Him."

The border is blue and red, and the spaces are filled with ornaments in gold.

On the opposite side is a certificate embordered in Red and Blue, with large letters "E. S.," in light shading, in the centre, over which is printed a blank certificate, with room in one corner for seal, to be signed by the Matron and attested by the Secretary. On the end is a line for a signature of the lady receiving this certificate. The thought came from Bro. Hubbard—the design is our own.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

DOTY'S WASHING MACHINE,

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.

Improved with ROWELL'S PATENT DOUBLE COG-WHEELS, and the PATENT STOP, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

Those who have used them give testimony as follows:

"We like our machine much; could not be persuaded to do without it and with the aid of Doty, we feel that we are masters of the position."—Rev. L. Scott, Bishop M. E. Church.

"In the laundry of my house there is a perpetual thanksgiving on Mondays for the invention."—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

"Every week has given it a stronger hold upon the affections of the laundry."—N. Y. Observer.

"I heartily commend it to economists of time, money, and contentment."—Rev. Dr. Bellows.

"Friend Doty—Your last improvement of your Washing Machine is a complete success. I assure you 'our Machine,' after a year's use, is thought more of to-day than ever, and would not be parted with under any circumstances."—Solon Robinson.

The N. Y. Weekly Tribune, of December 15, 1869, in answer to a correspondent, says: "Of Washers, there is none to be compared with Doty's."

Married.

In Raritan, Illinois, Dec. 29, 1870, at the house of Bro. James Fee, by Rev. Bro. S. A. Pickard, Bro. FRANK FARRELL, a member of A. Lincoln Lodge No. 518, to Miss FRANCES CUDDEBACK, all of Raritan.

Died.

Sophia T. Slack.

At a meeting of Ipava Lodge No. 213, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased God in his providence to remove from our midst our beloved sister SOPHIA L. SLACK, an aged mother in the church and the mother of our Worshipful Master, Bro. James T. Slack; and,

WHEREAS, The members of this lodge feel a desire to express a sense of their love and esteem for the amiable and lovely character of our deceased sister, as well as their sympathy for her surviving family and friends in this their sad bereavement; therefore be it

Resolved, That in this afflictive dispensation of Providence, we acknowledge the hand of God, who "doeth all things well," and bow in humble submission to his will.

Resolved, That in the death of our aged sister, society has lost one of its brightest ornaments, the church one of its firmest and most consistent members, and the family a wise counsellor, a warm and sincere friend, and a loving and affectionate mother.

Resolved, That the members of this lodge hereby express their heartfelt sympathy with our Worshipful Master, and with all the mourning friends and family of our deceased sister, in this sad bereavement, and affectionately commend them to the care of Him who "tempers the winds to the shorn lambs;" and who alone can comfort them in their hour of sorrow, and lead them at last to join their mother in heaven, where parting is unknown and where there is fullness of joy forevermore.

Resolved, That these proceedings be entered on the records of the lodge, and the Secretary be instructed to present a copy of the same to the family of the deceased.

By order of the lodge.

I. DAVID, Secretary.

In this city, Dec. 31, CHARLES GLANCY, elder son of James A. and Louisa Julia Death, and grandson of the Editor of this paper, aged two years and six months.

The old and new year closed and began in sadness and sorrow. The bright boy had won upon the affection and pride of his relatives, and gave promise of strength and mind; but in defiance of every possible effort, passed away.

Rev. Mr. Carnahan conducted the funeral exercises, and on the first day of the year, we laid the little form away with our own loved ones, to await the final call.

Bro. J. C. TUCKER, died at Duval's Bluffs, Ark., Nov. 30, 1870, aged 25 years.

He was kindly cared for by members of the Masonic Fraternity at that place. His remains were brought home to El Paso by his parents. He was a member of El Paso Lodge No. 246, of A. F. and A. Masons, and was buried by that body with the usual Masonic honors.

Col. WILLIAM SMITH, Past Master of Mt. Joliet and Matteson Lodges, died at Joliet in Oct. last, at the advanced age of 82 years.

The veteran was an excellent man, and a true Mason in every sense. Where is the anti-Mason who dares utter one word in his dispraise?

At Kewanee, October 5th, Bro. WM. H. BURNS, a member of Wethersfield Lodge No. 159, and of Kewanee Chapter No. 47, aged 34 years.

Performance of Masonic Work.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Technically, the "work" of a Masonic lodge consists of the conferring degrees. That much depends upon the method in which it is performed, no one who has once been within the walls of a lodge-room, will dispute. But notwithstanding that fact, we fear that it is not realized in a sufficient degree. The work of the lodge is an important business. It is the performance of one of the most solemn ceremonies that has ever been ordained or established by man, and it should be performed in such a manner as to leave that impression on the minds of the candidates for its mysteries. From the first introduction to the ante-room, to the final induction to the Master's station, the idea of its importance should be kept up.

But we greatly fear that brethren frequently lose sight of this duty. The candidate should be prepared, as well in mind as by symbols, for the important work in which he is about to engage. Is this always done? When he arrives at the threshold of the lodge, has his mind been suitably prepared for the solemnities which are to ensue? Does he believe that when he steps across that threshold, and enters upon the ceremonies of initiation, that what he shall see and hear shall teach great moral lessons, and that through the symbolic language of the lodge shall be taught him great practical truths by which his life is to be governed?

This should be his frame of mind and these should be his expectations. And yet we know this is not always the case. The unwise and foolish interference of misguided brethren too frequently clothe the vision of the candidate for the future with scenes of buffoonery and mirth. Adopting some of the common, but erroneous opinions of the outside world, they make allusions in his presence to the burning iron and the goat, and by holding up to his susceptible mind, alive to every statement in regard to what he is about to undergo, they manage to make him believe that the work upon which he is entering is a silly burlesque that a buffoon might love and delight in, but which is beneath the dignity of an honorable man; and if he is a man of sense, he enters with his prejudices aroused to a degree that utterly precludes a fair and candid estimate of the real value of the Institution. All this effect is frequently produced before the candidate appears for initiation, and this will account for many of those who, having made application and been received, never present themselves for the degrees.

But the evil does not end outside of the lodge. The candidate presents himself for initiation, and is seated in the ante-chamber. The members naturally gather around him, congratulate him upon his reception, which they ought to do, and frequently add to the impressions already received of the trifling nature of the Institution, by ill-timed jests and allusions to the ceremonies, which are without foundation and wrong. Too often the officer sent to induct the candidate into the lodge, adds his voice to the general acclaim and joins in the ridiculous scheme to render the impression of the worthlessness permanent. Even in the performance of the duties of his office, and in the explanations which he ought to make, and which the candidate has a right to expect, there is a vein of levity which is calculated to efface all good impressions, and still further confirm the neophite in the idea that he has formed of the trifling character of the ceremony through which he is about to pass.

We do not suppose that these influences always exist about a candidate; but it will not be disputed that they exist too often. And admitting this, there is an inference to be drawn that is probably of more importance to the Fraternity than most members imagine. Admitting that the world without gets its ideas of Masonry from the representations of such men, and the infallible consequence is that vain, trifling, unsound men will be attracted to it, and become members. If the representations of the lodge work are true, then the Institution is valueless for men of sense and honor, and fit only for those whose inclinations lead them to be pleased with buffoonery and to be satisfied with a ridiculous mummery when a solemn and impressive ceremony ought to be expected. This is the legitimate effect of the course out of the lodge, and in the ante-room, to which we have referred. Perhaps it would be saying too much to assert that this baleful effect is already spreading over the fairest fields of Masonry, and yet we do not believe it would be one whit beyond the truth. Are not our lodges, to some extent, ruled and governed by those who have obtained entrance under these circumstances?

Now, every good Mason knows that such representations of the ceremonies of Masonry, as we have referred to, are false in fact and in spirit. There is nothing of a trifling nature in the ceremonies. There is nothing which would be repugnant to the feelings of an honorable, high-minded gentleman. There is nothing trivial or ridiculous about them, and it is a crime against the Institution and against truth, to say otherwise. Then why not to the world and to the candidate give the true coloring? Represent it as it is, as a solemn and practical system of moral instruction, designed to influence the lives and conduct of its initiates for good? It is the duty of every Mason to do so whenever he speaks of the Order. He knows that when he does otherwise, he gives a false impression and one that is calculated to damage the Institution.

It is argued that this is frequently done thoughtlessly. Is that a justification of the fault? In our view it is scarcely a palliation. No Mason has the right to be so thoughtless as this excuse would imply. Especially he should not be so thoughtless as to slander a society and a system which he professes to love and revere. Our brethren should think and act accordingly.

In the ante-room a solemnity and an earnestness befitting the occasion, should be maintained. Not a funeral sadness nor a gloomy ascetism, but a carriage which, while it is cheerful and pleasant, is sincere and mindful of the business in which they are about to engage. This should be the rule of both officers and brethren. This done and the candidate will approach the door of the lodge in a frame of mind that will appreciate the truths enunciated, the symbols presented, the moral precepts enjoined, and will leave the lodge, the ceremonies finished, with the conviction of the value, the beauty and the soundness of Masonry and the Masonic ritual.

In a future paper we propose to follow the candidate into the lodge, and examine in a fraternal spirit the nature and method of the work done there. In the meantime we fraternally ask an impartial judgment of the Fraternity on what has been said touching the "outside work" of the lodge.

A Review of Rev. J. L. Barlow's Charges Against Masonry.

In the Standard, the Baptist organ for the northwest, an article appeared in issue of Nov. 17, 1870, headed: "Is Masonry Secular?" In the article which follows, the writer so far forgets the principles which he inculcates from his pulpit, that we feel called upon to criticise his statements and the spirit with which he appears to have been actuated.

Before entering upon this easy work, it may not be immodest for me to say to Rev. J. L. Barlow, and all clergymen of what denomination soever engaged in decrying Masonry, that I claim to be in as "good and regular standing" as a member of the Presbytery of Chicago as any of you may properly claim for yourselves in your respective ecclesiastical bodies.

I profess to entertain a deep regard for the the Masonic Institution, but a deeper one for Christian religion—possibly as much so for the latter institution as you yourselves cherish.

Before I learned of either of these beneficent systems, I loved truth somewhat, and abhored inveracity somewhat.

Under the influence of these two latter principles, enhanced by my deep regard for the two institutions, which alike inculcate a love of truth and a dislike for misrepresentation, I write this, and, it may be, succeeding articles, not to defend Masonry, but to expose error; to correct the false impressions you, perhaps, make on the minds of men and women whose opinions are too readily based upon mere assertions.

To proceed to the business in hand. In the article now to be reviewed, there is disclosed an ignorance of the subject-matter attempted to be discussed which is rather pitiable than censurable. Between the caption and what follows—the text and the discourse—there is so slight a logical relation maintained, that had it been presented before any ordinary debating society, it would have merited, and probably received, expressed disapprobation from every member.

It is to be regretted that the writer, inasmuch as "he has made it his business to know what may be known of Masonry," has so far fallen short of reaching a correct decision about that Institution. To his question, "Is Masonry Secular?" we answer, it is neither purely secular, nor yet religious, in the sense of being an expiatory system of truth, but still religious in a certain and accepted sense. Rev. Mr. Barlow forgets, for every clergyman certainly knows that a religious system does not necessarily mean an evangelically Christian system, nor even a Christian system at all. All clergymen, Mr. Barlow included, speak at times of the various religions of the world, and among them of the Jewish, for instance. If that or Paganism be a religion, then the collection of its laws, liturgies, &c., must constitute a religious system, while the bodies of men acquiescing in and devoted to that system might, with entire propriety, not to say necessity, be called a religious society—a company of religionists. In point of fact, they are so denominated, both in oral discourses, as well as in the standard theological works of the present and the past ages, though neither of them teach Christ.

Masonry does teach most distinctively a large circle of religious truth, and is based upon the same fundamental principle that all variety and contrariety religions of the world are viz: belief in the existence of a God. This being so, it is in a proper sense a religious system, though not a system teaching either the doctrine of the trinity nor a vicarious atonement. Still religious, and much more so than many systems unhesitatingly called religions, and known as such the world over.

A religious system, or a religious organisation, does not, therefore, necessarily include the belief of either the trinity or the atonement, though it does sometimes exclude, and intentionally so, one or both of these doctrines.

Exceptions are taken to Masonry by the reverend gentleman on the ground "that he has again and again been told that we (Masons) have all the religion we want in Masonry;" "that we have all the religion we want in the lodge."

Undoubtedly, these statements have been made to him, as well as to others, but what of that? Are such sentiments entertained by all of us, or by one-quarter of those who have the high honor of being F. & A. Masons? If so, prove the position and we will acknowledge the charge.

Contrariwise, multitudes of us confide neither in Masonry, with its high-toned moral teachings, to save us, nor yet in our endeavors daily to cultivate in our hearts its sublime injunctions, but in One who has become the end of the law to every one that believeth, and in no one, nor in anything else.

If some Masons affirm that the system of Masonry enfolds religion sufficient for them, others declare with the same explicitness, and whose numbers are not inconsiderable, that for them it does not. In either case, the essence of Masonic teachings is untouched, and certainly cannot be condemned should it be depended on by some or by many as a means of ultimate salvation.

But such a claim, put forth as we think unfoundedly for Masonry, suggests, if it does not prove that the teachings of Masonry are so similar to scriptural teachings that the former are sometimes substituted for the latter. This, instead of being any objection to Masonry, is an argument in favor, the error being not in Masonic teachings, or their resemblance to Gospel teachings—but in that mind that substitutes them for something like them, but something much better than Masonic teachings.

Mr. Barlow might as well affirm, what doubtless he can, though if he cannot, multitudes as intelligent and as conscientious in utterance as he assuredly may, "that there are all around us men who are relying upon" honesty as a basis of salvation—uprightness in private and public life as a condition of final acceptance with their Maker.

Is honesty, therefore, to be ignored, especially is it to be condemned, and most especially of all, is it to be rancorously assailed? Perhaps not.

Still, again, may it not be the case that there are scores, possibly hundreds, if not thousands, coinciding in Mr. Barlow's views of baptism who may be inwardly relying, if not for salvation, at least too much upon that one act of real or supposed literal conformity to biblical teachings as the ground of acceptance?

Many rely on the prayer-book, immersion, honesty, &c., for salvation, and what wonder if it should be the case that some not only say, but actually do confide in a conformity to Masonic teachings to insure their eternal safety? It would be remarkable were it not so, and still worse, it being so, should Masons deny it, instead of acknowledging it frankly?

The practical phase of such futile dependencies, and which should concern Mr. Barlow, and which I confess it does me, both in my private and ministerial intercourse with my brother Masons, as well as with all other men whatsoever is, how can we best correct misapprehensions so injurious, as both Mr. B. and I regard it, of placing a dependence of this kind upon any other than the true and only basis?

Will men, associated with, or dissociated from organization, secret or otherwise, be most effectually induced to abandon any course unwise in the estimation of the adviser, by an indecorous approach, an unbecoming tone, or an ungentlemanly use of speech?

"Come let us reason together," is the established mode, the kindly method, the affectionate style of that Divine Being who loathes all forms of sin as much more intensely than Mr. Barlow, as the infinitude of the Creator is transcendantly above the finiteness of the creature, as the unapproached and unapproachable holiness of God is unspeakably above the sinfulness of man.

A rude attack, an impolite epithet, or an unchristian method of attempted correction, worketh not the salvation of our fellow-men any more than it does the righteousness of God.

Yet there is a sense in which it is generically true, even if it is never intended, that Masonry does indirectly, yet nevertheless really, afford directions and precepts which, if followed obediently, would ensure the salvation of the men to whom Mr. B. refers. Masonry teaches and enjoins it upon us all that we accept as "our rule of faith and practice the Holy Bible," or as we are pleased to denominate it "the great light in Masonry." One phrase is as scriptural as the other, and neither so at all, yet excellent phrases, both of them.

No man ever has, or possibly ever can, candidly "take the Bible as a rule of faith and practice" and not be happy, both here and hereafter.

In this sense Masonry does enfold in its precepts the means of salvation wherever the open Bible lies upon its altars, our enemies themselves being judges.

Whether in this sense, such claims (at the best needlessly made in behalf of Masonry), are ever made, we cannot determine. We incline to the opinion they never are, and would courteously advise our brethren and companions to abstain from them as giving a show of occasion to the enemy to blaspheme that honorable and honored name by which we are known.

Allusion is made in the article under review that "a man" whom he (Mr. B.) baptised, left the prayer-meetings of his church to attend the lodge. ONE MAN did this! One person did what more than one to our knowledge refused to do.

Does the spirit of the lowest form of candor in any man, Christian or unchristian, permit the transference of one man's practice to a body of men, and especially so large a body as Masons confessedly are? Does it permit Mr. B. to take one man's actions and therewith attempt inducing the belief in the popular Christian mind that such is our practice universally, or even commonly?

Such a disclosure of a lack of even ordinary candor exhibited by any clergyman is quite enough to compel any honest mind to withdraw itself from under the influence of such a minister, whether while conducting a prayer-meeting or a more public service on the Sabbath. To associate with such uncandid men, and particularly to put one's self under their influence is an act of disobedience to the spirit of that familiar and oft misapplied scriptural injunction, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

Over against this one man, we know of more than one who have changed their lodge relations because the prayer-meeting occurred on the same evening as their lodge.

We point to another, and at present the Worshipful Master of a highly moral and enthusiastically active lodge in Chicago who, instead of abandoning class-meetings altogether, because his class met on the evening on which his lodge did, wisely changed to another class which met on a different evening, and so was able to attend to the duties of both his lodge and his class.

Should the objection be here interposed, "But the lodge first, and the class-meeting next," we reply, not at all. That godly man would not even debate the question in his mind whether of the two he would have attended, provided he could attend but one. We speak what we know, and testify whereof we have ample evidence to corroborate. The class-meeting (as he is now ecclesiastically connected), would have his preference; the prayer-meeting, had he belonged to Mr. B.'s church, unquestionably would have been his prompt choice.

In this connection, while I would not underrate such meetings appointed by the churches on various evenings to suit the majority or the minority—sometimes one and sometimes the other—we would check the spirit that overrates them in the mere point of time in holding them, by this simple, truthful remark: the appointment of anyone evening during the secular week in preference to some other evening for any religious meeting of the church whatever, is as purely a human arrangement as the appointment of the evening is upon which a Masonic lodge shall meet—ABSOLUTELY AND UNQUALIFIEDLY SO.

As a Christian minister in good and regular standing, as I now and ever hope to be, I cannot forbear the confession, sad and sorrowful as it is, that the weekly prayer-meetings, not generally, I hope, but often, very often, indeed, are so supinely conducted, so stolidly dragged through, so stupidly, and most reluctantly participated in, that I have long ago wondered why any one who could find a place of mental entertainment and heart-profit in one-hundredth a degree that I have ever found in a Masonic lodge, could be induced to keep up a regular attendance upon such church-meetings, whose conduct I have not, and would not caricature, my conscience and my Maker bearing me witness that I falsify not.

A deep sense of fealty to Him who abhors stolidness, as He does all other vices, is the only philosophic explanation of this phenomenon that I have thus far found.

In the same article it is affirmed that "Masonry recognizes no Christ." We confess to the absence of that sacred name from our liturgical and other exercises, but its absence from literature created and fixed prior to his earthly existence is, to my mind, one of those incidental, internal, presumptive evidences of the truthfulness of at least one of Masonic teachings, to-wit: that as an Order, we reach far back into the past, at least anterior to Christ's advent. Had our Order been of a modern date, positive Christian minds would have resisted such an ignoring of that resplendent name with quenchless ardor, while the story of the strife and bloodless battles would have come down to us, if not through friendly hands, most surely through their agency who luxuriate in their hostility to us.

To invert the argument and to syllogise it: had the liturgy, &c., of the Masonic Order been of modern creation, Christ's name would have been mentioned, or bitter strife ensued, of which we should have been most certainly apprised.

But Christ's name is not mentioned, neither do friendly or unfriendly chroniclers inform us of such otherwise necessitated strife.

Hence, Masonic liturgies, &c., ante-date His earth-life, and the absence of His name is the mere result, as well as simple proof of its antiquity. This being so, we must, in the light of the Christian charity that thinketh no evil, recognize the charge made against us on this account, as the result of thoughtlessness, or else of a prejudice entirely unfounded.

"Those of us," our ministerial, not Masonic, brother continues, "who have been compelled, in the providence of God, to look into the character of this Institution, and have learned its nature, and felt its blasting influence on the religion of Christ, are greatly pained," &c.

In reply, we, too, affirm, with many other Presbyterian, Congregational, Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist ministers and laymen, personally known to us, "that those of us who have been persuaded in the providence of God to look into the character of this Institution, and have learned its nature by joining it in person, and have not felt nor seen its blasting influence on the religion of Christ, are greatly rejoiced; rejoiced that it exists to alleviate human woes, physical and moral; to supply the wants of thousands of widows and fatherless ones related and unrelated to the Order—accomplishing a work which the pecuniary resources of the Christian church have ever proved utterly inadequate. More than all this, and above all this and much more, we rejoice in our identification with this Order, as such an identification facilitates us in our private intercourse in correcting false theories of safety among those entertaining them, as Messrs. Barlow and Blanchard have, by their ungentlemanly, inveracious, and malignant attacks upon us as an Order, forever disqualified themselves from accomplishing.

In behalf of Christianity throughout the world, we devoutly rejoice that in Masonry she finds an ally; in behalf of freedom that she has realised a staunch support; that widows, and children in semi or total orphanage have so sweetly experienced aid, solace, and protection beneath the ever-extended wings of Masonic Institutions.

Why, then, do the prejudiced rage, and the uninformed imagine a vain thing? The despots of the earth have stood up, and the tyrants have gathered themselves together, saying: "Let us break Masonic bands asunder, and cast away its cords of obligation from our subjects."

He that sitteth in the Orient shall laugh at them; the Fraternity shall have them in derision; but we shall be as Mount Zion, that abideth forever, and as the everlasting hills that cannot be removed.

REV. JOHN S. HANNA.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 29, 1870.

To Enterprise.

"Keep for the young, the impassioned smile
Shed from thy countenance, as I see thee stand
High on a chalky cliff of Britain's isle,
A slender volume grasping in thy hand
(Perchance the pages that relate
The various turns of Crusoe's fate).
Ah! Spare the exulting smile,
And drop thy pointing finger bright
As the first flash of beacon light:
But neither veil thy head in shadows dim,
Nor turn thy face away
From one who, in the evening of his day,
To Thee would offer no presumptuous hymn!

"Bold Spirit! who art free to rove
Among the starry courts of Jove,
And oft in splendor dost appear
Embodied to poetic eyes
While traversing this nether sphere,
Where mortals call thee Enterprise.
Daughter of Hope! her favorite child,
Whom she to young ambition bore,
When Hunter's arrow first defiled
The grove, and stained the turf with gore:
The winged fancy took, and mused
On broad Euphrates' palmy shore,
Or where the mightier waters burst
From caves of Indian mountain's hoar!
She wrapped thee in a panther's skin;
And thou, whose earliest thoughts held dear
Allurements that were edged with fear,
(The food that pleased thee best, to win)
With infant shout wouldst often scare
From her rock fortress in mid-air
The flame-eyed eagle—often sweep,
Paried with the ostrich, o'er the plain;
And tired with sport, wouldst sink asleep
Upon thn couchant lion's mane!
With rolling years thy strength increased!
And, far beyond thy native east,
To thee, by varying titles known,
Did incense-bearing altars rise,
Which caught the blaze of sacrifice,
From suppliants panting for the skies.

"Back flows the willing current of my song:
If to provoke such doom the impious dare,
Why should it daunt a blameless prayer!
Bold Goddess; range one youth among;
Nor let thy genuine impulse fail to beat
In hearts no longer young:
Still may a veteran few have pride
In thoughtswhose sternness makes them sweet;
In fixed resolves by reason justified;
That to their object cleave like sleet
Whitening a tall pine's northern side,
While fields are naked far and wide,
And withered leaves, from Earth's cold breast,
Upcaught in whirlwinds, nowhere can find rest.

"But if such homage thou disdain
As doth with mellowing years agree,
One rarely absent from thy train
More humble favors may obtain
For thy contented votary.
She, who incites the frolic lambs
In presence of their heedless dams,
And to the solitary fawn,
Vouchsafes her lessons—bounteous nymph
That wakes the breeze—the sparkling lymph
Doth hurry to the lawn;
She, who inspires that strain of joyance holy
Which the sweet bird, misnamed The Melancholy,
Pours forth in shady groves, shall plead for me;
And vernal mornings opening bright
With views of undefined delight,
And cheerful songs, and suns that shine
On busy days, with thankful nights, be mine.

"But thou, O goddess! in thy favorite isle (Freedom's impregnable redoubt,
The wide earth store house fence about
With breakers roaming to the gales
That stretch a thousand thousand sails)
Quicken the slothful, and exalt the vile!
Thy impulse is the life of Fame:
Glad hope would almost cease to be
If torn from thy society;
And Love, when worthiest of the name,
Is proud to walk the earth with thee!"

The above character, so well and graphically portrayed by England's Poet Laureate, Wordsworth, I will endeavor to sketch and embody into something like a life-like personage and from its past and present history endeavor to draw lessons of encouragement and profit. We will begin with its earliest history, when a mere child, and from its parentage give an idea of the early characteristics of this bright being, in the early dawn of its more than earthly beauty and loveliness. For it is no ordinary being whom I am to describe, and follow in its opening career; but one of heavenly origin, whose juvenility is eternal, born in the lap of creation; as beautifully expressed by Wordsworth:

> "Daughter of Hope! her favorite child
> Whom she to young Ambition bore,"

with God for its foster father, and the angels stood rejoicingly around as the young seraph bounded into exultant life. Rare and lovely was the being thus given by the God of Creation to shape the future destiny of a then unformed world, and to guide the genius of man. In the Garden of Eden this infant gamboled in its innocence, giving life and bringing out its beauties in its holy and childish searches; for it ever seemed to be an innate instinct in this child to find out the beauty of the place or object that attracted its notice. In this garden, under the tutelage and immediate supervision of its foster parent, God himself, with the creature man, and the world in the future, as now, her abode, this holy child developed fast. With strong features of his maternal origin stamped clearly and unmistakably upon her brow, and the best and holiest characteristics of her father distinctly developed in her disposition, and in constant intercourse with its foster parent, God, and in the company of angels, why should not this bright being become a bold spirit? Enterprise could not be aught else but bold, pure and innocent, and do we not see in this imagined portraiture an "impassioned smile," yea, an "exultant smile," yea, further, do you not see the "pointing finger bright," flashing upon us like the first quick flashes of some beacon light shooting impulsively from some mountain top? As the child is father of the man, so in a higher and more complete sense was the future of the matured maiden more than realized in her whom, as our poet still sings so sweetly of:

> "The winged fancy took and mused
> On broad Euphrates' palmy shore,
> Or where the mightier waters burst
> From caves of Indian mountains' hoar."

When man was banished from the Garden of Eden and commenced spreading over the old world, this maiden opened wide her pinions and remained with him through all his wanderings, and by her cheerful and intelligent counsels encouraged man in efforts for civilization, refinement and science. Coming down the stream of time we meet Enterprise frequently. She walked hand in hand with Adam, Cain, Jubal and the whole line of worthies from Seth to the flood. Again she is met with Noah after the flood, and after a life-long intercourse with his sons she appears again with the mighty hunter, Nimrod, with Abraham, and by the plan of God, the great foster father, she took up a long residence with the Israelites. Among the ancient Copts we see traces of her presence with them. The world-renowned Pyramids, Sphinx, Obelisks, Memnon, mummies and manner of embalming, and ancient Thebes, all betokened that this maiden had made this kingdom a favorite haunt or place of resort. Indeed, not to dilate too much, what kingdom, empire or nation on the habitable globe has not been blessed with the illuminating presence of this bright maiden? Her footprints are seen in the far off isles of the sea, in the Polar regions of the North and South even, among the Japanese and Chinese, throughout the Asiatic continent and Europe, and even in benighted Africa. Discoveries have proved that there is hardly a foot of territory in our country—in the Western Hemisphere—but contains the footprints of this being, Enterprise. She is everywhere known, every succeeding generation is made wiser under her superintending presence. By her instructions the genius of man is gifted with mighty power in eliminating articles for pleasing our taste, increasing our comfort, making the intellect more keen, language more pliable, and, indeed, she teaches us everything that is worthy of possession, or that will enable us to become more profitable to others, or fit us better for an abode in heaven, the birthplace of Enterprise, and where, when her mission on earth is ended, she will return and take her place among the silver-winged seraphs that hover above and about Jehovah's throne forever and ever. Such is Enterprise, and such the outline of her mission work in this world, and everywhere we see the results of her efforts in a world that every successive century finds in advance on the last.

Visits, Calls, Travels.

Pocahontas, December 13.— Revisited, and formed Harvest Chapter, E. S.

Lexington, McLean county.—On the 2d day of December, 1868, we dedicated the new hall of Lexington Lodge 482. By invitation, we again visited the lodge Dec. 15, presided at the election, and installed the officers elect. W. Bro. Davidson requested to be relieved from further duty as W. M., but the Lodge again elected him by a very decided majority. The Lodge numbers fifty-six members, the greatest part of whom are farmers. The first settlement at Lexington was in 1833; the town was laid out by Col. Gridley and others, in 1840. No part of McLean has more wealth or better farms than those situated near this place. The town has a population of about 1,600, and claims to be the largest shipping point for cattle and hogs on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, besides large quantities of grain. Large quantities of wagons, plows, and agricultural implements are manufactured here. The Methodists, Presbyterian, United Brethren, and Christians have churches, and five hundred scholars are classified into five grades. Two banks do an active business. This is the residence of Hon. Wm. M. Smith, elected to the Legislature for the third time. With his own hands he earned the money to enter 300 acres of land near Lexington, which is now one of the finest farms in the State. Now in the mercantile business, with a nice residence, a choice family, and an unblemished reputation. Bro. Davidson would be a man of mark anywhere. As before, we enjoyed the hospitality of both families.

There is not an immoral man in Lexington Lodge; none can get in. The lodge-room is an elegant one, and the brethren dwell together in peace and unity.

Illiopolis, December 17—This town was originally laid out by Gov. Duncan, with a view to the seat of government. It is in Sangamon county, near the Macon county line, on the T., W. & W. R. W., and is supposed to be practically, the geographical centre of the State.

For a long time it did not improve, but within the past seven years it has grown up to a town of 600 people; has Catholic, Christian, and Methodist churches, and a lodge formed in 1867 with twenty-one members, a large school-house with three grades, and ships much corn, many hogs, and a multitude of cattle. Last year $18,000 worth of agricultural implements were sold at this point.

We installed the officers elect. W. Bro. Miles H. Wilmot, after several years' service at Mechanicsburg, united with a few brethren at Illiopolis, and obtained a charter for Illiopolis Lodge 521, of which he has been the only Master, over his own protest. It is a good lodge, has a good home of its own, and is united. A bountiful supper followed the installation. One cake, prepared in the shape of a bell, by Miss Ruth Lindsay, had beautiful figures of the Eastern Star, square and compasses, and ladder.

One cake came from Bro. Skeen's in the shape of a cone, wreathed in evergreen, beautifully frosted, and surmounted by the Eastern Star.

Full seventy brethren and ladies partook of the supper, which was followed by a short speech.

December 20.—Miles Hart Lodge is situated in Ashgrove township in Shelby county, a few rods from Paradise township, Coles county, four miles south from Summit, in Moultrie county, nine miles southwest from Mattoon, four miles west from Etna, Coles county, and seven miles nearly north from Neoga, Cumberland county, in a rich farming district "beautiful for situation," hard to excel, and equal to any in the worth of its people. This is the neighborhood where so many of the Harts reside, and for the patriarch the lodge was named. He settled near there in Coles county in 1822.

At Summit, Bro. H. B. Worley met us with his staunch team, and on a bitter cold day we were soon pleasantly housed in his comfortable home, where we rested at home. After installing the officers, and partaking of a good supper, we lectured the brethren at their lodge-room until quite late at night.

The following day, Dec. 21, having arrived at sixty years of age, we met a large number of ladies and brethren, addressed them upon the subject of Masonry, and formed Amaranth Chapter No. 41, E. S.

Miles Hart Lodge No. 595, was formed in 1868, has forty members, and owns the second story of a large building, the first story of which is a school-room. Woe to the brother who smokes or uses tobacco in the lodge-room, and drunkenness and profane swearing meet with no favor: they are not known among the members, and disagreements are not thought of—a thoroughly rural lodge, and as thoroughly happy as rural.

Bro. Worley at twenty-two married his wife Amanda, in Kentucky, settled on one of the fortys of his present farm in Coles connty, and there, adding land to land in Coles and Shelby, has a farm of 300 acres in cultivation, has raised five sons and three daughters, of whom one son and one daughtar are married, and one son is a physician, and in 1856 was elected Sheriff of the county. He is a peace-maker, patriarch and counsellor.

Here, too, Dr. Apperson, one of the pioneers, flourished, and a large number of descendants of fine character live to bless his memory.

A ride with the new W. M., Bro. A. Y. Hart, to Neoga, thence to Tolono, and Home.

Delevan.—By the C. A. & St. L. R. R. via Bloomington, we reached Delevan Dec. 30, and were the guest of W. Bro. J. A. Mason, the W. M. of Tazewell Lodge No. 586. During our stay, we were agreeably entertained by W. Bro. Theodore Van Hague, W. M. for the second time of Delevan Lodge No. 156, and shared his hospitality at tea with his wife and only child—beautiful and a great favorite. Delevan is the centre of a Rhode Island colony, and was laid out in 1835. The old Delevan House was a way station for tired and hungry travelers from Chicago, Galena, and Rhode Island via Peoria to Springfield, for nearly twenty years. Delevan Lodge was chartered in 1854; W. W. Crossman was the first Master. Bro. Van Hague is the present W. M. Tazewell Lodge No. 586, was chartered in 1867. Bro. Mason has had no successor. The town has a population of 1,500, and the country around is densely populated, with fine residences, groves, shrubbery, and highly cultivated farms. The Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Catholics have houses of worship. The lodges have over 100 members, and together occupy a splendid hall. The town has two flouring mills, two lumber yards, and is at the crossing of the Jacksonville Branch of the C. & A. R. R., and of the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur R. R.

On the 29th of December, one dealer bought 224 loads of yellow corn.

Bro. Mason deserves something more than mere mention. At eleven years he was left to shift for himself. Combating poverty, hardship, and privation, true to honorable instincts, manly in purpose and firm in his integrity, he has won his way step by step, until he finds himself in easy circumstances, in a new and elegant dwelling, and with a priceless treasure in a young wife, a fair daughter of a fine family in the neighborhood of Delevan. Such is a young man, whom no impediments could conquer. To such, all honor.

Taylorville, Jan. 2, 1871.—Starting by cars on the excellent Springfield & Southeastern Railway, we reached Taylorville, and met about 75 brethren at night. Old faces and new ones—former friends and new ones. W. Bro. Oliver P. Squier in the East. Introduced by Bro. H. P. Shumway. Reception artistic, cordial and brotherly, and some freedom of utterance was vouchsafed to us. The charter is No. 122. M. W. Bro. J. R. Gorin was the first W. M. On the wall hangs a life-looking portrait of Judge Shumway, for a long time Master and High Priest, member of the House and of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, Secretary of the Senate, and County Judge, and a noble man. The lodge numbers over one hundred members, of whom four are Sunday School Superintendents, two are ministers, and by no means least, is the venerable Judge Frink, now 80 years old, a venerable Baptist Deacon, whose life has been pure and blameless, and who at so great an age, came out with his pastor to bear his testimony for Masonry. Bro. W. S. Moore was 20 years Circuit Clerk. We could enumerate many able men, but forbear. The younger element in the lodge is talented, cultivated, and educated.

An oyster stew followed, and the W. M. obtained 56 subscribers for The Trowel.

Taylorville is at the crossing of the Springfield & Southeastern and the St. Louis Branch of the Toledo, Wabash & Western, upon a sightly location, has 2,000 people, a good court-house, six church houses, a large foundry, two flouring mills, and an extensive plow factory. The Spragues of Rhode Island and a firm at Taylorville, of which Bro. P. J. Sprague is a member, send immense quantities of corn from this point to Rhode Island. Bro. W. T. Vandever manages a bank.

We were the guest of Bro. Wm. A. Goodrich and his matronly and accomplished wife. It is a choice place for "weary pilgrims," and here we felt "all at home." When Bro. Goodrich shall have completed his present term as County Clerk, he will have served the people thirty years, as Surveyor, County Commissioner, Sheriff, and County Clerk, indorsed by nine different elections. And yet, with all this large labor, with married children, both he and Mrs. Goodrich would readily pass on the young side of middle age.

Litchfield.—We tarried at Taylorville, Jan. 3, to organise a chapter of the Eastern Star, and the train, being five hours late, we did not reach Litchfield until nearly 10 o'clock. Most of the brethren had dispersed, and it was agreed that we should "try again." We were the guest of R. W. Bro. Geo. H. Raymond, D. D. G. M.; we will omit all comments until we "try again" in February.

Hillsboro.—January 4, found us in this hill-town—a very paradise of landscape and beauty, founded as the county seat of Montgomery in 1824. The old court-house, which cost originally $6,000, has been repaired at an outlay of $100,000, derived from the sale of swamp lands. Through the politeness of Bro. Jenkins, we were shown through the building, which contains convenient offices, Jailor's residence, jail, and a large court-room. The town has improved wonderfully since we visited it in 1862. The Masonic apartments of the lodge, chapter, and council are really spacious and magnificent, embracing a hall 36 by 50, and 18 feet high, with dining-room and ante-rooms, and finished in an elegant manner.

Hillsboro has six meeting houses, two flouring mills, two banks, one woollen factory, two large plow and wagon shops, a furniture factory, planing mill, and an elevator. The lodge has 119 members, over which W. Bro. Fred. Noterman is again called to preside. Colonel Walters has a livery-stable, and keeps 100 horses. The population is 2,700. Both here and at Taylorville, are large schools of four grades. We were the guest of Bro. Wooten Harris, and his wifely lady, and the handsome boy gave us good music on the piano.

Moweaqua.—By the Central we reached this beautiful location Jan. 9, and were cordially received by W. Bro. Bartley Scarlette, and assigned comfortable quarters at the Potter House. The place has a population of 500, with several churches, good school facilities, and a large trade from a thickly settled country around it.

Here we met Bro. A. G. Ayers, whom we knew in our youthful days at the Patriot office in Montpelier, Vt. At his house we met his wife, an intelligent Poston lady; a family of two sons and a daughter, already married, make life pleasant to these parents, now on the shady side of earth. A pleasant home, enough to do, and plenty for use, renders the voyage Jordanward comfortable to the brother that we proposed for membership in the Montpelier Lyceum, in 1834, by the name of A. G. Ayers. May his latter days be as serene and happy as our early acquaintance was agreeable and joyous.

In the evening we met the lodge and discoursed of things Masonic. It has a comfortable home, and about 40 members. Over this lodge Dr. E. J. Rice presided many years. Now he is in quest of health. For three years Bro. Scarritt governed the lodge, and after one year's relief, again presides. He is a man of talent and worth, magistrate, legal adviser, a most worthy citizen, and under his rule the lodge will prosper.

Macon.—On the 19th we ran up to Macon, and tarried a few hours, where we met the W. M., Bro. Cole, and several other brethren; but as this was not a regular visit, we defer remarks until another time.

Reminiscences and Recollections of the Grand Lodge of Illinois from Oct., 1848, until Oct., 1870.

By the Editor.

PRELIMINARY ARTICLE.

The French settlement at Kaskaskia, is supposed to be the earliest west of the Alleghenies, as it certainly is of the Western States. The best authorities place the first location as early as 1673—one hundred and three years before the Declaration of Independence. For more than one hundred years, Kaskaskia was under French and British control. In 1778, it was taken by that notable Freemason, Gen. George Rogers Clarke, and has ever since been under the control of the United States, and was created into the county of Illinois, of which Kaskaskia was the seat. When the Territory of Indiana was formed, Illinois formed a part of it, and was divided into two counties, and when in 1809, Illinois was formed into a territory, Kaskaskia was the seat of government, and so remained until 1820, two years after the first constitution was framed. While a part of Indiana Territory, in 1805, a dispensation was granted by Israel Israel, Grand Master of Pennsylvania, to James Edgar and his associates to open Western Star Lodge at Kaskaskia.

On the 18th day of June, 1806, the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania granted said lodge a charter as No. 107, which was constituted by Robert Robinson, Sept. 13, 1806. Old Western Star was a remarkable lodge, and its membership and descendants have shaped, moulded, and given character to the institutions of Illinois, and very largely to the institutions of the States of the Mississippi Valley. After the Territory of Illinois was created, lodges sprang up in various places, and immediately after the State government was formed, to-wit: at Vandalia, in 1822, a convention of delegates from eight lodges was held, and a Grand Lodge was formed. Such men as Gov. Bond, Chief Justice Thomas Reynolds, David Prickett, Benjamin J. Mills, James Turney, William H. Brown, Judge Thomas C. Browne, James M. Duncan, Charles Gear, Elijah C. Berry, and James Hall were in that convention. Gov. Bond was elected Grand Master and William H. Brown, Grand Secretary.

Masonry prospered for a few years, but ambitious men endeavored to use it for their political advancement, and that which ever has and ever will take place, occurred. The internal divisions and personal rancor engendered by such strife wrought destruction, and in 1827, the first Grand Lodge of Illinois ceased to be, and its old records are lost, and its transactions are to be gathered only in fragments. Enough has been found to make a consecutive history.

Nearly all the lodges died with the Grand Lodge. A few took out charters from the Grand Lodges of Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana, Tennessee, and Pennsylvania. In January, 1840, there were lodges at Springfield, Jacksonville, Quincy, Columbus, Equality, Galena, Vandalia, Carlyle, Salem, Dixon, Ottawa, and perhaps at both Upper and Lower Alton.

In January, 1840, a convention was called at Jacksonville, and delegates were present from Quincy, Columbus, Springfield, and Jacksonville, while Equality and Far West at Galena, were represented by proxy. A committee was appointed to frame a constitution, and the convention adjourned to meet again in April. Upon the reassembling of the convention, the same lodges were represented, and on the 6th day of April, 1840, the Grand Lodge was formed, with a membership in its constituent lodges, very little exceeding one hundred.

Col. Wm. B. Warren was the main architect. He conducted the correspondence, shaped the policy, and gave body and consistency to the proceedings, which gave being to a body now at least fourth in rank among the Grand Lodges of the world. The brethren cast about for a Grand Master who had already acquired Masonic standing, so that, under all the circumstances, their standard bearer might secure recognition from without, and unity within. It was at the suggestion of Col. Warren that Abraham Jonas, of the Hebrew persuasion, a gentleman of talent, sagacity, and experience, who had presided three years in the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, and had been an influential member of the Kentucky Legislature, was selected for Grand Master. The first election resulted in the selection of James Adams for Deputy, W. S. Vance for Senior Grand Warden, H. Rogers for Junior Grand Warden, A. Dunlap for Grand Treasurer, and William B. Warren for Grand Secretary. Of Breth. Jonas and Warren, we shall have much to say hereafter. Bro. Jonas was re-elected in Oct., 1840 and 1841, and Col. Warren was re-elected annually until 1844. In 1845 he was placed in charge of the State troops in Hancock county by Gov. Ford, and was succeeded by Levi Lusk.

Alexander Dunlap was a Major in the regular army, but had been honorably discharged. He advised Col. Warren in the formation of the Grand Lodge, and was a noble, chivalrous gentleman. The Grand Lodge elected him Senior Grand Warden in October, 1840, and 1841, Deputy in 1842, and Grand Master in 1843. He died on the 10th day of November, 1853. James Adams was the first Master of Springfield Lodge No. 4, and at the time of his election was Probate Justice of Sangamon county. He was re-elected in October, 1840, and died in Hancock county in 1841 or 2.

W. S. Vance passed from our Grand Lodge history with his first election.

Bro. H. Rogers was a Past Master of Bodley Lodge No. 1, and while he continued to be an influential member at home, we have no knowledge that he ever appeared in Grand Lodge again.

In October, 1840, Harrison Dills was elected Junior Grand Warden, and again elected in 1841; not being present in 1842, he dropped out of the Grand Lodge history until 1846, when he was appointed Junior Grand Warden, p. t., at the opening of the Grand Lodge, and was in Grand Lodge as Grand Steward in 1847.

Philip Coffman, of Jacksonville, was elected Grand Treasurer, and was succeeded in 1846 by James L. Anderson, who in turn was succeeded in 1847 by William McMurtry. Bro. Coffman was a noted and valuable citizen of Jacksonville, who died February 9, 1868. S. A. Douglas was elected Grand Orator at this session.

At the session of the Grand Lodge in 1841, Meredith Helm, W. M. of Springfield Lodge No. 4, and a noted physician, was elected Deputy, and succeeded Abraham Jonas in 1842. He died March 6, 1866, much lamented.

At this session James Shields was elected Grand Orator.

At the session of 1842, Levi Lusk was elected Senior Grand Warden, Deputy in 1843, Grand Master in 1844, and Grand Secretary in 1845 and 1846. Of him we shall speak in subsequent articles.

Joseph N. Ralston was elected Junior Grand Warden, but did not appear in Grand Lodge again. He also was a noted physician, and a member of Bodley Lodge.

James H. Matheny was elected Grand Orator at this time.

In 1843 William Hodge, of Vandalia, was elected Senior Grand Warden. He died Dec. 15, 1844.

Henry Prather, of Decatur, was elected J. G. Warden. Subsequently he represented his county and district in both branches of the General Assembly, and came to a sudden death by casualty, Aug. 3, 1869. At this session Horace S. Cooley, afterwards Secretary of State, was elected Grand Orator.

In 1844, Carding Jackson was elected Deputy Grand Master. He was famous as a Lecturer, and was long quoted as authority. He died of cholera in 1854.

Nelson D. Morse, of Henderson, was elected Junior Grand Warden this year, Deputy in 1845, and Grand Master in 1846. We shall speak of him again.

At the grand communication of 1845, Rev. W. F. Walker, W. M. of Oriental Lodge No. 33, was elected Grand Master. It was during his administration that the controversy arose in regard to pretended Masons of color. In due time, we propose to give a careful history of this vexatious matter. The whole case is now covered by the resolutions adopted by the Grand Lodge in regard to sovereignty. He never appeared in Grand Lodge afterwards.

Edgar Bogardus, W. M. of Warren Lodge, at Shawneetown was elected Senior Grand Warden. We met him a few years since at Ypsilanti, Mich.

John R. Crandall, W. M. of Pekin Lodge No. 29, was elected Junior Grand Warden, and was advanced to Senior Grand Warden in 1846, and to Deputy in 1847. Soon after he received a dispensation for a traveling lodge, and went to California, and that lodge is now on the California roll. He has served the Craft in that State in several important stations.

In 1846, William Lavely was elected Deputy Grand Master and Grand Master in 1847. His history will come hereafter.

Adam Brewer, W. M. of Morning Star Lodge No. 30, was elected J. G. Warden. He has served many years as Master since, and is now in good health, and nearly eighty years old, living at Knoxville.

Joseph C. Ketchum, of Alton, was elected S. G. Warden in 1847, 1848, and 1849. He could not advance further, because he had not been elected W. M. of a lodge.

In 1847, Matthias Taylor, of Chicago, was elected J. G. Warden. We believe he is still alive, an honored old man. William Mitchell was elected Grand Secretary.

In our future articles, it will be necessary for us to allude to the transactions of the Grand Lodge before 1848, so that what is now barely touched will hereafter come up in review.

We were made a Mason at Warsaw in January, 1843, and were one of the petitioners for the dispensation for Cambridge Lodge in 1847, and one of its charter members. We entered the Grand Lodge as proxy of the S. W. in 1848 at Alton, and received the appointment of Grand Marshal, and from that date commences our recollections and reminincences.

CONSTITUTION AND LAWS

OF THE

MASONIC PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,

OF EDGAR COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

ARTICLE I—Name and Object.—1. This society shall be known as the Masonic Protective Association of Edgar county, Illinois. Its object is to provide a fund for the immediate relief of the widows and orphans of deceased members of the association: if they have no family then to provide for relief of parents, brothers or sisters of deceased members, or said fund to be disposed of as deceased member may direct.

ARTICLE II.—1. The officers shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer and a Board of five Trustees, who shall be elected annually, at a regular meeting, by a majority of the members present.

ARTICLE III.—1. Qualifications for membership shall be membership in good standing of a Masonic lodge of Edgar county, Illinois. Provided, That if a member should remove out of the county, his membership in this association shall not be affected by such removal, so long as he remain a member in good standing of a Masonic lodge, and pay all assessments made on him by the association.

2. Applicants for membership shall present to the Secretary of this association a certificate from the Secretary of his lodge (with the seal attached) certifying that he is in good standing and not on the sick list.

3. There shall accompany the certificate for membership the sum of one dollar, as admission fee, which shall be placed to the credit of the contingent fund, upon election of the applicant.

4. The Secretary shall present such certificate to the Board of Trustees, who shall investigate the health and character of the applicant, whereupon they shall proceed to ballot, and if three-fifths vote in the affirmative the applicant shall be declared elected.

5. When elected he shall sign the roll of membership.

ARTICLE IV.—1. To retain membership in this association the member must retain membership in good standing in his lodge; and at the death of each member of this association he shall pay to the Secretary the sum of one dollar within thirty days after being notified, also annual dues to the amount of twenty-five cents payable on the first day of January in each year.

2. Should a member be suspended or expelled from his lodge, his membership immediately ceases in this association; nor is this association bound to his widow, orphans, heirs or assignees for any pecuniary protection. Provided, That if he should die before the assessment to his credit upon the books be exhausted the association shall be bound to his widow, orphans or heirs the same as if he had not been suspended or expelled, but no new assessment can be made upon a member dropped, suspended or expelled from his Lodge.

3. Should a member be reinstated in his lodge he shall be reinstated in this association. Provided, He pay a sum equal in amount to all assessments made by the association during such suspension.

4. No evidence of the payment of money shall be admitted, except the receipt of the Secretary or a credit on the books of the association.

5. All notices shall be considered served when transmitted by mail to the place of residence last recorded upon the books of the association.

ARTICLE V.—1. At the decease of a member who, at the time of his death, was in good standing in his lodge, and entitled to all the rights and privileges of this association, the widow, orphans, heirs or such person as deceased member may designate shall receive from the funds of the association an amount in cash equal to one dollar for each and every surviving member of the association.

2. At the death of a member, the Secretary shall immediately proceed to notify all surviving members, giving his name, the name and number of the lodge to which he belonged, and the time of his death, also that an assessment is then due the association.

3. The Secretary shall receive, as a compensation for his services, such sums as the association shall from time to time designate, which shall be due and payable quarterly upon the presentation of his account for services rendered.

MEETINGS.

This association shall hold four stated meetings yearly, as follows: The first Wednesday, April, July and October, the first shall be termed the annual and the third the semi-annual meetings.

Special meetings shall be called by the President when requested in writing by nine members of the association and shall be advertised in the county papers.

The hour of opening at stated meetings shall be 7½ o'clock P. M., and 10 members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

The first business in order at the semi-annual meeting after calling the roll of officers and reading minutes of previous meeting, shall be the reading of semi-annual reports of Secretary and Treasurer, then the nomination of officers who shall be elected at the stated meeting in October.

The special business of the annual meeting shall be the reading of reports of President, Secretary, Treasurer, Board of Trustees and Auditing Committee, approving bonds of Secretary and Treasurer and installation of officers.

Elections.—All elections shall be by ballot, and a majority of all votes cast shall be necessary to a choice. When more than one ballot is necessary, the lowest candidate at each ballot shall be dropped, provided, that when there is but one candidate for an office, the election shall be by acclamation.

All officers shall be installed at the annual meeting, or next stated meeting thereafter, and if not present for installation within the prescribed time, the office shall be declared vacant.

An officer who shall absent himself for two stated meetings, without satisfactory excuse, shall thereby vacate his office. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in an office, the same shall be announced by the acting President, a nomination made, and an election held to fill such vacancy.

Every member shall give his place of residence to the Secretary, and in case of removal shall notify the Secretary of same within ten days thereafter.

President.—It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings at which he may be present; and give the casting vote in all cases except on elections.

Upon the death of a member he shall direct the Secretary to draw an order on the Treasurer in favor of the person entitled to receive the same, and for the amount payable under the laws. He shall sign all orders on the Treasurer authorised by the laws or by a two-thirds vote of the members present at a meeting. He shall, at the annual meeting in January, make a full report of all official business transacted by him during his term of office, and shall perform such other duties as pertain to his position.

Vice-President.—It shall be the duty of the Vice-President to perform the duties of the President during his temporary absence or inability.

Secretary.—It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep a full record of the proceedings of the association; to keep a correct account between the association and its members; to receive all moneys due the association and to pay the same to the Treasurer within one week thereafter, taking his receipt for the same.

He shall enroll in a book provided for that purpose the names of members, their age, residence, name and number of the lodge to which they belong. He shall fix and sign all certificates of membership, and affix to them and all other documents which may require it the seal of the association—which seal shall be kept in his custody. He shall draw all orders upon the Treasurer required by the laws or authorised by the association, and sign them in conjunction with the President. He shall deliver to his successor in office all books, papers and other property in his possession belonging to the association; and shall perform such other duties as may appertain to his office. He shall give bond in such amount as the association may from time to time designate.

Treasurer.—It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all moneys from the Secretary and give his receipts therefor. To pay all orders drawn on the funds in his hands when authorized by the association or its laws, signed by the President and Secretary. He shall keep a correct account of all receipts and disbursements, and submit a detailed report thereof at the annual and semi-annual meetings of the association. He shall deliver to his successor in office all moneys, books, papers, and other property in his possession belonging to the association; and shall give bond in such amount as the association may from time to time designate.

Trustees.—It shall be the duty of the Trustees to have a general supervision over the interests of the association, to have in their keeping all bonds of officers, notes or other property of the association except moneys—they shall return all applications for membership to the Secretary, with the word elected or rejected on its face (such certificate to be filed by the Secretary). They shall keep a record of all business transacted by them, and make a report of the same at the annual and semi-annual meetings and deliver to their successors in office all bonds, notes, books and other property in their hands belonging to the association. They shall audit all claims against the association except the protective claims, and they shall perform such other duties as the laws and usages of the association may require. No alteration or amendments to these laws shall be made unless written notice be given at a regular meeting, which shall lay over until the next regular meeting before being acted upon, when if a two-thirds vote be had in the affirmative, the same shall be adopted. These laws to be in full force on and after their adoption.

Adopted Nov. 15, 1870.

ROLL OF MEMBERSHIP.

We, the undersigned, members of the Masonic Protective Association of Edgar County Illinois, do agree to abide by the laws, rules and regulations of the association now in force, or that may be hereafter made; and pay promptly to the Secretary all assessments authorised by the laws of the association upon being notified of such assessment, and in default of which we further agree to forfeit our membership and all rights and privileges in said association.

We cordially commend the foregoing to the lodges in every county.—EDITOR.

The French Mountebank Masons and the War.

We have too often had to regret the divergencies of our good brethren the French Masons, from the genuine plan of Freemasonry, but never more than on the occasion of that ridiculous and mischievous manifesto of certain Parisian Masons, summoning from their camp, into invested Paris, the King of Prussia and the Crown Prince. Thus two brethren of the rank of Grand Master, not coming under the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient itself were summoned to an unconstitutional conclave, and threatened with pains and penalties, by a mock trial in their absence.

Nothing could be more ill-timed or mischievous than this proceeding, because French and German Freemasonry were already exercising legitimate functions. Masonry is already so closely connected with civil society, that it must be influenced by its events, and war is to a great degree as hurtful in its operations on Masonry, as in other spheres. Brethren are thrown in conflict, the ordinary discharge of Masonic functions, and, above all, of Masonic hospitality are disturbed, lodges are closed, initiations are interrupted, and great communities are exposed to the evil antagonism of feeling, and even to the mutual conflict, in arms, of brethren with brethren.

Here, however, it is that Masonry, above all, assumes one of its highest functions. Lodges are closed, but the good work of Masonry is not dead, because the work of Masonry is not confined to lodges. Lodges make Masons, but Masons must work wherever a lawful task is to be wrought. It was during the late civil war in the South that American Masons took new pledges to the truthfulness of Masonry. Unwavering in their civil and political allegiance they rendered to each other duties of brotherly charity, and to those not brethren, the fruits of true philanthropy.

So has it been during this horrible war in France, and over and over again have testimonies been given how, in the bitterest of conflicts, mutual services have been rendered to each other by French and German Masons, to their own honor and the glory of Masonry.

This is the truly Masonic work which the French agitators seek to destroy by their unjustifiable self-conceit and arrogance. They seek to divert the allegiance of the German Masons from Masonry by threatening their chiefs, and thereby interpose a barrier between the wounded French Mason and the German who sympathises with him—between the prisoners and their captors.

This is not all, for, fortifying the Roman Catholics in their erroneous impressions of Freemasonry, and their prejudices against it, those of the latter, who sympathise with the French cause are now fully persuaded that the Prussian King and the Crown Prince will be assassinated by the dagger of the French Masons, as being excommunicated from Masonry. For this false picture of Masonry, so contrary to its noble course during the war, we are indebted to these proceedings, against which we feel called upon to protest.—F. M. Magazine, (London).

Intolerance.

One of the hardest principles to enforce is that of tolerance in matters of belief and practice. Where intolerance is the rule, inquiry is skepticism, and investigation is infidelity. The powers that be proclaim their dogmas, and though utterly unlike in different places, comparison is not permitted. In Russia, it is absolute monarchy; in Turkey, absolutism based upon polygamy; while in England, a church with forms is the basis of the State. In the latter country, one may express his mind, but social ostracism follows. Anti-Masonry is the essense of intolerance. It is simply a principle of opposition, or rather, of oppositions. An anti-Mason who is a Democrat, holds a Republican in as much abhorrence as he does a Mason. He would probably vote for the latter when he would not for the former.

Mr. Finney would as soon vote for a Mason as for a Baptist, while we presume that Mr. Barlow would sooner vote for Logan than a democrat. Men like Philo Carpenter, Mr Barlow and President Finney who profess love for liberty of conscience, are the most intolerant towards such as differ with them. It is amusing to hear such men laud the Puritans for proclaiming liberty of conscience, while hanging the Quakers and banishing the Baptists. In the hey-day of President Blanchard's reign at Galesburg, he was far more agreeable to Masons than he was to Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians or liberal Christians. He fought the Presbyterians into the Congregational fold; Methodism was little short of infidelity; the Universalists fit only for perdition, while water and close communion were his special abhorrence. If there was any one man more disagreeable to these persuasions than any other, that man was President Blanchard. His opposition was coarse, rough, brutal. Yet no man could be kinder than he to such as agreed with him, such as flattered him or submitted to him. Opposition to his views or policy he never could brook. And yet, the denomination that he has labored long to build up, in his old age, declares him insane. All such men are more or less so. They cannot bear a government which they cannot control. They abhor a theology differing from theirs. They try to pull down everything which they are not instumental in building up. If a Mason here or there, with thousands of others, escapes the punishment he deserves the blame is charged upon Masonry, while if their fellow-members escape a just hanging or deserved confinement in the penitentiary the cry of persecution and a just acquittal is raised.

There is nothing more disagreeable than a professional fault-finder, and to this class all active anti-Masons belong. As a class they are not only opposed to Masonry, but they feed upon jealousy, and practice uncharitableness toward such as differ with them in political views and religious opinions. Philip C. Tucker showed his sense, when he refused to sleep in the same room with a political anti-Mason, for the reason that he held him to be either dishonest, insane or a fool.

The inquiry naturally presents itself, is there no intolerance among Masons? The charges made against us by our opponents prove that there is less of this among us than among any other class of men. While we cheerfully accord a general desire to meet on one level, yet we must say that our brethren have much to learn in the matter of respecting honest differences and conscientious convictions.

Authority Withdrawn and Powers Confirmed.

R. W. Bro. D. W. THOMSON, Fulton; R. W. Bro. H. W. HUBBARD, Centralia; R. W. SYLVESTER STEVENS, Knoxville; R. W. RICHARD D. HAMMOND, Macomb, and W. Bro. J. C. W. BAILEY, of Chicago, have authority from us to form chapters of the Eastern Star, subordinate to the National Grand Chapter, and to communicate degrees for that purpose only. All authority granted for a like purpose to any other persons is withdrawn and abrogated.

The jurisdiction of each chapter embraces the jurisdiction of the lodge where situate, with liberty to receive petitions from persons eligible not included in any defined jurisdiction.

No degrees can be lawfully conferred upon eligible persons living within the jurisdiction of any chapter, and all such work will be held as clandestine.

No persons have a right to visit any chapter of the Eastern Star but such as are members of chapters in good standing.

None are eligible to the Order of the Eastern Star but Master Masons in good standing, their wives, mothers, married sisters, and daughters, and unmarried sisters and daughters of their own blood, eighteen years of age, and the widows of Master Masons who died in good standing.

R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson.

We have on file several very interesting letters from Bro. Thomson, by which we are glad to learn that he is meeting with high favor in his lecturing tours. He has visited Cedar Rapids, Marshalltown, Nevada, Montana, Boonsboro, Missouri Valley, and Council Bluffs, Iowa; at Nevada, he met M. W. Bro. John Scott, P. G. M. Then to Leavenworth, where he found M. W. Bro. John H. Brown, who is, or was, Grand Master. Here he found two lodges, chapter, council and commandery. With Bro. Brown and Sir Commander Gould, he next visited Topeka, and assisted in conferring the Red Cross. He speaks of Lawrence as a fine city.

Bro. Thompson has calls to visit Wyanett, Metamora, Havana, Chester, Mt. Sterling, Forrest, El Paso, Wyoming and Washington, and will be invited at Moweaqua, and probably at Litchfield.

He speaks of Marshalltown as one of the liveliest places in Iowa. Live men make a live place. With Bro. Welch he found a thanksgiving dinner as is one.

At Boon Station he found a brisk place, and Bro. H. B. Minier, host of the railroad hotel and a brother-in-law of Ill. Bro. G. R. Smith, Chicago.

Four hundred and sixty-seven miles from Chicago is Missouri Valley Junction, a new and live town, with a good lodge and new hall.

Death of Bro. L. D. Hains.

On Sunday morning, November 27th, 1870, a little before 5 o'clock, occurred the death of Lucien Darwin Hains, familiarly known as "Dar," a long time resident of this city. He was for years Master of Wade-Barney Lodge No. 512. Bro. Hains has for two years, and until a few months ago, resided in Evanston, Illnois, and was Past Master of Evans Lodge No. 524. Previous to that time he had been a well-known business man of Bloomington. His relatives and friends mostly reside here. After his return from Evanston, Illinois, he was attacked with dropsy, and for several weeks his recovery had been considered doubtful. Until a few days before death his symptoms were favorable. Bro. Hains was for several years a merchant here, and after leaving that business he was one of the partners of the firm that built the Novelty Mills. He has many friends here and elsewhere, and was a man of kind and generous disposition. He was born in the State of Ohio, in 1829, being about 41 years of age.

The large assembly of friends at the funeral proved that no ordinary victim of mortality was being buried. In the prime of life, in the height of usefulness, beloved by all, lending dignity and ornament to society, borne to his final resting place.

The brotherhoods of Masons and Odd-Fellows gathered around the remains to testify to the love and respect they bore the deceased, to gather consolation from the last look on his familiar features, and to receive instruction from the contemplation of his graces and virtues. The funeral cortege was very large, including a committee from Evans Lodge No. 524. He was buried with Masonic ceremonies, the Odd-Fellows dropping their evergreens.

IN pursuance of our intention to visit every lodge in this State, within the present and next year, we are absent nearly all or at least in some form, three-fourths of the time. We cannot, therefore, run first to one lodge, and then to another in some other direction, but must economize both time and travel. We are therefore making up routes of travel, and with few exceptions intend to give one day, including necessary travel, to each lodge. Our route for the present month includes Shirley, Towanda, Pontiac, Naperville, Aurora, Batavia, Clintnoville, Richmond, McHenry, Palatine, Nunda, Algonquin, Dundee, Elgin, and Wheaton.

ON the 27th of December the officers elect of Springfield Lodge No. 4, Central Lodge No. 71 and of Tyrian Lodge No. 333, in this city, were installed by R. W. Bro. O. H. Miner, Grand Secretary. The lodge-room was crowded with brethren and their ladies, and after the ceremonies were concluded, they repaired to the American House, and partook of an elegant and sumptuous banquet prepared by Bro. John Nafew, the enterprising host of the house.

Information Wanted

Of the whereabouts of one J. Ivan Thompson, who, several months since, left his place of residence, Silver Glen, in this State, and has not since been heard from by his family. He is a very tall, slim, middle-aged man, thin-visaged, and of rather a light complexion, and has, or had a demit from this lodge. Should this meet his eye he is requested to correspond immediately with this lodge. Should any brother be able to give us any information in regard to him, they will promote the interests of the Craft by so doing.

By order of Fremont Lodge No. 15, A. F. and A. M., Fremont, Nebraska.

Wm. H. Munger,
Secretary, p. t.

We have received the December number of the Evergreen—the last number that will issue under the editorial eye of Bro. Guilbert. However much our confreres may have disagreed with him—however much they may have felt the sting of his sharp pen—they will all acknowledge that for one unused to the editorial tripod, he has displayed wonderful versatility, talent and power. His style is his own, and his freedom and independence marked and decided. We do not confess to any inferiority in pen controversy, but we "breathe freer." He has given a charm, originality and spice to his columns that none of our cotemporaries have yet equalled. Nor has he been lacking in good doctrine or sound words. We wish him abundant success in his profession, unbounded domestic felicity, plenty and peace, and a visit from us.

Death of a Brother.

John H. Brandon, a much esteemed and widely-known brother, died at Sheldon, Illinois, on the 28th of November, at the age of 35. He was a Master Mason and much devoted to the Order. As a citizen and mechanic he was a very useful man, and his loss will be deeply felt by those who knew and patronized him.

His remains were followed to the grave by a procession of Masons from Sheldon Lodge No. 609. The occasion was impressive, and the ceremonies reflected credit upon the brethren in attendance.

Our good brother Hawley, of Dixon, Deputy Grand Master, lost his little boy on the 16th December. Verily the grim messenger is no respecter of persons. He and his family may be assured of our sympathies, and of the sorrowful feeling of the whole Craft.

And M. E. Comp. John M. Pearson, of Godfrey, lost his little son, aged eight years, not long since. What havoc among children! And how severe the blows! All earthly comfort is little worth. May the Divine One carry consolation to the hearts of the bereaved parents.

Father W. W. Crossman, of Delevan, was born in 1794—raised in Taunton, Mass., in 1815; exalted in 1817; was W. M. at Taunton 3 years; was H. P.; came to Illinois in 1837, and lived 15 years at Delevan before meeting a Royal Arch Mason. Was the first Master of Delevan Lodge, and at the advanced age of 77, is a regular attendant; is a member of Pekin Chapter, and after a hermitage of 15 years, passed a creditable examination. An honorable, upright man, whom all delight to honor.

Loomis House.

This most excellent hotel is kept by Bro. Wm. Siemens, formerly of the Manning House, in this city. It is located on the square, in Carlinville, and is convenient to all business men. It is fitted up with all modern conveniences, and was built by plans furnished by Bro. E. E. Myers. The attention, fare and comfort are equal to a first-class hotel in St. Louis and Chicago.

We are rejoiced to learn that Judge Cunningham has been appointed District Deputy again. We are not informed as to the extent of his district.

No brother could be selected who is better qualified than Bro. Geo. H. Raymond, of Litchfield, for the position of District Deputy for Shelby, Montgomery and Christian counties. The M. W. Grand Master has certainly consulted the good of Masonry in making these appointments.

New Management.—The Evergreen is now published by Griggs, Watson & Day, at Davenport, Iowa, at $2.00, yearly. Grand Secretary Parvin, of Iowa City, and Grand Secretary Langridge, of Muscatine, are the new editors. They are men of learning, experience, talent and discretion. Success to them.

Hon. J. S. Bradford has laid upon our table a brief of the Statutes and Decisions of Illinois on the subject of Mechanic's Lien, with suggested forms for petition, answer, cross-bill, decree, etc., by Hon. H. W. Wells, Peoria. It is a pamphlet of eighty-four pages, and is worthy of general purchase by all business men.

The Grand Lodge of England held its Quarterly Communication December 7, the Earl de Grey and Ripon, M. W. G. M. on the Throne, who was again nominated for Grand Master.

The Grand Lodge of Mark Masters for England also convened Dec. 7, Grand Master Portal in the Chair, who was renominated.

Those who know our good brother Weinland, W. M. at Chatsworth, will be pained to learn that he has lost his mill, by fire; a most valuable property, worth $20,000; insured for $10,000. Has the fire-fiend emigrated from Fairbury to Chatsworth and Chenoa?

Caned.—W. Bro. J. P. Ferns, Grand Tyler, was grievously insulted by Dearborn Lodge No. 310, Chicago, Dec. 28, by the presentation of a gold-headed cane. When shall we be insulted by being reminded of the flight of time, or the need of support in our old age? When?

The Sir Knights of Hugh De Payens Commandery, at Carrollton, have elected Col. Sir J. B. Nulton, E. C.; Sir W. L. Orr, Gen.; Sir H. C. Withers, C. G.; Sir Geo. W. Davis, Prelate; Sir W. M. Fry, Recorder.

The M. W. Grand Master has been pleased to appoint our good brother, Sylvester Stevens, Grand Lecturer and D. Deputy Grand Master for Stark, Knox and Fulton counties, and he is ready to serve the brethren.

Thanks to G. W. Childs, editor Public Ledger, corner Sixth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, for a copy of his valuable Ledger Almanac.

A letter from Burlington, Vt., invites us very cordially to visit the Grand Bodies of that State, next June. Oh that we had the spelter!

The Western Odd-Fellow is published weekly at $1.50. Address Dr. J. Ward Ellis, box 542, Chicago.

The Chicago Herald is a large weekly, literary, independent journal, with Republican tendencies and high tariff proclivities. By Powel & Steele, 44 State street. $2.50 annually.

The New Age, the organ of the I. O. O. F. in California, comes regularly.

Prang's Chromo, for Christmas, has pictures of a boy, a girl and a little child. Pretty, too.

Peter's Musical Monthly is as musical as ever.

The Young Pilot is published in magazine form, monthly, by the Young Pilot Publishing Company, at the Western News Depot, at $1 yearly.

Our Masonic exchanges come pretty regularly, except the Landmark, which we have missed lately.

The Western Home is a new candidate for favor. Published at 133 Dearborn street, Chicago, by the Western Home Company. It looks pretty well. Is running on premiums and clubs. Send for one number and make up your own opinion.

The Bright Side goes into the hands of the Bright Side Company, Chicago, Illinois. It may be regarded as permanent, and we do not hesitate to pronounce it the most sensible juvenile paper now published; freer from cant, from silliness and babyisms. One copy one one year, 25 cents; eight copies, $1.60; twenty-five, $4.50; one hundred, $15.

The Press is an illustrated quarterly journal. We have seen many fine specimens of printing from the large establishment of Horton & Leonard, 108 and 110 Randolph street, Chicago, but none that excelled their new quarterly publication, the Press. The artistic excellence of both typography and press work, are such as will delight the eye of all lovers of the "art preservative."

The Technologist is at hand. $2 yearly. Every engineer, builder and manufacturer should have it. 121 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Manufacturer and Builder for January at hand. 37 Park Row, New York, monthly; $1.50. A good work for builders, manufacturers and engineers.

The Mothers' Journal, for January, is admirable. By Mrs. Mary G. Clarke, 126 Dearborn street, Chicago; $2 per annum. We thank her for her brave words on divorce, as much as we despise those who would set aside the law of the "Great Light" upon that subject.

Scribner's Monthly, by Scribner & Co., 654 Broadway, New York, at $3 per annum, embraces the Riverside, and of course has Hans Anderson for a contributor. It is arranged in a tasty manner, on good type, and is the very beau ideal of a magazine for children and youth, and, we think, for children of a larger growth. Its plates and designs are exquisite.

Messrs. Root & Cady, 67 Washington street Chicago, are publishers of the Song Messenger, monthly, at $1 per year. The literary matter is excellent, the music new and good, and the mechanical execution in good taste.

We are glad to welcome the Landmark to our sanctum again. Our old friend, Bro. Geo. F. Ilsley, appears as proprietor.

By a letter from W. Bro. B. O. Austin of New Bloomfield, Mo., we learn of the death of Past Grand Master John F. Houston; an able man, true Mason, and sincere Christian.

We received an "invite" to the Templar's festival at Quincy, Jan. 5. We bow editorially.

Railroads.

Three facts in the history of Illinois centuries ago would have been regarded as fables: they bewilder even now. But let it be constantly kept in mind that Illinois embraces the latitudes of Virginia, Pennsylvania, Central New York, and Massachusetts, with a milder climate in the same parallels; that she has 56,000 square miles, with less waste lands in proportion, than any other compact body of the same size on the earth; that the southern portion of Illinois is suited to the raising of cotton, tobacco, wheat, corn, fruit, and timber; that the central part is adapted to stock and grain, and that the northern part abounds in manufacturing facilities, is unsurpassed for darying, and for the hardier classes of stock. Taken altogether, such a farming region, embracing so many diversities, is not elsewhere to be found. Such a country needs but little advertising. It is sought for and occupied.

The Black Hawk war was followed by a constant tide of emigration to Northern and Central Illinois. Financial disaster and distress in the east and south added largely to the volume. The increase of population from 1835 until 1870 has no parallel. From less than 250,000, the population in 1840 was over 450,000; more than 600,000 in 1845; than 800,000 in 1850; than 1,300,000 in 1855; than 1,700,000 in 1860; than 2,100,000 in 1865, and more than 2,500,000 in 1870. The increase in round numbers from 1835 until 1850, was at the rate of 40,000 per annum, and since that time, 80,000 per annum. Fourth on the list of States; soon to be the third. Illinois has contributed more than her quota to the populations of Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Colorado, and the Territories west. For all this, there has been added to the population since 1835 more than 2,300,000. This is one fact.

In 1840, Masonry had a bare existence in the Prairie State. Now, within thirty years, an increase of nearly 700 lodges, and of nearly 40,000 affiliated members. This is the second fact.

The very character of the soil is a serious impediment to transportation. The products of the soil demanded the means of transportation. The water facilities did not meet the demand. Hence railroads have been built. This is the third fact. A few words concerning them is appropriate here.

The Illinois Central traverses the State from Dunleith, in the extreme northwest corner of the State, in latitude forty-two and a half degrees, to Cairo, in latitude thirty-seven degrees, via Freeport, Dixon, Mendota, LaSalle, El Paso, Bloomington, Clinton, Decatur, Pana, Vandalia, Centralia, DuQuoin, Carbondale, and Jonesboro, a distance of 456 miles, while the Chicago division traverses the eastern part of the State 253 miles from Chicago, via Kankakee, Gilman, Champaign and Urbana, Tolono, Mattoon, Effingham, and Odin, to Centralia, making a total of 709 miles, to which we add 256 by direct line from Dunleith and Dubuque to Fort Dodge, and by branch to Mona in Iowa, making a grand total of 965 miles. Including all short branches, the number of miles will probably reach 1,000, omitting all accounts of switches, parallel and side tracks.

In addition to this, the Central Company run two trains each day over the St. Louis, Terre Haute, Vandalia and Indianapolis Railroad, to and from St. Louis via Effingham, and is also running trains from DuQuoin to St. Louis over the road between those places. We have no doubt that this company will soon command a line to the gulf, and another to the Pacific. There is a combination of ambition, enterprise, sagacity, and discretion in J. M. Douglas, President, which not only makes him a rare executive, but a most influential calculator for the future.

The Chicago and Alton Railroad runs on a very direct line 285 miles from Chicago to St. Louis, via Joliet, Wilmington, Chenoa, Bloomington, Lincoln, Springfield, Carlinville, Alton, and East St. Louis. The business along the line is immense. The track is in splendid condition, the passenger and freight management is excellent, and the general administration is as near perfect as skill, care and industry can make it.

In addition to the main line, is a branch diverging at Bloomington, running via Delavan, Mason City, Petersburg, Jacksonville, Whitehall, Carrollton, Jerseyville, to Monticello, 150 miles, where it unites with the main line. Two passenger trains run over this branch every day. Another branch of thirty-five miles extends from Dwight to Wenona, making a grand total of 460 miles. No road in the State traverses a better country for local support. T. B. Blackstone is President, and J. C. McMullin General Superintendent.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, taking its combinations into account, is one of the most powerful corporations in the country. It has assumed its present proportions by piece-meal. Its main trunk from Chicago to Galesburg, via Naperville, Aurora, Mendota, Princeton, and Galva, is 163 miles in length, the branch to Burlington via Monmouth, including a short branch to Oquawka, thirty-two miles; to Peoria via Knoxville, Yates City, and Elmwood, fifty-three miles; to Quincy, which might properly be called the main trunk, via Bushnell, Macomb, and Camp Point, 100 miles. All these from Galesburg. The branch from Buda to Rushville, via Bradford, Toulon, Yates City, Farmington, Canton, Lewistown, and Vermont, is 110 miles in length. The branch from Carthage to Burlington is thirty-two miles long; that from Galva to New Boston, via Aledo is fifty-one miles, making a total of 541 miles. Add to this the branch from Burlington to Keokuk, forty-three miles, makes a grand total of 584 miles. Short arms here and there will take the amount over 600. It is in contemplation to extend from Rushville to Hannibal. The President of this road, John F. Joy, is also President of the Michigan Central, and is, beyond question, one of the ablest railroad men of the day. It is well understood that his counsels control and look to the extension of colossal lines from Burlington, Quincy, Hannibal, and Kansas City. The traffic over the main trunk from Galesburg is so large, that a double track is not merely a necessity, but indispensable. It is not possible to operate any road with more efficiency or system than is clearly manifest here. The country is fine, local business and travel large, and the express trains are all crowded.

The Toledo, Wabash, & Western has loomed up to a first-class road. Its entire length through Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, including its branches, is 684 miles. From State-Line, via Danville, Tolono, Bement, Decatur, Springfield, Jacksonville Meredosia, Mt. Sterling, and Clayton, to Quincy, 233 miles; from Decatur, via Taylorville, Litchfield, Staunton, and Edwardsville, to East St. Louis, ninety-two miles; from Bluff City, via Naples, Griggsville, Barry, Pittafield, to Hannibal, fifty miles; from Clayton, via Carthage to Keokuk, fifty-two miles—a total of 447 miles. It has a direct connection west to St. Joseph and Kansas City, via Hannibal and Quincy, and looks to a connection with the Union Pacific by Keokuk. It commands a large through traffic and passenger business, while its Illinois resources are inferior to few or none. One of its trains makes direct connection for Indianapolis and Cincinnati at Lafayette. The road is in careful hands, and under careful, economical management. R. Andrews is the efficient Superintendent of the Illinois division.

The Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, in all its divisions, has about 1,300 miles of track. Of this, 600 miles are in Illinois. From Chicago, via Waukegan to State-line, and thence to Milwaukee, via Woodstock and Harvard to State-line, and thence to Madison, via Wheaton, Elgin, Belvidere, and Rockford to Freeport; via Geneva, DeKalb, Dixon, Sterling, and Morrison to Fulten City, and thence to Council Bluffs and Omaha; from Rockford, via Harvard to Genoa and Kenosha; from Elgin, via Crystal Lake to Richmond, and thence to Genoa. Its main features are its connections with the Union Pacific, west; with Lake Superior, via Green Bay; with Minnesota, via Madison, and with Milwaukee. It commands all the northwestern outlets from Chicago by any direct lines of road. John F. Tracy has gained the presidency of this monster corporation, in conjunction with the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific, combining more than 1,800 miles under one presidency. He has proven himself a match for the ablest railroad kings. The two roads make a direct connection with the Union Pacific at Omaha.

The Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific extends from Chicago, via Joliet, Morris, Ottawa, LaSalle, Peru, and Geneseo to Rock Island, including Peoria Branch, is 215 miles, and thence from Davenport to Omaha, 261 miles, including the branch to Washington. This has been an important road from its first building. At Rock Island we started out with a railroad project via Cordova, Sterling, Dixon, and Aurora to Chicago, avoiding the canal; but Gen. Vandever took the other shoot to Peru, and succeeded. It is now a main artery west, and the only commanding road, as yet, via Rock Island. What Rock Island and its surroundings will be, time will disclose. We have a high belief but will not foreshadow. If our dreams be realised, the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railroad will be the grandest on this continent.

The Ohio & Mississippi reaches from Cincinnati to St. Louis, and, including branch to Louisville, has 442 miles of road, of which the road from Vincennes, via Lawrenceville, Olney, Salem, Carlyle, and Lebanon to St. Louis, has 192 miles. All below this road is properly Southern Illinois; all between this road and the road from Burlington via Peoria to Gilman, Central Illinois. Passengers from St. Louis for New York now have five direct lines to choose from. The Ohio & Mississippi, by Cincinnati; the Terre Haute, Vandalia, & Indianapolis; the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute, both via Indianapolis; the Toledo, Wabash, & Western, via Decatur and Toledo, and the Chicago & Alton, via Chicago.

The O. & M. is a wide track road, has a large through business, besides the exclusive control of a large way business. W. D. Griswold has been President for a long time.

The Toledo, Peoria, and Warsaw runs in connection with the T. W. & W., the Illinois Central, and the Indiana Central, but properly commences at Logansport, Ind., and terminates at Warsaw, Ill. The distance in Illinois is 227 miles, via Watseka, Gilman, Chenoa, El Paso, Peoria, Canton, Bushnell, and La Harpe. The road from the State-line to Peoria was originally built in connection with the Peoria and Oquawka; the latter was incorporated into the C., B. & Q., and the eastern portion obtained a fine country for its extension, and an outlet on the Mississippi River at Keokuk and Warsaw. It is understood that the Pennsylvania Central will, in due time, make it a part of her trunk line west.

Messrs. Secor & Cruger, the original proprietors, still maintain their positions as President and Superintendent.

The St. Louis, Vandalia, Terre Haute, & Indianapolis Railroad, of which Senator Alexander, of Greenville, was lately President, and who exerted himself successfully to effect its completion, is on a pretty direct line from St. Louis, via Highland, Greenville, Vandalia, Effingham, and Marshall to Terre Haute, Ind., and thence to Indianapolis, 238 miles. The Illinois Central run two trains daily from Effingham to St. Louis, in connection with the Cairo and Chicago trains. It is a good road, and accommodates a fine country. About 165 miles is in this State. W. R. McKeen, of Terre Haute, is the President.

The Indianapolis & St. Louis Railroad is a consolidation of the old lines from Indianapolis to Terre Haute, and from thence to St. Louis, 261 miles. Of this, 189 miles is in Illinois, from Terre Haute via, Paris, Charleston, Mattoon, Shelbyville, Pana, Hillsboro, Litchfield, and Alton to St. Louis. It is all an old settled country, and furnishes business enough of itself to support a road. Gen. T. A. Morris, of Indianapolis, is President.

The Peoria, Pekin, and Jacksonville Railroad, from Peoria, via Pekin, Havana, and Virginia to Jacksonville, is eighty-three miles long. It runs in connection with C., R. I. & P., north, the T., W. & W., east and west, and the C. & A. south to St. Louis. It runs over a very level country, and alongside of the Illinois river from Peoria to Bath, crossing the river by bridge at Pekin. John Allen, of Pekin, is President, and Edward Hudson, Superintendent.

The Indianapolis, Bloomington, & Western Railway, from Indianapolis to Beckwith, and thence, via Danville, Urbana, Champaign, Farmer City, Leroy, Bloomington, and Pekin to Peoria, 212 miles in length, of which 132 are in Illinois. This is a new road, and was quickly built. C. R. Griggs, of Urbana, is President. It crosses the T., W. & W. at Danville, the Chicago branch I. C. at Champaign, the main branch of the Central, and the C. & A. at Bloomington.

The Rockford, Rock Island, & St. Louis is now completed from Sterling, via Rock Island, Monmouth, Bushnell, Vermont, Beardstown, Winchester, Whitehall, Brighton, and Upper Alton to St. Louis; length, about 275 miles. It opens a very fine country, and supplies a long-desired communication by old traveled routes. The country through which it runs will sustain it, and leaves a profit. George Greene, of Cedar Rapids, is President.

The Western Union Railroad is 197 miles long, and extends from Racine, Wisconsin, to Beloit, and thence 128 miles, via Freeport, Mt. Carroll, Fulton, and Moline to Rock Island. Alexander Mitchell, President of the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, is also President of this road. It commands a large business.

The Chicago, Danville, & Vincennes Railway is completed from Chicago to Memence, in Kankakee county, fifty-three miles, and is to be completed to Danville, where a direct connection will be made with the gulf by way of Evansville, Nashville, and Pensacola.

The Belleville & Southern Illinois division of the St. L., A. & T. H. R. R., is now completed to DuQuoin, seventy-six miles, by which a very direct connection is made between St. Louis and Cairo, and it will probably be extended either to Metropolis or Evansville. Charles Butler is President.

The Springfield & Southeastern Railway is now completed from Shawneetown about 100 miles, via Fairfield, Flora, and Louisville to Edgewood, on the Illinois Central, and from Pana, via Taylorville, forty-three miles, to Springfield. The hiatus between Edgewood and Pana is under contract, and will be finished the coming season. It is also being extended northwest. Thomas Ridgeway, of Shawneetown, President. It will be an important line.

The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, the Michigan Central, the Cincinnati Air-Line, the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne, & Chicago, all run round the head of Lake Michigan at an average of twenty miles each in this State.

The Mount Carbon Railway, running through the immense coal fields of Jackson county, connects the Mississippi at Grand Tower with Carbondale on the Central, is about thirty miles in length, and passes Murphysboro.

The Rock Island & Peoria Railway is built from Rock Island to Coal Valley, and will soon be completed.

Railways are in process of construction from Gilman, via Farmer City, and Clinton to Springfield; from Springfield, via Beardstown and Rushville to Keokuk, nine miles of which is built; from Springfield, via Litchfield to St. Louis; from St. Louis, via Nashville and Mt. Vernon, eastward, of which the extent between Nashville to Mt. Vernon, via Ashley, on the Central, is built; perhaps more. Another road is building from Quincy to Carthage; a road from Jacksonville to Virden is completed to Waverly; a road connects Sycamore with Cortland, on the C. & N. W. R. W. Another connects Warren, on the Central Railroad, in JoDaviess county, with Platteville and Mineral Point, in Wisconsin. The road from Washington to Ottawa, via Metamora, Wenona, and Streator, is completed, and is being rapidly extended up the valley of Fox River. We are not certain but it is already built.

Other roads have, doubtless, escaped our attention. In fact, it is no light matter to keep up with them.

Specialties.—The Michigan Central, Illinois Central, C., B. & Q., run into the depot at the foot of Lake street, Chicago, which is about to be materially enlarged. The Michigan Southern, and C., R. I. & P. run into their splendid depot on LaSalle street. The C. & A. and the P., Ft. W. & C., run into the Alton depot on the west side.

Of the amount set down as complete, we foot up 5,055 miles of railway in Illinois, and to this we may safely add 2,000 more in process of completion and construction, as quite certain to be ready for use within twelve months. Seven thousand miles of railroad in a State comparatively but thirty-five years old!

Masonic.

On Friday evening the installation of the officers elect of Cordova Lodge No. 543, A. F. and A. M., was held at their hall. The officers elect are as follows: O. N. Whitford, W. M.; J. Q. Adams, S. W.; K. C. Cool, J. W.; Abrum Bolinger, Treasurer; W. Rathbone, Secretary; S. L. Pyle, S. D.; Wm. Hoagland, J. D.; S. E. Hull, Tyler; Geo. Bryan, 1st. Steward; Wm. Waterhouse, 2d. Steward.

The installation services were performed by Bro. Green, of Chicago, and Dr. Fleming, P. M., assisted by visiting brethren from Port Byron. Breth. Green and Fleming gave each a short address for the good of the Order, after which the lodge with its guests withdrew to Mrs. Marshall's House, where we enjoyed good music and an excellent supper.

Bethalto Lodge No. 406.—The following officers of Bethalto Lodge were duly installed by Bro. Eli T. Hollister, D. D. G. M., on Saturday, January 7th, 1871.

Breth. James P. Cumming, W. M.; James P. Wood, S. W.; James M. Wilson, J. W.; S. B. Harrison, Treas.; John V. Richards, Sec.; William, E. Hill, S. D.; John P. Jones, J. D.; Luther L. Lyon and Samuel T. Patterson, Stewards; Wyatt Simpson, Tyler.

After the installation services were over all partook of a bountiful repast prepared by the fair ladies and daughters of the members of the lodge. A number of brethren from adjoining lodges were present. After a time of pleasant social intercourse the company separated, well pleased. Wishing we might all live to enjoy many such pleasant and harmonious reunions.

Saint Joseph, Mo., Dec. 27, 1870.

Bro. H. G. Reynolds:

The Masonic bodies of our city have concluded their annual elections for officers to control the Craft another year. As The Trowel, has quite a number of friends among us, we would be pleased to see in the January number, the following list of officers:

St Joseph Lodge No. 78, A. F. and A. M.: John B. Howard, W. M.; John Bonham, S. W.; R. J. S. Wise, J. W.; John Pinger, Treas.; A. B. Fraser, Sec..

Zeredatha Lodge No. 189, A. F. and A. M.: Thomas J. Burgess, W. M.; Daniel O'Toole Jr., S. W.; Thomas C. Roberts, J. W.; James C. Hull, Treas.; D. M. McDonald, Sec.

Charty Lodge No. 331, A. F. and A. M.: John A. Nicely, W. M.; James W. Goslee, S. W.; J. A. Raynor, J. W.; Charles West, Treas.; D. P. Wallingford, Sec.

St. Joseph Royal Arch Chapter No. 14, R. A. M.—Charles F. Knight, H. P.; Edward Dutton, K.; James W. Goslee, S.; Edward C. Tewalee, C. H.; W. P. Saunders, P. S.; John Williams, Treas.; D. M. McDonald, Sec.

Like the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, we elect new presiding officers every year. The practice of rotation in office is so well established, that we have promoted none to the Oriental Chair this year, who ever occupied it before. This is as it should be. During the year as much work was done as was necessary for a healthy growth of the Order.

Fraternally yours,
W. R. Penick.

Eastern Star.

On the 9th day of December, we constituted Fulton Chapter No. 37, at ·Vermont, Fulton county. Bro. Jackson Kimble, W. P.; Mrs. America Toland, W. M.; Caroline Stephens, A. M. The degrees were conferred upon 27 brethren and 17 ladies. The degrees were conferred in the evening by the officers.

On the 9th day of December we constituted Washington Chapter No. 39, at Washington, Tazewell county. Bro. Jesse B. Cooper, W. P.; Mrs. Mary Ellen Hiserodt, W. M.; Mrs. Mary Weiser, A. M. The degrees were conferred on the following morning with much eclat upon the noble Mrs. E. C. Anthony.

On the 13th day of December we constituted Harvest No. 40, at Pocahontas, Bond county. Rev. E. A. Hoyt, W. P.; Mrs. Mary H. Reed, W. M.; Mrs. Martha M. Bradford, A. M. The degrees were conferred on 21 brethren and 11 ladies.

On the 21st day of December we constituted Amaranth Chapter No. 41, at Ash Grove, Shelby county. Johnson B. Daniels, W. P.; Mrs. Amanda T. Worley, W. M.; Miss Louisiana E. Abbott, A. M. The degrees were conferred on 21 brethren and 13 ladies.

On the 27th day of December we constituted Triangle Chapter No. 42, at Sidney, Champaign county. George R. Shawhan, W. P.; Mrs. Hannah McElroy, W. M.; Mrs. Elizabeth A. Boon, A. M. The degrees were conferred on 22 brethren and 14 ladies.

On the 30th day of December, we constituted H. G. Reynolds Chapter No. 43, at Delevan, Tazewell county. Oliver W. Spear, W. P.; Mrs. Emma E. Orendorff, W. M.; Mrs. Cornelia Spear, A. M. Degrees conferred on 17 brethren and 10 ladies.

On the third day of January, 1871, we constituted Shumway Chapter No. 44, of the Eastern Star at Taylorville, Christian county. Bro. Wm. W. Anderson was elected W. P.; Mrs. Emily A. R. Shumway, W. M.; Mrs. Emma Anderson, A. M. This charter is named in honor of Hon. D. D. Shumway, and the Worthy Matron is his honored widow. An unusual amount of talent will make this a prosperous body.

We expected to give a notice of Bro. Hawley in this number, but the death of his little boy prevented him from giving any attention to the matter. So soon as we receive his likeness, it will appear.

Our good brother, G. M. Evatt, is doing a large business in the stove and hardware line, for the Excelsior Stove Works, on Delaware street, Quincy.

The hall of Newton Lodge No. 361 at Kentland, Ind., was destroyed by fire Dec. 13; the charter, records, and jewels were saved.

The Craft in the State will rejoice to learn that R. W. Bro. H. W. Hubbard is again appointed District Deputy at Centralia.

Officers of Harmony Lodge No. 429, of Pennsylvania, for 1871.

Elias L. Gillepsie, W. M.; Sidney M. Wiehl, S. W.; James D. Lytle, J. W.; William C. Latshaw, Treas.; Amos Lusk, Sec.

The brethren of Cyrus Lodge No. 88, had a fine time at the installation of officers at Mt. Carrol, December 27. W. Bro. W. H. Long, delivered a fine address.

Mount Nebo Lodge U. D., at Avoca, Iowa, W. Bro. Pardon B. Hunt, W. M., has started out safely and prosperously.

A Plea for Freemasonry.

BY ALBERT G. MACKEY.

There is in the moral as in the physical atmosphere, an alternation of calms and storms. There are long periods of quiet, when science and philosophy are uninterrupted in thoir search for truth; and then again there are sudden uprisings of bigotry and intolerance which seek, in a tempest of calumny, to overpower every attempt at healthful progress in the work of man's development. History records these periods with a certainty as painful as it is unerring. It points to the lamentable fact that there has been no association for human improvement that has not been met by detraction; no grand idea of reformation that has not been encountered by persecution. But truth, with whom are "the eternal years of God," survives the struggle, and, Antæus-like, rises from each shock with renovated vigor.

All great discoveries, all novel inventions, all unaccustomed schemes have encountered this never-failing opposition of ignorance. Galileo, when he taught new truths in astronomy, was visited with the anathemas of the church. Hervey, when he promulgated the theory of the arterial and venous circulation of the blood, was derided as chimerical. Jenner, as a reward for his immortal discovery of the preventive powers of vaccination, was met with charges of imposture and impiety.

Science has no enemy so bitter as the bigotry of ignorance.

Freemasonry, which professes to be a philosophy whose tendency is to make men better in a way peculiar to itself, has encountered this fate common to every scheme that does not move on in the ordinary and scarcely more than stagnant current of unprogressive life. One hundred and thirty years ago the Church invoked its curses upon the the disciples of the Order. But the fulminations of the Vatican could not repress its progress, and it continued to flourish in defiance of papal bulls. Forty years ago, in this country, the persecution was renewed, and the attempt to crush the Association was again made, but happily made in vain. The political storm of anti-Masonry passed away, with no effect, save to purify the moral atmosphere; and during the ensuing calm of half a century Freemasonry has grown and strengthened, and made successful progress in all in which progrsss is desirable.

And now a new persecution is sought to be awakened, and from the pulpit and the press, in rare instances, and obscure places, are heard bitter objurgations against the Order. So rare indeed are these and so obscure their authors, that they would be unworthy of notice did not the spirit of intolerance by which they are moved deserve a serious condemnation. I have not, therefore, thought it inappropriate on this official occasion and before this audience, to select as the subject of my address a plea for Freemasonry.

"The absurdities and puerilities of Freemasonry are fit only for children, and are unworthy of the time or attention of wise men." Such is the language of our antagonists, and the apothegm is delivered with all that self-sufficiency which shows that the speaker is well satisfied with his own wisdom and is very ready to place himself in the catogory of those wise men whose opinion he invokes.

This, then, is one of the supposed strong points whence we are to be attacked. Others there are, it is true—such as the immorality of the institution, its impiety in claiming to be a religion, the exclusiveness and selfishness of its charities, the unchristian character of its teachings—all of which being assumed, for the sake of argument, as valid points of attack, might afford substantial topics of defence; but to-night I shall confine myself to this single charge that Freemasonry is puerile in its object and design, and contains nothing within it that can entitle it to the respect or even to the attention of sensible men.

Is it then possible that those scholars of unquestioned strength of intellect and depth of science, who have devoted themselves to the study of Masonry, and who have in thousands of volumes given the result of their researches, have been altogether mistaken in the direction of their labors, and have been seeking to develop, not the principles of a philosophy but the mechanism of a toy? Or is the assertion that such is the fact, a mere sophism such as ignorance is every day uttering, and a conclusion to which men are most likely to arrive when they talk of that of which they know nothing, like the critic who reviews a book that he has never read, or the skeptic, who attacks a creed that he does not comprehend? Such claims to an inspired infallibility are not uncommon among men of unsound judgment. Thus, when Gall and Spurzheim first gave to the world their wonderful discoveries in reference to the organization and the functions of the brain—discoveries which have since wrought a marked revolution in the sciences of anatomy, physiology and ethics—the Edinburg reviewers attempted to demolish these philosophers and their new system, but succeeded only in exposing their own ignorance of the science they were discussing. Time, which is continually evolving truth out of every intellectual conflict, has long since shown that the German philosophers were right and that their Scottish critics were wrong. How common is it, even at this day, to hear men deriding alchemy as a system of folly and imposture, cultivated only by madmen and knaves, when the researches of those who have investigated the subject without prejudice but with patient learning have shown, without any possibility of doubt, that these old alchemists, so long the objects of derision to the ignorant, were religious philosophers, and that their science had really nothing to do with the discovery of an elixir of life or the transmutation of the baser metals into gold, but that they, like the Freemasons, with whom they have a strong affinity, concealed under profound symbols, intelligible only to themselves, the search after Divine Truth and the doctrine of immortal life. Truth was the gold which they eliminated from all mundane things, and the immortality of the soul was the elixir of everlasting life, which perpetually renewed youth and took away the power of death.

So it is with Freemasonry. Those who abuse it know nothing of its inner spirit, of its profound philosophy, of the pure religious life that it inculcates. And hence, as they do not profess to be opposed to philosophy or religion, their abuse of the Masonic institution must arise from their utter ignorance of its true character.

It is to be deplored that all men are not governed by the simple rule of common sense, never to discuss any subject which they do not understand. We should thus have been spared much vituperation that is offensive, and much folly that is absurd. "Answer a fool," says the wise king of Israel, "according to his folly." But to answer these declaimers against Freemasonry, with a wisdom proportioned only to the folly which they exhibit, is a task whose difficulties unhappily preclude the possibility of success. How shall we reply to statements that are not founded on facts, or how controvert deductions that have not one particle of logic in their elements? Random assertion is not proof, and in an argument, sophistry and scurrility are unanswerable, simply because they are unworthy of an answer. If we are told that Freemasonry is evil in its tendencies, that it is the antagonist of true religion, or that it gives encouragement to vice, we point, in response, to the long and proud record of pious prelates, of virtuous statesmen, of upright Christians of all classes of society who have been members of the Fraternity, and who have zealously given to it, throughout their lives, their friendship and support. We thus show, by implication, the incongruity and absurdity of supposing that such men could either publicly or secretly hold communion with a pernicious or irreligious association. And we rest, as we have a right to do, on this reply to the general calumny, until our antagonists and vilifiers shall particularize some positive and palpable evil to which the Institution is obnoxious, or some actual crime of which it has been guilty. When the charge is made in this tangible way, and when it comes to us supported, not by idle abuse or heedless declamation, but by the production of some substantial authority, or some attempt at historical testimony, then we will meet it as it should be met, charge after charge, specification after specification, and the authority will be sifted and the testimony cross-examined, so that "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" shall be elicited. Until then let the general charge be met by a general denial, and thus will the fool be answered "according to his folly."

But if I am disposed, looking at the mode in which the revilers of Freemasonry conduct their arguments, to pass them over in silence, or at least, without elaborate reply, I will not hesitate to enter a plea for the Institution which will claim that its design, its history and its philosophy are entitled to the respect of the world, and are worthy of the careful researches of scholars. But to sustain this plea it is necessary that I should first show what the history of Freemasonry is.

At the very first glance, Freemasonry presents itself to any one who is at all acquainted with its organization, under two very different aspects.

First, as a secret society distinguished by a peculiar ritual:

And secondly, as a society having a philosophy on which it is founded, and which it proposes to teach to its disciples.

These by way of distinction may be called the ritualistic and the philosophical elements of Freemasonry.

The ritualistic element of Freemasonry is that which relates to the due performance of the rites and ceremonies of the Order. Like the rubrics of the church, which indicate when the priest and congregation shall kneel and when they shall stand, it refers to questions such as these: What words shall be used in such a placo, and what ceremony shall be used on such an occasion? It belongs entirely to the inner organization of the Institution, or to the manner in which its services shall be conducted, and is interesting or important only to its own members. The language of its ritual or the form of its ceremonies has nothing more to do with the philosophic designs of Freemasonry, than the rubrics of a church have to do with the religious creed professed by that church. It might at any time be changed in its most material points, without in the slightest degree affecting the external character of the Institution.

Of course, this ritualistic element is in one sense important to the members of the Society, because by a due observance of the ritual, a general uniformity is preserved, But beyond this, the Masonic ritual makes no claim to the consideration of scholars, and never has been made, and indeed, from the very nature of its secret character, never can be made a topic of discussion with those who are outside of the Fraternity.

But the other, the philosophic element of Freemasonry, is one of much importance. For it, and through it, I do make the plea that the Institution is entitled to the respect, and even veneration of all good men, and is well worth the careful consideration of scholars.

A great may theories have been advanced by Masonic writers as to the real origin of the Institution, as to the time when, and the place where it first took its birth. It has been traced to the Mysteries of the ancient pagan world, to the Temple of King Solomon, to the Roman colleges of artificers, to the Crusades for the recovery of the Holy Land, to the Guilds of the middle ages, to the Stonemasons of Strasburg and Cologne, and even to the revolutionary struggle in England in the time of the commonwealth, and to the secret efforts of the adherents of the house of Stuart to recover the throne. But whatever theory may be selected, and wheresoever and whensoever it may be supposed to have received its birth, one thing is certain, namely, that for generations past, and yet within the records of history, it has, unlike other mundane things, presented to the world an unchanged organization. Take, for instance, the theory which traces it back to one of the most recent periods, that, namely, which places the organization of the Order of Freemasons at the building of the Cathadral of Strasburg, in the year 1275. During all the time that has since elapsed, full six hundred years, how has Freemasonry presented itself? Why, as a brotherhood organized and controlled by a secret discipline, engaged in important architectural labors and combining with its operative tasks, speculations of great religious import. If we see any change it is simply this, that when the necessity no longer existed, the operative element was laid aside, and the speculative only was retained, but with a scrupulous preservation (as if it were for purposes of identification) of the technical language, the rules and regulations, the working tools and the discipline of the operative art. The material only on which they wrought was changed. The disciples and followers of Erwin of Steinbach, the Master Builder of Strasburg, were engaged, under the influence of a profoundly religious sentiment, in the construction of a material edifice to the glory of God. The more modern workers in Freemasonry are under the same religious influence, engaged in the construction of a spiritual temple. Does not this long continuance of a brotherhood employed in the same pursuit, or changing it only from a material to a spiritual character, but retaining its identity of organization, demand for itself some respect, and, if for nothing else, at least for its antiquity, some share of veneration?

But this is not all. This society, or brotherhood, or confraternity, as it might more appropriately be called, is distinguished from all other associations by the possession of certain symbols, myths, and above all else a Golden Legend, all of which are directed to the purification of the heart, to the elevation of the mind, to the development of the great doctrine of immortality. Did the Masons of Strasburg and Cologne invent these symbols, these myths and this legend? Certainly not, for they are found in similar organizations that existed ages previously. The Greeks at Eleusis taught the same dogma of immortal life in the same symbolic mode, and their legend, if it differed from the Masonic in its accidents, was precisely identical in its substance. For Hiram there was Dionysus, for the acacia the myrtle, but there were the same mourning, the same discovery, the same rejoicing, because what had been lost was found, and the same ineffable light and the same sacred teaching of the name of God and the soul's immortality. And so an ancient orator, who had passed through one of these old Greek lodges, for such without much violence of language they may well be called, declared that hose who have endured the initiation into the mysteries entertain better hopes both of the end of life and of the eternal future. Is not this the very object and design of the legend of the Master's Degree? And this same peculiar form of symbolic initiation is to be found among the old Egyptians and in the Island of Samothracia, thousands of years before the light of Christianity dawned upon the world to give the seal of its Master and Founder to the divine truth of the resurrection.

This will not, it is true, prove the descent of Freemasonry as now organized from the religious mysteries of antiquity, although this is one of the theories of its origin entertained and defended by scholars of no mean pretension. But it will prove an identity of design in the moral and intellectual organization of all these institutions, and it will give the Masonic student subjects for profound study when he asks the interesting questions: Whence came these symbols, myths, and legends? Who invented them? How and why have they been preserved? Looking back into the remotest days of recorded history, we find a priesthood in an island of Greece and another on the banks of the Nile, teaching the existence in a future life by symbols and legends, which convey the lesson in a peculiar mode. And now, after thousands of years have elapsed, we find the same symbolic and legendary method of instruction, for the same purpose, preserved in the depository of what is comparatively a modern institution. And between these two extremes of the long past and the present now, we find the intervening period occupied by similar associations, succeeding each other from time to time, and spreading over different countries, but all engaged in the same symbolic instruction, with substantially the same symbols and the same mythical history.

Does not all this present a problem in moral and intellectual philosophy, and in the archæology of ethics which is well worthy of an attempted solution? How unutterably puerile seem the objections and the objurgations of a few contracted minds, guided only by prejudice, when we consider the vast questions of deep interest that are connected with Freemasonry as a part of those great brotherhoods that have filled the world for so many ages, so far back indeed that some philosophic historians have supposed that they must have derived their knowledge of the doctrines which they taught in their mystic assemblies from direct revelation through an ancient priesthood that gives no other evidence of its former existence, but the results which it produced.

Man needs something more than the gratification of his animal wants. The mind requires food as well as the body, and nothing can better give that mental nutriment than the investigation of subjects which relate to the progress of the intellect and the growth of the religious sentiment.

Again, man was not made for himself alone. The old Stoic lived only for and within himself. But modern philosophy and modern religion teach no such selfish doctrine. Man is but part of the great brotherhood of man, and each one must be ready to exclaim with the old poet, "homo sum; humani nihil a me alienum puto"—I am a man, and I deem nothing relating to mankind to be foreign to my feelings. Men study ancient history simply that they may learn what their brother-men have done in former times, and they read the philosophers and poets of Greece and Rome that they may know what were the speculations of those old thinkers, and they strive to measure the intellect of man as it was then and as it is now, because the study of the growth of intellectual philosophy and the investigation of the mental and moral powers come home to us all as subjects of common interest.

And this, then, is the plea that I enter for Freemasonry; that its history is closely connected with the history of intellectual and religious progress from the remotest times, and that it therefore presents historical and philosophical problems for investigation which no scholar can treat with contempt, which every scholar should treat with profound consideration.

My Visit to a Prussian Lodge.

"On my recent visit to * * * I visited the Lodge. It was a New Year's Eve, and the meeting bore quite a holiday character; no ordinary business having been transacted, I did not witness a ceremony. I should have liked to have been present at an initiation, passing, or raising, in order to compare the Ritual of our Prussian Brethren with our own, and to give you a picture of the former. As it is, I can only note what struck me at the time as slightly or materially different. As, however, my visit was a very hurried one, and I had little or no opportunity of gathering further information about the Ritual of the lodges in Northern Prussia, I am almost entirely thrown on my resources, and it is therefore possible that I may not be quite correct in every particular; should such be the case, and any of the brethren be able to correct me, I shall feel greatly obliged.

"The lodge occupies a neat building, three stories high, which contains, besides noble lodge-rooms, ante-rooms, &c., a fine banqueting-hall, ball-room, and several smaller apartments, adapted as reading and card-rooms, &c. This is the case in most of the Continental lodges, the Craft apparently doing much more for the social enjoyment and recreation of its members than is the case in this country.

"I had no trouble whatever in gaining admission to the lodge, as a brother of mine, a member of the lodge, vouched for me. I was introduced to the W. M., and the Orator, and at once admitted.

"As I said before, on the day in question there was no ordinary buisness transacted. New Year's Eve being kept, I believe throughout Germany, as a holiday, the brethren assembled in a special holiday lodge. The lodge-room would accommodate about two hundred. The W. M., (Ehrwurdiger Meister) sits on a little dais in the East, on his left hand the chair of the immediate Past Master, and on his right that for any distinguished brother present, either visitor or member of the lodge.

"The two Wardens sit opposite the W. M., in the West, the Junior Warden (Zweiter Aufseher) directly opposite, and the Senior Warden (Erster Aufseher) a little to his right. Opposite the Senior Warden, about half-way between him and the platform in the East, stands the reading-desk, at which the obligations are taken, and whence the Orator (Redner) or any other brother is wont to read papers, delivers lectures.

"The members of the lodge and visitors occupy the two sides of the lodge-room between the W. M. and the Wardens; all the Master Masons on the left, and the Apprentices and Fellow-Craft on the right of the W. M.

The two Decons sit, the one about half-way down on the right amongst the Master Masons, the other opposite him amongst the Fellow-Craft and Apprentices.

All the brethren wear white leather aprons, as in this country, adorned in accordance with their rank, and in addition, a five-pointed star on the left breast; throughout the ceremony they keep their hats on, as a sign of equality.

The brethren having placed themselves in their seats, the W. M. opened the lodge in due form in the first degree, the Ritual being read from printed books by him and the two Wardens, and as soon as the lodge was declared open, a large tracing board, belonging to the first degree, was spread on the floor in the center. The W. M. then called upon the Orator for a promised paper, which was read from the reading-desk in a very able manner. It treated of the influence of Masonry on its members in general, and on the German brethren in particular; after which the W. M. himself addressed the lodge in a very eloquent speech, reviewing the past year with all its good and bad occurrences, and sitting forth the great blessings it must be to a man to be able to look back upon a year and to find that he has, while it lasted, done his duty to himself and his fellow-creatures; and furthermore that good and true Freemasons, before all other members of the community, ought to stand the best chance of attaining to so noble and desirable a position. The whole address was a very feeling one, and made the hour very solemn to me; and I have no doubt, to all the brethren, whose profound stillness seemed to indicate as much.

"This address concluded the business of the day, and after the usual questions, if any brother had anything to propose, the minutes of that day's proceedings were read by the Secretary, and there and then confirmed. The lodge was then closed in due form, after which all the brethren, forming the Masonic Chain, sang the parting song, which is the same throughout the year, and is sung after every meeting.

"At the door stood the poor box, to which, I think, every brother contributed a trifle.

"The brethren then separated without further ceremony, many of them returing in the evening, with their friends and familes, to a grand ball.

"The Prussian lodges do not advance their brethren as quickly as the lodges in England, a brother has to be an Apprentice (Lehrling) for one year before he can be passed to the second degree, and must remain a Fellow-Craft (Geselle) for two years before he can be raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason; and all that time—three full years—the Brother has no voice in the lodge, but is simply there to learn. This system may seem rather hard, and I think myself should at least be somewhat modified; at the same time we cannot but acknowledge that the German lodges teach their members something, and improve, or at least endeavor to improve the minds of the brethren by lectures, addresses, &c., as I have endeavored to describe to you; there can be no doubt but that this is one of the principal objects of Masonry, and which is, I fear, too much neglected with us. The routine working of a lodge, initiations, passings, and raisings—beautiful as the ceremonies are—weary a man who has to go through them year after year, without having, occasionally at least, the opportunity of hearing, and profiting by good, sound addresses, discussions, or other means by which the mind may be improved. What is Freemasonry but a society of men whose object is to make themselves and their fellows better men? This, however, cannot be effected by Ritual alone; other and stronger means must be applied, and I hope and trust that this our good Kingston Lodge does not lack brethren sufficiently able to come forward and contribute towards this great end; by such means, the true principles of Freemasonry will show themselves to its members and benefit the Craft. As it is, many of our brethren at large, I am afraid, hardly know or understand the full and glorious objects of our Order.

" It may seem strange to you that I, so young a Mason, should make bold to come forward with these views, but the German system, as I happened to witness—and I say this without the least prejudice—has made so deep an impression on me, that I could not abstain from these few remarks.—London Freemasons' Magazine.

Hon. and R. W. Newton Bateman, LL. D., Superintendent of Public Instruction, has been appointed D. D. Grand Master for the counties of Sangamon, Morgan, Cass and Menard. None could be more acceptable.

THE number of TROWELS printed this month will be much larger than our subscription list. The surplus is for the purpose of supplying subscribers whose names are sent us after the paper is printed. Until the end of next March, we will commence all subscriptions we receive with the January number, unless the supply becomes sooner exhausted, or we are otherwise directed. Old subscriptions renewed will be credited from the time last paid to.

Masonic Installation.

On yesterday evening a public installation of the officers elect of Palestine Lodge No. 79, A., F. and M., took place at their lodge-room. The following are the officers installed for the ensuing year: Edgar Nash, W. M.; Walter Van Brunt, S. W.; Albert S. Chase, J. W.; Herman Oswald, Treas.; Albert N. Seip, Sec.; E. M. Bloomer, S. D.; Jas. A. Olds, J. D.; J. L. Dumont, S. S.; Geo. Berkleman, J. S.; W. S. Brison, Tyler.

The installation ceremonies were conducted by P. G. M. James S. Campbell.

The lodge-room was well filled with visitors, including some forty ladies, who took a deep interest in the impressive ceremonies. We cannot speak in too high praise of the splendid music, vocal and instrumental, with which the ceremonies were interspersed. The quartette was composed of Frank Ely, R. S. Munger, W. G. Sherwood and Frank, McWhorter, Mr. Ely playing the accompaniment on the organ.

Col. J. J. Hull delivered a very interesting address at the close of the ceremonies, and was followed by E. Nash, the W. M. elect, after which, social greetings were exchanged, and the assembly dispersed, highly gratified with this, the first public installation ceremonies of Palestine Lodge No. 79, A. F. and A. M.

We would just add that this lodge was organized something less than a year ago; that it has about fifty members and a commodious and handsomely furnished hall, and is, we are glad to say, in very prosperous condition.

Miscellaneous Reading.

Japanese Nursery Tales.

Human nature seems to be very nearly the same all over the earth, and no race has any characteristics for which counterparts cannot be found in every other race. The Japanese, as rude and unpoetical as they seem to be, have their fairies, Genii, Peris, and Imps, answering to those of which European juveniles tell such wonderful tales. Some of these stories are very ingenious, and would bear copying into the fairy lore of America, while others would be far from acceptable, owing to the great differences in customs and religion. I do not know that the subjoined tales, which were told by a Japanese nurse to the European children at Hiogo, some of whom were under her charge, are really a part of Japanese folk lore, or made up for the present amusement of the children. But in either case the children were pleased, and when they related some of the stories to me, they were very enthusiastic in the praise of the old Japanese grandmother who had thus entertained them.

THE LITTLE BOY WHO PULLED A TURNIP.

Once there was a little Japanese boy dressed in a nice suit of black linen, and he said to himself one day, "I will be a great Daimio. I will have big swords and fine dress, and my mother and father shall be happy with plenty of rice and jewel rings." But the little boy was poor, and all he had was the one suit of clothes. He was walking on the side of Fusiyama one day, thinking how he should be great, when the mountain shook, and great smoke-devils came out of the top. The boy was afraid, until a little fairy, awakened by the noise, rose up at his feet, and taking him by the hand, led him away from the mountain. When the little spirit was about to leave, the boy said, "You know how to save me from smoke-devils, and you must know how to make me a great Daimio. Will you tell me?" "Go and pull a turnip," said the fairy spirit as she took her way back to the sacred mountain. So the little boy looked about him for a garden, and when he had found one he searched for a turnip. He soon found a great one with tall leaves, and he set about digging around the roots. "No, no!" said the turnip, "my root is deep, and you can not dig so low, but take hold of my head and pull, for my root will follow where my head goes." So he seized hold of the stalk and pulled. "Ho! ho!" laughed the turnip, "you have something to learn if you would be a great Daimio. Men, like turnips, pull easiest by the head, but you had better leave them where they have taken root that to overturn yourself in pulling them up." And the little boy took the advice, and made the acquaintance of leaders only. He was never, however, over-anxious to be in the company of great men, and so the Tycoon, seeing his great care and wisdom, made him a prince. So he was happy.

THE GIRL THAT DID NOT OBEY.

Once a little girl was told by her mother to make rice cakes. But the little girl wanted to play shuttle-cock and left the dough in the bowl. A little imp in the shape of a frog came, and when the little girl was about to hit the cork a blow, he threw the dough into the air. It fell upon the girl's head and streamed down over her shoulders until she was entirely covered. Her mother came, and supposing it was all dough, threw her into the oven, and so the naughty little girl was baked.

THE INDUSTRIOUS MAN.

One man worked in his rice and wheat fields, while his neighbors spent their time in wrestling, drinking sacky and playing ball. Finally winter came, and they had no food. So they went to the industrious man and said, "Give us rice and bread." But the other said, "No; you serve the spirit of amusement, I serve the spirit of work. Go to your spirit for food, and I will go to mine." So they all starved.

THE LONIN.

A poor Lonin lay by the roadside all alone one dark night, and the wind came and talked to him, telling him to die and be happy. But this poor weak Lonin said, "No! Buddah has something for me to do. I do not feel that I should die easy." So he got up in the morning and traveled towards the great temple of Isjey. He soon met a great monster with a nose six feet long and a tail like a horse. When poor Lonin saw the monster he was afraid. But the monster said to Lonin, "I shall not hurt you because you are not worth eating. But I advise you to warn others on your way, for I shall soon come along the same road over which you go." Then Lonin said to himself, "This is what Buddah has for me to do." So he went on until he saw two women in a house spooling and reeling cotton for nice clothes. Lonin said, "If you weave them in pride the monster will swallow you, clothes and all." But they were so intent upon their nice gowns that they heeded not Lonin. Soon he saw a boy climbing an orange tree and stealing fruit. "The monster will devour you, boy," said Lonin, "if your belly is sweet with that fruit." But the boy laughed at the beggar, and stuffed himself with oranges. Next Lonin met a peddler with jewelry and porcelain ware. "Do you sell true?" asked Lonin. "I get all I can," said the peddler, grinning. "Beware," said Lonin "a monster comes this way, and if you are too rich he will eat you." Next Lonin met a boy at study, and so intent was he upon his books that Lonin passed unnoticed. "Ah," said Lonin, "monsters don't feed on reading; they like fat, not thought." Soon after, he met a priest who sneered at Lonin for his poverty, and a Daimio who made Lonin smart under a cut of his whip. Poor Lonin prayed his vows to the god in Isjey—and while he was burning tapers the monster went roaring by. Then Lonin arose and retraced his steps to see what the monster had done. Lo, the cruel Daimio, the proud priest, the peddler, the boy who was stealing oranges, and the two vain women had been devoured, but the little boy at his books was peacefully reading as before.

Many other longer tales, having morals, and many that have not, are told to the children, which compare favorably with the best of German stories with regard to instruction or amusement.

Charles Lamb.

BY AMELIA E. DALEY.

One morning, in the year 1792, a young clerk took his place in the office of the East India Company, in London, and there, day after day, for thirty-three years, he might have been seen at his post. He was a timd thoughtful man, rendered more timid by incurable stuttering. This clerk was Charles Lamb. He was seventeen years old when he took his place in the East India Company's office. When he was tweenty-one, he began a life of cheerful, loving, self-sacrifice. His sister Mary had become insane, and one day had snatched a knife from the dinner table, and had given her mother a blow with it, which killed her. After his father's death, Charles took his poor sister from the asylum in which she had been placed, made a home for her, and devoted his life to her comfort. She recovered her reason, but she was insane several times again during her life. Charles watched over her with the tenderest care.

He gave his leisure moments to writing. He wrote some essays, and signed them with the name of "Elia." They are called the "Elia Essays," and are admired by all who love whatever is simple and truthful in men and in books. His name stands first among those of English humorists.

With a sister mournfully afflicted, with a small salary, with a life of drudgery, Charles Lamb bore a gentle, cheerful heart. His wit made him famous. He was a Londoner, and he loved the streets of London, as other men love the forest and mountain. He studied the men and women that thronged those crowded streets, and found in the mmaterial of beautiful thought, and gave to them warm and gentle sympathies. His kindly heart won for him many warm friends.

No one who saw that silent clerk, patiently doing his monotonous work would have thought that he was one of England's men of genius. No one who met him taking his daily walk in the streets of London would have thought that under his worn coat beat one of England's most noble hearts—a heart full of the glory of self-sacrifice.

When Charles Lamb was fifty years old, he received a pension which enabled him to leave the office where he had spent so many years. He could make his sister happier now by his constant presence. When he went home "forever," as he said, he wrote to a friend that it was "like passing from life to eternity."—Bright Side.

The Nail.

A Tradesman had once transacted a good day's business at a fair, disposed of all his goods, and filled his purse with gold and silver. He prepared afterwards to return, in order to reach home before the evening. So he strapped his portmanteau, with the money in it, upon his horse's back, and rode off. At noon he baited in a small town, and as he was about to set out again, the stable-boy, who brought his horse, said to him, "Sir, a nail is wanting in the shoe on the left hind-foot of your animal."

"Let it be wanting," replied the Tradesman; "I am in a hurry, and the iron will doubtless hold the six hours I have yet to travel."

Late in the afternoon, he had to dismount again, and feed his horse, and at this place also, the boy came and told him that a nail was wanting in one of the shoes, and asked him whether he should take the horse to a farrier. "No, no, let it be!" replied the master; "it will last out the couple of hours that I have now to travel; I am in haste." So saying he rode off; but his horse soon began to limp, and from limping it came to stumbling, and presently the beast fell down and broke its leg. Thereupon, the tradesman had to leave his horse lying on the road, to unbuckle the portmanteau, and to walk home with it upon his shoulder, where he arrived at last, late at night."

"And all this misfortune," said he to himself, "is owing to the want of a nail. More haste the less speed!"

Hints to Night-Watchers.—A person who is sick enough to need night-watchers needs rest, and quiet, and all the undisturbed repose he can get. If one or more persons are in the room reading, talking, or whispering, as is often the case, this is impossible. There should be no light burning in the room unless it be a very dim one, so placed as to be out of sight of the patient. Kerosene oil should never be used in the sick room. The attendants should quietly sit or lie in the same room, or, what is usually better, in an adjoining room, so as to be within call if any thing is wanted. In extreme cases, the attendant can frequently step quietly to the bedside to see if the patient is doing well, but all noise and light should be carefully excluded. It is a common practice to waken patients occasionally for fear they will sleep too soundly. This should never be done. Sleep is one of the greatest needs of the sick, and there is no danger of their getting too much of it. All evacuations should be removed at once, and the air in the room kept pure and sweet by thorough ventilation.—Herald of Health.

Notifying The People.

In connection with the Storm Signal Service, which has just gone into operation in this and other cities, the War Department has issued the following order: at each city, country seat, and principal town a cannon is to be kept ready by the officials at the Court House or by a fire company, and, as soon as the news is received of a coming storm it is to be fired three times, at intervals of one minute if a tornado, thunder or hail storm, terrific gale or any destructive storm is approaching; at intervals of three minutes if an ordinary rain storm is approaching rapidly; at intervals of six minutes if an ordinary rain storm is approaching slowly; and at intervals of ten minutes if a destructive river flood is approaching. In case of very destructive storms or floods the signals may be repeated, after a suitable interval, to give additional warning. At large cities, when a destructive storm is approaching, fire and church bells may also be rung and steam whistles be blown three times, at the same intervals as the guns, to increase the warning.—Journal of Commerce.

Daisy Sweet.

BY WM. ROUNSEVILLE.

All day long the little feet,
Pattered o'er the carpet neat—
All day long the little hands,
Tugged at mamma's apron bands:
  Little hands and little feet,
  All belonged to Daisy sweet!

All day long a little voice,
Mamma's ear had dinned with noise—
All day long a joyous cry,
Alternated sob and sigh:
  Sob, and sigh, and cry, and noise,
  All were Daisy's little voice.

Now are stilled the little feet—
Patter none o'er carpet neat—
Never more the little hands
Tug at mamma's apron bands:
  Little hands and little feet,
  Rest for aye with Daisy sweet.

Ever stilled that little voice—
Dins no more mamma with noise,
Never more the sob and sigh
Alternate the joyous cry:
  Sob, and sigh, and voice are still—
  Daisy sleeps beside the rill.

Treat a Horse Kindly.

Let anyone who ever struck a faithful horse in anger, read this true story, and be ashamed of himself:

Some years ago a party of surveyors had just finished their day's labor, in the northern part of Illinois, when a violent snow storm came on. They started for their camp, which was in a grove of about eighty acres, in a large prairie, nearly twenty miles from any other timber.

The wind was blowing hard, and the snow drifted so as to nearly blind them. When they thought they had nearly reached their camp, they all at once came upon tracks in the snow. These they looked at with care, and found to their dismay that they were their own tracks.

It was now evident that they were lost on the great prairie, and that if they had to pass the night there in the cold and snow, the chance was that not one of them would be alive in the morning.

While they were shivering with fear and cold, the chief man of the party caught sight of one of their horses, a gray pony, known as "Old Jake."

"If any one can show us our way to camp out of this blinding snow," said the chief, "Old Jake can do it. I will take off his bridle and let him loose, and we can follow him. I think he will show us the way to camp."

The horse, as soon as he found himself free threw his head and tail in the air, as if proud of the trust that had been put in him. Then he snuffed the breeze and gave a loud snort, which seemed to say:

"Come on, boys! follow me! I'll lead you out of this scrape!"

He then turned in a new direction and trotted along, but not so fast that the men could not follow him. They had not gone more than a mile when they saw the cheerful blaze of their camp fires, and gave a loud huzza at the sight.

If a horse is not always reasonable, he is generally right.

Bad Members.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

"You have bad members in your lodge!" Yes, truly!
Many, perhaps, who are not greatly better
Than those the churches have dimitted duly,
And passed them to another church by letter.

We never saw organization human
That was composed entire of spotless members,
Whether all men, or mixed, or only women,
Evil has burned enough to leave its embers.

The sacred office of the Gospel preacher
Is oft dishonored by apostles evil;
Apostles chosen by the perfect Teacher,
As He declared, among them had a devil.

The church has wicked members—deacons,
In guise of honesty, the flock have cheated—
The very men who ought to stand as beacons
Of truth and love, the work of grace defeated.

We have bad members—would that they were fewer;
But church, priest and apostle are no better!
Make your objection, friend, a trifle newer,
And we will be forevermore your debtor.

If man is better when he is a Mason,
The world gains something by Masonic action,
And while the day of peace and good we hasten,
To carp and grumble is but sheer detraction.

The Lodge-Room.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

As most of our articles written for this paper have partaken rather extensively of a practical character, perhaps we cannot do better than still to follow up that lead and say something about lodge-rooms. It is unnecessary to say that this is an important question—what kind of a room shall be had for the meeting of the lodge, and yet many good Masons scarcely even think of it.

A lodge-room should be safe from intrusion, and so situated as that there can be no danger of being overheard when at work. The place should be such that there need be no care taken lest cowans should listen and hear the pronunciation of our mysteries. There should be no necessity that the voice be lowered below the natural key. But this is so obviously correct that it needs nothing further than a statement of the fact.

The lodge-room should be pleasant and comfortable. It is folly to suppose that under ordinary circumstances men will assemble together night after night and become attached to an institution which not only fails to make its meetings pleasurable and enjoyable, but which absolutely puts its members upon the rack while it demands their presence, by providing uncomfortable seats, in a room cold in winter and hot and ill-ventilated in summer. There are few who will long be regular attendants when these are the conditions. The seats ought to be easy and comfortable, the room of the right temperature and pure air secured by proper ventilation.

But a lodge-room ought to be more than comfortable; it should be pleasant and inviting. It is true that not many lodges can afford to make a display of architectural beauty, or can consult their wishes as to decorations. But there is no necessity of having a room so utterly at variance with architectural proportion as to be offensive to good taste or so decorated as to be disgusting. Neatness can be attained anywhere, and it should be remembered that beauty and simplicity are often seen together, and nowhere may they more appropriately appear thus than in the lodge-room.

"Cleanliness is next to godliness." This is as true of the lodge as it is of the church or any other body of people. A lodge-room kept scrupulously clean, is a constant reminder to the members of the virtue of cleanliness and a perpetual monition to them to practise it. It can not be wondered at that our lodges get careless and indifferent, both as to attendance and appearance, when half of the rooms they occupy are better fitted for stables than dwelling-places for sentient beings. They will inevitably become disgusted and absent themselves from the lodge-room when there is anything about the lodge-room that is contrary to the demands of cleanliness. A Mason does not like to attend lodge where he soils his garments by sitting on undusted chairs and blackens his hands whenever they come in contact with any article of furniture, where he has to breath an atmosphere surcharged with dust. And yet many of our lodge-rooms are more disgustingly filthy than we have imagined. What wonder is it that cleanly people stay away from the meetings and become careless of their obligations to Masonry.

And ventilation is equally disregarded. How often do we enter a lodge-room where we are over-powered by the odor of a vault for the dead, or the perfume of rotten straw that haunts our nostrils for hours after we are freed from immediate contact. It is frequently necessary for the windows to be closed during work, because all rooms are not so situated as to be safe when open. But none rightly constructed but what could be thoroughly aired and ventilated in the afternoon before the communication is held. And yet how few lodge-rooms have this precaution taken. The consequence is that the mind, instead of being clear and active, is depressed and dull, and members ought to be thankful if the seeds of permanent and serious disease are not planted in their systems. Many lodge-rooms are so much worse ventilated than our dwellings that we always feel the deleterious effects of breathing the confined air when we enter them, and it is only the fact that the time spent in them is at long intervals, and short in duration, that prevents the contraction of fatal disease.

The heating of lodge-rooms is also neglected. The fire is usually kindled but a few moments before the hour set for the meeting and when the members arrive there is not a comfortable spot in the room except the changing circle about the stove where the powers of heat and cold contend for the mastery. Even then members are reduced to the alternative of roasting or freezing, and are sometimes exposed to the dangers of both at the same time. How much better would it be for "the good of Masonry in general" and that lodge in particular if the room could be thoroughly warmed during the afternoon, so that every part of it would be comfortable when the brethren assembled. There are many whose physical health will not allow them to attend under such circumstances. There are more who will not consent to brave the discomforts of a room so kept for the purpose of attending the lodge.

Lodges are prone to prepare a lodge-room larger than is necessary. In fact there seems to be a strife in some quarters to get the largest possible. What does a lodge with fifty need of a lodge-room of fifty by seventy feet? What better for the purposes of Masons is one of that size than one thirty by forty? The latter is large enough to afford space enough to do all the work of the lodge without inconvenience and comfortably seat all the brethren who will attend. What more is necessary? On occasion of festivals the room might be more convenient if larger, but a lodge does not want to build for uncommon occasions and ought not to do so. Common occasions—the regular meetings of the lodge—occur much more frequently than the uncommon ones—the festivals of the Fraternity, and hence it is for the former and not for the latter that we should provide. Aside from the cost of building—which ought to be taken into the account—the small lodge-room can be furnished and operated at a much less expense than a large one, while at the same time it is more cheerful and comfortable.

To sum up the matter a medium-sized, well-built, well-furnished well-ventilated, cheerful and comfortable lodge-room is what our common lodges need and require. We believe there is too little attention paid to this subject, to the great detriment of Masonry. Therefore have we written.

Saved by Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

In the second year of the great gold fever on the Pacific coast, the emigration to California was at its height. Some adventurous spirits, who had braved the dangers of the mountain passage, had been heard from by their waiting friends on this side of the globe, and that they had amassed gold in fabulous quantities was circulated all over the land. The consequence was that thousands, believed until that time to be sane, became crazed and determined to forsake all and follow the migrating crowd to the fairy land where fortunes could be made in a day and none but the indolent could miss of becoming as rich as Crœsus, or as the more modern Astor. Every mode of conveyance that the ingenuity of the Anglo-Saxon race could invent was put in requisition to bear the pilgrims to the land of promise. Oxen, horses, mules, cows and even wheelbarrows bore the baggage of the adventurers—for it is related that one persevering fellow put his provender in a wheelbarrow and actually made the passage of plain and mountain pass successfully.

Cows were yoked to the wagons under the conviction that their lacteal furnishments might be turned to advantage, and in several cases it was found that the wise forethought saved the lives of the persons forming the "cow brigade." Oxen stood the journey well as long as forage and water could be procured. Horses managed generally to keep up with these slow-paced animals, but often left their carcasses by the wayside; while mules very frequently succumbed to the lack of feed and drink.

A company was formed in St. Louis which contracted to deliver persons on the other side of the mountains for a specified sum, finding teams, carriages and baggage wagons, so that the pilgrims were to be transported and boarded until their arrival in California. Among those who availed themselves of this method of crossing the plains, was a gentleman who resided in one of the northern counties of Illinois, named Enoch Seeley, a member of the Masonic lodge of the village in which he resided, and a Mason in deed, as well as by profession. He was in easy circumstances, with means sufficient to allow him to choose the "express hire," as the means of reaching the Golden State.

It should be remembered that the passage across the plains at the period of which we write, consumed as many months as it now requires days. The railway has bridged over the distance, annihilated space and compressed the journey of half a year into a single week. But it was expected that the "express," organized and conducted by men who had traveled the route and who were able to lead by the most practicable path, would make the trip in much less than the time usually consumed by the private caravans. As soon as the grass had sprung up sufficiently to give sustenance to the animals of the train, they started across the wilderness of plains and mountains. Sometimes forward, and sometimes in the rear of the private teams that left at the same time with it, the "express" blundered on, and soon the passengers by that train were rejoiced if they were not left behind in the day's journey.

It became manifest, at an early stage of the passage, that their guides were ignorant of the best roads to travel. In fact they disagreed among themselves and finally quarreled and separated. The animals began to fail as they approached the "saleratus region" and several died. Provisions fell short and it become necessary to reduce the size and number of daily rations. Men deserted and the train was weakened so much that it became a matter of safety to travel in company with others not so pretentious.

At last the climax was reached. The mules were unable to draw the passengers and they were forced to continue the journey on foot. The baggage animals failed and the provisions were packed upon the best and stoutest of them, and the journey continued. But even these failed. The last mule gave out under a load of less than fifty pounds and the provisions had then to be transported upon the backs of the men, each taking his own share. In this way they proceeded about a hundred miles; then provisions failed. The passengers had gone every one for himself, and were now straggling along under shelter of other caravans. Scarcely two of them together, so disintegrating and demoralizing is the effect of suffering.

It was on Saturday eve. Mr. Seeley had that day consumed the last mouthful of his provisions and still his hunger was unsatisfied. He lay down and slept on the ground near the watch-fire of a stranger emigrant, of whom he had begged for a morsel of bread, and had been refused, on the plea that he had not enough to take him and his family through the wilderness to a place where their stores could be replenished. Cold and chilled by the dews of night, faint with the ravages of hunger, he slept little and rested still less. With early dawn he arose and again besought his neighbor to give him wherewith to soothe the pangs of hunger, but in vain. Weak and discouraged, almost convinced that it was useless to struggle against fate, and in imagination picturing to himself the sad scene at the homestead, where wife and children should look for the husband and father who was never to come, he re-commenced his toilsome yet bootless journey. Slowly he progressed, but others traveled equally slow, and though every man was for himself, yet he was seldom without company. Of every one he asked for bread, but none had more than a mite for himself.

Once a snake was caught and hastily cooked and devoured. This gave him strength to pursue his journey until nightfall, which came upon him in a mountain gorge. Under a bush that threw its protecting boughs above him, he laid him down, uncertain whether he should ever rise again. He had laid there but a short time, when his neighbor of the previous night came up with his tired teams and disheartened family. It occurred to him that he would try him once more, to see if he could not prevail upon him to give him sufficient at least to keep him from starving. He approached and preferred his suit:

"Give me a morsel of food, for I am starving. Have your own price for it. I have money, and whatever you ask I will pay; but give me, for the love of heaven, a morsel to preserve my life."

"God knows how willingly I would give you, but if I give to your necessities I may see, ere many days, my own family starve to death before my eyes," said the emigrant.

"But a single mouthful!"

"That may save the life of my child!"

The starving man came still nearer to the emigrant and seizing him by the hand exclaimed:

"Then for the obligations of a great Brotherhood—the love of a common Fraternity, give me bread!"

"What! A Mason? Why told you not this before? Eat, my brother!" and as he said this he placed in his hands the desired food.

"The obligation to assist a brother in distress is sacred. Henceforth you shall live with us and fare as we do. The God who replenishes the widow's cruse of oil will not suffer those who assist the starving to come to harm through their charities."

The starving man was saved, and it will be a pleasure to the reader to know that all arrived in California safely. They were overtaken by a more fortunate train from which they procured a store of provisions that sufficed them to their journey's end. The name of the Mason who thus responded to his obligation has escaped our memory, or we would put it upon record, but often have we heard the man who was ready to perish when Masonry brought him aid, declare that he should have died in the wilderness had he not been saved by the fraternal obligation.

The Symbol of the Ark.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW, 32°.

How merciful is the mystic signification of that sacred instrument for the reception of which both the tabernacle and the temple were reared!

It was a visible representation of the throne of JEHOVAH, the King of Israel, whose royal palace was the temple. The law in the midst of the ark on which He sat signified the equity of His government, or the justice and judgment which are the habitation of His throne. The cherubims at both ends of the mercy-seat were doubtless emblematical figures of the blessed angels that surround His throne and fly swiftly to execute His high commands. The gold of which they were framed may signify the purity of their essence. The number, too, may denote the perfect harmony and mutual love of the immeasurable company of angels. The position of their faces, towards each other, may indicate the same thing. The adoring attitude of their bodies may represent the profound veneration they have for their eternal Sovereign. And their flying posture (for their wings were expanded and touched one another), did surely indicate the expeditious alacrity with which they fulfill the heavenly commission.

It was also a repository for the tables of the law, which were the instrument of that solemn covenant made between God and that peculiar people (an emblem of the covenant of Adam); and hence it was a perpetual pledge of the divine favor and protection to their nation, if they fulfilled their obligations to the King of Heaven, and a witness against them if they should prove unfaithful. The gold and cedar was a fit emblem of the invaluable worth, the spotless purity and the perpetual duration of the inclosed law.

The materials of the ark were cedar and gold. What hinders us, from this, to think upon the constitution of HIS wonderful person, whose humanity is like the cedar—the fruit of the earth, but not subject to corruption—and His divinity, like the gold in the ark, embosoms His human nature, ennobles but is not blended with it?

The uses of the ark were various and important. Here God was enthroned. Here oracles were given; and "here," said God to Moses, "will I meet with thee and commune with thee, from between the cherubims before the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony." And here prayers were presented and offerings accepted. The staves remained always in the ark; perhaps to indicate that no place or nation is absolutely secure against Jehovah's departure from them.

It is long since the Babylonians destroyed this glory of Israel; but we have an ARK whereunto the profane have no right to approach: it shall abide forever in the presence of Jehovah.

Let it be our one and chief desire that all the days of our life we may abide in His house, behold His beauty and inquire in His temple.

Masonry in Public.

BY JOHN W. SIMONS, P. G. M.

As adepts and professors of Freemasonry, we either are or are not ashamed of it. We either believe that the tenets and practices of our Institution are not only proper but laudable or we do not. It seems to us that there can be no half-way station on the road and that we must take our position either at one end or the other of the main line. If the principles and the inculcations of Masonry are correct and good, then we should be willing to expose them to a fair criticism and whenever opportunity occurs give our friends and even our enemies a chance to see for themselves the result of our work. It is not a violent proceeding for us to say that Masonry is worthy the approval and support of all men who desire to add to the world's means of doing good and who wish to incite and encourage their fellows in those pursuits which cause them to love virtue, and we assume, too, that the great majority of Craftsmen hold a similar view, else the Fraternity instead of advancing from one degree of prosperity to another would long since have ceased to exist. But it is none the less true that in a great many minds there is a hesitancy about making the general public or even our own friends and neighbors participators in our knowledge, and thus enabling them to judge of our claims with some recognition of the facts. Why this should be so is not clearly apparent, but it probably arises from the disposition on the part of a great many to confound such of our observances as properly belong to a tyled lodge with the principles of action which never have been and never ought to be subject of the slightest reticence. The making of this distinction, and a disposition to submit our work and the ends we hope to reach to the public appreciation, are the means of distinguishing us from the various secret societies which have existed and do now exist for purposes not to be publicly avowed, and the disposition to confound us with such associations has been the means of retarding our work and hindering our real progress more than any other we can think of. We here remark, in passing, that those of our opponents who bear particularly on this point are not always as innocent as they would fain have the world believe, and use this method of opposition to play at once upon the fears and the prejudices of the people.

Thus, for instance, the Roman Catholic Church condemns us in most unsparing terms as part and parcel of the secret political societies which have had so large a share in the convulsions which, at one time and another, have disturbed the peace of the world, yet every Mason knows that there is not the slightest reference to political matters in our assemblies and, indeed, that the most distant attempt to introduce such a topic would be repressed with the utmost promptitude and certainty. There can, however, be no possible danger; because, while political feeling runs as high and fierce in this country as anywhere else in the world, there is no approach to unanimity, and as our lodges are but the reflex of society in general every Mason instinctively feels that to have his own views respected he must respect those of his neighbors; and hence it is that the same men who, in a public place, would shout themselves hoarse on a political question will sit side by side in the lodge and never dream of referring to it. We incline to the opinion, however, that in this matter the Church in question, as well as some others of the opposite sectarian stripe, is not altogether frank and does not avow the real motive of opposition. Most religious organizations have a dread of free-thinking, as tending to weaken man's faith in their infallibility, and we believe, too, that were it possible a majority of the creed-makers would do just as the Catholic Church has done, declare themselves infallible and give men the choice of accepting their dicta in matters of conscience or going to Hades. Unfortunately for their ambition the world has moved faster than they have and has got beyond the point where any organization will be allowed to take into its own hands the judgments of the Infidels and send men up or down according to the formulas enacted in its rubric.

The world owes Masonry something for this, and it would have been still more deeply indebted had Masons, themselves, rightly understood and exercised the power resident in them—a power which incite men to think, study, reflect and act for themselves.

The more we become accustomed to this sort of thing the less are we subject to the dictation of conscience-keepers and zealots who know no faith but that they follow and have no allowance to make for those who venture to entertain different opinions from themselves.

Such being the case we hold it to be self-evident that the better our principles are understood, the more the general public is allowed to scrutinize and weigh our claims to approbation, the stronger will be our position and the easier the battle we have to wage against those who oppose us anyhow, as well as those whose enmity is based upon real ignorance of our tenets and our hopes. We are therefore in favor now, as we always have been, of improving all reasonable opportunities of bringing the outside world in contact with Masonry; of embracing such occasions to explain our motives and methods of action, and of thus quietly getting the better of prejudices not always well defined which may be set aside by a few timely words and by actual inspection of Masons and Masonic surroundings. The season is now at hand when public gatherings may appropriately be held and when we can impress our families and friends with a favorable disposition toward the Craft of which we are proud to be members. The present month will be given up to the annual elections of officers and the following one can be employed in public installations and such reasonable festivities as belong to such occasions and to the commencement of the New Year. We very respectfully urge upon the lodges at least one public meeting during the winter as a means of making Masons better known and of assuring our families and friends that in obeying its laws and seeking to promote its interests we are really and truly doing a work in which they are interested; that we are opening the hearts of men to more genial and neighborly feelings and preparing the way for that time when all the nations of the earth, forgetting the feuds of ambition, the jealousness of race, nation and condition, shall unite in acknowledging the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.—Tidings.

The Third Degree.

It has been well said that "the natural work of Masonry is practical life," and every degree in the Order illustrates this profound, though not sufficiently appreciated, truth. The ceremonies of the Craft are not merely ceremonies, they are types of higher and grander mysteries and teach with eloquence, unsurpassed by any human code, the duties that man owes to his Creator and to his fellow creatures. Our great moralist, Johnson, has left us an allegory, conceived in the true Masonic spirit, in his recital of the journey of Obidah, the son of Abensina—a comparison of human life to the journey of a day. He tells us that the traveler started "early in the morning and pursued his journey through the plains of Hindostan, with fresh hope," "incited by desire," Obidah "walked swiftly forward." "Thus he went on till the sun approached the meridian and the increasing heat preyed upon his strength," till, tempted by the coolness of a shady grove, he left the beaten track and wasted in objectless wanderings the precious time at his disposal. But darkness soon approached, and the foolish traveler was fain to retrace his steps, while the "winds roared and the torrents tumbled from the hills." Finally, however, he finds a place of shelter and refuge in the cottage of a hermit, by whom he is entertained and to whom he relates the occurrences of his journey. The hermit bids him remember that life itself is but the journey of a day. "We rise in the morning of youth, full of vigor and full of expectation; we set forward with spirit and hope, with gaiety and with diligence and travel on awhile in the straight road of piety towards the mansions of rest." The moralist then dwells upon the deviations of man from the paths of virtue, but extracts the pleasing consolation that "reformation is never hopeless, nor sincere endeavors ever unassisted; that the wanderer may at length return, after all his errors; and that he who implores strength and courage from above, shall find danger and difficulty give way before him."

In like manner the three degrees of Craft Masonry are typical of human life; beginning as neophytes, we gradually unfold the greater mysteries, and the grade of a Master Mason, as we have previously remarked, brings us face to face with the very shadows and darkness of the grave. In all the ancient mysteries the candidates were plunged in profound gloom before their admission to the light and, beyond doubt, the doctrine of the resurrection is plainly symbolized in all those primitive rites. Thus the aspirant was placed within the Pastos, or bed of darkness, where he remained for three days and nights. This, we are told, was the figurative death of the mysteries, or the descent into Hades. When delivered from this confinement the candidates were considered "regenerate," or restored to life. Nor could any man fill the office of priest until he had endured the seclusion and silence of the darkened Pastos. After this probation he was led into the chambers of divine light and permitted to participate in the sacred labors of the initiated. In this way the doctrine that death leads to a higher life was forcibly inculcated. We can but glance at the solemn bearings of this subject upon the third degree. No Master Mason can, however, fail to recognize the sublime and inspiring lessons of the ordeal through which he has passed; nor hesitate to pronounce the finished scheme of Masonry, as revealed in the third degree, perfect in all its parts and honorable to its founders and originators. The legend of Hiram is but the framework of the picture which embodies and preserves the central idea of man's resurrection from the tomb—although every incident of the tradition teaches important lessons and is in keeping with the grandeur of the subject. In the words of the poet, it is "not to the grave" that we "descend to contemplate," "the spirit is not there," but looking beyond the grave we adore the Lord of Life, who can trample the King of Terrors beneath his feet, and raise us to an immortality of peace and glory. By the inculcations of these truths, Freemasonry does not become a religious—or, more correctly speaking, a sectarian—system, although, doubtless, its elevated doctrines coincide with many of the dogmas of revealed religion. But Freemasonry can reach hearts which might otherwise be closed to the reception of wisdom and, by insensible degrees, lead them to respect virtue, love morality and maintain the highest principles of beneficence and charity. Viewing Freemasonry in this aspect, nothing human can surpass it, and the badge of a Mason may truly be regarded as the type of a universal brotherhood. We are far from asserting that all who have entered our sanctum are worthy of the privilege; light is abhorrent to some minds, and concord an abomination to the sons of strife. But this is no argument against the worth and utility of the Masonic Institution; in every system, in every association of men traitors have appeared and we cannot hope to escape the inevitable. The shrine and the altar have alike been desecrated by the ministration of knaves and the mosaic pavement is, unhappily, not free from their unhallowed footsteps. Let us all strive, however, to accomplish in our several stations the true aims of Masonry: the extension of knowledge and the communication of happiness to every deserving object under heaven.—London Freemason.

Grand Lodge of Quebec.

This young and now firmly established Grand Lodge, held its second annual communication at Montreal on the 27th and 28th of September, M. W. John H. Graham, Grand Master, presiding, with the other officers in their places, together with a large number of distinguished visitors, including the representatives of the Grand Lodge of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Texas, Nebraska, Nevada, Kansas, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Mississippi, New York, Nova Scotia, and M. W. Josiah H. Drummond, of Maine; Park Davis, Grand Master, and Everett B. Engleby, Past Grand Master of Vermont; R. W. Bro. F. G. Tisdall, of New York; Ira Berry, Grand Secretary of Maine; W. Brimsmead, Grand Secretary of Vermont; R. W. D. B. Tracy, of Michigan, and others. The visitors were received and seated according to their respective ranks, after which the Grand Master delivered his annual address. It is a very able and interesting paper. We learn from it that the Body has been recognized by twenty-three Grand Lodges "representing nearly half a million of Freemasons."

Dispensations have been issued for three new lodges during the past year, and one additional lodge has been constituted in the city of Montreal.

The Grand Master, in his address, intimates that "fidelity to the principles of Freemasonry, on which our action was based in forming this Grand Body; duty to the numerous Grand Lodges which have already recognized us, and the maintenance of the doctrine of exclusive Grand Lodge jurisdiction will soon, unless averted, demand of us the vindication, at all hazards, of our right and title to undivided supremacy within the Province of Quebec."

He expresses his appreciation of the importance of Masonic periodicals in the following terms:

> "Nor can I forbear expressing my high appreciation of the value to the Craft of the many excellent periodicals now published in almost every portion of the globe, and I beg to suggest to all, and especially to newly made brethren, that next after having become possessors of copies of the constitution of the Grand Lodge and the by-laws of their own private lodge, they should become permanent subscribers to one or more Masonic periodicals, as their means shall allow."

He refers in appropriate and conciliatory terms to the unhappy difficulties still existing between the two Grand Lodges in the Dominion, and briefly discusses the proposition for a settlement submitted by the Grand Lodge of Canada at its last annual communication, in reference to which the committee to whom the address was referred subsequently submitted the following resolutions, which were adopted by the Grand Lodge by a nearly unanimous vote:

"WHEREAS, The Grand Lodge of Quebec has been for the last two years the supreme Masonic authority in and for the Province of Quebec, and has been recognized as such by twenty-three sovereign Masonic bodies; and

"WHEREAS, The Grand Lodge of Canada, in violation of the well-established principles of Grand Lodge supremacy, has persistently and repeatedly invaded and continues to invade the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, therefore be it

"Resolved, That this Grand Lodge re-assert her supremacy as the sovereign Masonic authority in and for the Province of Quebec.

"Resolved, That all the acts of the Grand Lodge of Canada in the formation of lodges and the issuing of duplicate warrants in this Province, since October 20, 1869, were and are hereby declared to be irregular and an infringement of the rights of this Grand Lodge.

"Resolved, That the Grand Secretary be instructed to invite all lodges that were in existence prior to October 20, 1869, in our territory, to affiliate with this Grand Lodge with the same rights and privileges as if they, the said lodges, had assisted in the formation of this Grand Lodge.

"Resolved, That the Grand Master be authorized to proclaim at any time before the next annual communication of this Grand Lodge, as may seem best to him, non-intercourse with any lodge or pretended lodge in this jurisdiction that persistently refuses to recognize the supremacy of this Grand Lodge.

"Resolved, That to all lodges irregularly formed since October 20, 1869, this Grand Lodge is disposed to extend all the clemency that is consistent with the maintenance of the integrity of this Grand Lodge and constitution of the Order, even to the issuing of new warrants and healing of work already done; Provided always, that the rights of lodges already recognized by this Grand Lodge be not in any way infringed.

"Resolved, That the Grand Master be authorized to order the foregoing to be communicated at such time as may seem expedient to him to those grand bodies that are already in fraternal correspondence with this Grand Lodge, and request their co-operation and assistence in maintaining the authority and supremacy of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, and vindicating the sovereignty of Grand Lodges in their respective territories."

The elections having taken place, the Grand Officers were installed by Past Grand Master Josiah H. Drummond, of Maine, Bro. Graham retaining his place as Grand Master.

Our talented friend and R. W. Bro. F. G. Tisdall, of New York, before the closing of the Grand Lodge, was formally introduced as the faithful and able defender of the rights of the Body, and "was enthusiastically received;" which compliment he acknowledged in effective and eloquent terms. Our brother was subsequently further complimented by an unanimous vote making him an "Honorary Past Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge"—an honor which he has faithfully earned and a compliment which his friends will justly appreciate. The Grand Lodge was then closed in ample form and subsequently sat down to an elegant banquet prepared for the occasion.

We have no room for the details of what occurred there, but the brethren appear to have made a very pleasant time of it.—Freemason's Monthly, Boston.

THE Prince of Wales Lodge No. 1,338 was consecrated at Auckland, New Zealand, September 28.

The Presentation of a Set of Silver Service to R. W. P. G. Secretary E. T. Carr.

On last evening a number of distinguished Masons and ladies assembled at the lodge on Delaware street to witness the presentation of a set of silver service to the Right Worshipful Past Grand Secretary, E. T. Carr, as a testimonial of esteem from the Grand Lodge of the State of Kansas.

The service came through the hands of Messrs. Hershfield & Mitchell, jewellers, and consisted of fifteen pieces, with the exquisite satin finish now so much esteemed, while the large salver was inscribed:

"Presented by the Grand Lodge, A., F. & A. M., of the State of Kansas, to the R. W. Brother E. T. Carr, P. G. Secretary, as a token of friendship and appreciation of the services of a faithful officer, A. D. 1871, A. L. 5871."

Each piece was also inscribed with the initial letter "C."

The hour having arrived and the audience being seated, Judge John M. Price, as Grand Master and as Chairman of the Committee appointed by the Grand Lodge to procure the testimonial, made the presentation speech as follows:

R. W. Brother E. T. Carr:

The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge, of the State of Kansas, at its last annual communication ordered that some testimonial should be presented to you as an appropriate recognition of the distinguished services you have rendered the Craft as Grand Secretary.

In pursuance of this resolution, we were delegated to carry out the wishes of that body. As their representatives, therefore, we appear here this evening for the purpose of performing the agreeable duty assigned to us.

It has been but fifteen years since the M. W. Grand Lodge of Kansas was organized and set to work, and during the last ten years of that period you have been its able, faithful and efficient Secretary.

In the performance of the many and varied duties of that high and respectable position, you have at all times enjoyed the fullest confidence and received the highest commendations of the Fraternity throughout this Grand Jurisdiction.

No words of mine, however expressive, no testimonial of theirs, however valuable, can convey to you their exalted opinions of you as a brother, or their profound gratitude to you for the eminent services you have rendered them.

Permit me, therefore, Right Worshipful Brother, in the name of the M. W. Grand Lodge of Kansas, in behalf of the brotherhood of the whole State, to present you this beautiful silver service and beg that you will accept it, "not for its intrinsic worth or value," but as a lasting evidence of the unbounded confidence, the fraternal love and high appreciation of those whom you have served so long and faithfully.

During these remarks the service was uncovered, and at the conclusion Mr. Carr briefly responded as follows:

Most Worshipful Grand Master, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I will not presume to make anything like a speech in reply, for I am not one of that class who best succeed when they are making speeches. But I hope that it will be felt that I deeply appreciate the gift which has been tendered to me in such a kind, fraternal manner. I accept the gift with pleasure, and I return sincere thanks—not only for myself, but for my wife, who was unable to be present on this occasion.

John H. Brown, Esq., then called upon Mr. Richard Reese, as one of the oldest Masons in Kansas, for an address, who responded by giving a brief description of the organization of the Grand Lodge of Kansas. He said that himself; Mr. Harrison, of Doniphan, and Mr. Payne, of Leavenworth, met on the corner of Shawnee and Main streets, in 1855, on the steps of an unfinished building, and then adjourned until December, because of a lack of a delegate from one of the other three only lodges in the State which were just enough to organize the Grand Lodge in the Territory. They adjourned again until the 17th of March, 1856, when the Grand Lodge was organized by delegates from Smithton, 140; Leavenworth, 150, and Wyandotte, 153. Sixteen years have lapsed since then and there are now enrolled one hundred and fourteen chartered lodges in this State.—Leavenworth Times, November 25, 1871.

Noble Bro. Schreiner.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Iowa, Nov. 9, 1871.

To the Worshipful Master Wardens and Brethren of —— Lodge No. —, A. F. and A. M.:

DEAR BROTHERS:—If we wish to make Masonry a great, living, active power for good in the world, as we should do; if we wish to exemplify its great teachings, and prove ourselves worthy of the name of Masons, we should ever have an attentive ear for the unfortunate and suffering humanity everywhere, and especially if they are of our own household.

My object in sending this may be gathered in part from the following extract, taken from an article in THE MASONIC TROWEL for October. Speaking of the great fire in Chicago, it says:

" * * * Our Grand Tyler, Worthy Brother John P. Ferns, had secured a comfortable home on the same spot where he resided in 1842, when he tyled La Fayette Lodge No. 18, the first time a lodge was ever opened in Chicago. This home was built from the savings of daily toil for long years. Bro. Ferns is one of the most patient, accommodating and laborious men in the world, and with devoted faithfulness, when his household goods lay before his eyes, he caught up and saved the Grand Lodge jewels, running northward with the wife of his early manhood, and barely escaping the half-mile-long caloric flames. * * *

"Will Worshipful Brother Schreiner, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, take charge of this matter, and by the assistance of his Brother Grand Tylers, raise Brother Ferns three thousand dollars."

The above extract speaks for itself, and I trust that at your first meeting after receiving this, you will take up a collection for this worthy object of Masonic charity. Let no individual or lodge make the excuse that they have already contributed to the general or some special relief fund for that city. Our duty is not done while any worthy brother is suffering. Do something, no matter how small. A small amount from each lodge will make a large aggregate. If you cannot give more than a few dollars, send it along. All remittances should be made to me, at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and I will remit to Worthy Brother Ferns, with a list of the contributions.

Fraternally yours,
T. SCHREINER, G. T.

MASONIC TROWEL.—This invaluable publication should be in the hands of every Craftsman, not only throughout Illinois, but the whole northwest. Since its destruction by fire it presents an improved appearance, and aside from the well-written articles from the pen of Bro. Reynolds, it is filled with contributions from other able and popular writers, among whom is our friend and brother, William Rounseville, Esq., of Peoria, to whose forcible and instructive articles a separate department has been assigned in each number of THE TROWEL. It has a good circulation here in Woodford county, but there is still "room for improvement."—Woodford Sentinel.

By-Laws of the Grand Lodge.

SPECIAL DISPENSATIONS.

SEC. 20. There shall be paid into the hands of the Grand Master the sum of five dollars for every dispensation granted to confer any degree or degrees in less than the usual time specified in the by-laws or regulations of this Grand Lodge, to be paid in all cases before the dispensation is issued; also, the sum of two dollars for every special dispensation for any other purpose.

NON-AFFILIATED MASONS.

SEC. 21. All Masons within this jurisdiction, not members of any lodge, shall be subject to discipline, so far as may relate to their conduct and behavior as Masons, by the lodge in whose jurisdiction they may reside.

SEC. 22. Jurisdiction and discipline shall be exercised over non-affiliated Masons by the oldest lodge, only, in cities or places where two or more lodges may be situated.

EXPULSIONS, SUSPENSIONS, RESTORATIONS AND REJECTIONS.

SEC. 23. Notice of expulsions, suspensions and rejections shall be given in the following manner: When any brother shall be suspended or expelled, or any candidate for initiation shall be rejected by any lodge, immediate notice thereof shall be sent to the Grand Secretary and to all the lodges within twenty-five miles of such lodge. On the first days of December, March, June and September, in each year, the Grand Secretary shall send notice of all expulsions, suspensions and rejections, reported to him for the three months previous, to all the lodges in this State and to the Grand Secretary of every Grand Lodge in correspondence with this Grand Lodge. All expulsions and suspensions shall be also published with the proceedings of the Grand Lodge. No member shall be permitted to make any expulsion or suspension public, or to communicate the same to any person not a Mason, except by a resolution to make public by the lodge from which the brother has been suspended or expelled, and which shall also be reported to the Grand Secretary.

SEC. 24. All appeals from any subordinate lodge shall be in writing and left with the Grand Secretary; and the applicant shall give the other party at least one month's notice thereof; and all appeals must be brought before the Grand Lodge at the next annual communication held after the judgement appealed from, provided one month intervenes for notice, as aforesaid; if not, the appeal may be brought up and tried at the next succeeding regular communication of the Grand Lodge, notice being regularly given as aforesaid, after which appeals will be considered out of date, unless brought by consent of the lodge in which the trial occurred, given at a regular meeting of the lodge, by a majority vote of the members present thereat. And in case the decision of any lodge suspending or expelling a brother shall be reversed by the Grand Lodge, such brother shall be restored to all his rights and privileges as a member of the Order.

SEC. 25. In all cases of the suspension or expulsion of a member, a vote of two-thirds of the members present shall be required; and in all cases of the restoration of a Mason, suspended or expelled by any lodge under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, the same majority shall be required. No expelled Mason shall be restored to the privileges of Masonry except by a vote of the Grand Lodge, and such restoration shall not reinstate him in membership in the lodge from which he was expelled, without the unanimous consent of the members thereof. No definite suspensions shall be ordered for a longer time than twelve months, and a majority of two-thirds of all votes cast shall be necessary to fix the duration of the suspension.

SEC. 26. No lodge acting under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall knowingly receive any candidate in any of the degrees in Masonry, who has been rejected by any other lodge, without first receiving the unanimous consent of the lodge that rejected him.

GRAND TREASURER—HIS DUTIES.

SEC. 27. The Grand Treasurer shall have charge of all the funds, property, securities and vouchers of the Grand Lodge; and it shall be his duty to attend at all grand communications and, if required by the Grand Master, to meet grand officers and grand committees, with the books and all necessary documents relating to his office; to make a full report at the annual grand communication; to give bonds, with security, for the faithful performance of his duty, such as shall be approved by the Grand Master, to pay or deliver over to his successor in office, or such other person or persons as the Grand Lodge may appoint, all the funds, property, securities, vouchers, records and books belonging to the Grand Lodge.

GRAND SECRETARY—HIS DUTIES.

SEC. 28. The Grand Secretary shall attend at all regular and special communications of the Grand Lodge and duly record its proceedings, and shall receive and accurately account for and promptly pay or deliver over to the Grand Treasurer, all the funds and property of the Grand Lodge, from whatever source, taking his receipt for the same. He shall keep a record of the returns made by subordinate lodges; receive and preserve all petitions, applications, appeals and other documents; sign, certify to and duly seal all instruments of writing emanating from the Grand Lodge; conduct the correspondence of the Grand Lodge, under the direction of the Grand Master, and report annually to the several Grand Lodges in correspondence with this Grand Lodge, the names of Grand Officers elected.

He shall, at each annual grand communication, make a report to the Grand Lodge of moneys received and paid over to the Grand Treasurer; of failure or want of punctuality on the part of subordinate lodges in paying dues and making proper returns; and of such other matters as, in his judgement, may require the action of the Grand Lodge.

He shall, in due time, previous to each annual grand communication, furnish each subordinate lodge with blank returns and with such instructions in regard to them as the rules and regulations of the Grand Lodge may require.

He shall be the Librarian of the Grand Lodge, and shall take charge of the Library and have it present at every session of the Grand Lodge, for the use of the same, and may appoint a Deputy Librarian to serve during the communications of the Grand Lodge. Every officer or member of the Grand Lodge, drawing books from the Library for use during the session of the Grand Lodge, shall return the same to the Library before the close thereof. Whenever any officer or member shall fail to return any book or other thing drawn from the Library, as herein required, the value of said book or thing shall be charged in double the amount thereof, by the Grand Secretary, to the lodge to which said officer or member shall belong, and be collected with the dues of the succeeding year.

The Grand Secretary shall also give bonds with security, such as shall be approved by the Grand Master, for the faithful performance of his official duties and for the prompt delivery to his successor in office of all books, papers and other property of the Grand Lodge.

He shall pay the postage on all letters, proceedings and documents sent from his office.

He shall cause the constitution, by-laws, regulations and binding resolutions of this Grand Lodge to be published annually with the proceedings of the Grand Lodge.

OTHER OFFICERS—THEIR DUTIES.

SEC. 29. The Grand Chaplain shall attend the communications of the Grand Lodge, and perform religious services.

The Grand Marshal shall proclaim the Grand Officers at their installation, introduce the representatives of foreign Grand Lodges and distinguished visiting brethren, and conduct processions of the Grand Lodge.

The Grand Standard Bearer shall take charge of the Grand Standard of the Order in processions and public ceremonies.

The Grand Sword Bearer shall carry the sword in procession and perform such other duties as by ancient usage pertain to his office.

The Grand Stewards shall have the immediate superintendence, under the direction of the Junior Grand Warden, in the provisions to be made on all festive occasions.

The Grand Pursuivant shall communicate with the Grand Tyler, announce all applicants for admission by their Masonic address, names and connection and take charge of the jewels and clothing.

The Grand Deacons shall perform the duties incident to their respective offices.

The Grand Tyler shall guard the door of the Grand Lodge on the outside, report all persons claiming admission and see that none enter but such as are duly authorized and properly clothed.

The Grand Tyler shall have all the rights and be entitled to all the honors of the other Grand Officers, except the right to vote.

UNLAWFUL LECTURES.

SEC. 30. The delivery or teaching of any Masonic lectures not authorized, or which have not received the sanction of the Grand Lodge or of its lawful authority, is forbidden; nor shall any person be permitted to give lectures to the several lodges in this State, but such as may be duly appointed by the Grand Master.

MASONIC MENDICANTS.

SEC. 31. No lodge, or officer or member thereof, shall, under any circumstances, give a certificate or recommendation to enable a Mason to proceed from lodge to lodge as a pauper, or in an itinerant manner to apply to lodges for relief.

INDIVIDUAL LODGES—THEIR DUTIES.

SEC. 32. All lodges subordinate to this Grand Lodge shall, immediately after each annual election by such lodge, report to the Grand Secretary the names of the Master, Wardens and Secretary elect.

SEC. 33. Upon the demise of any lodge within the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, the last Secretary and Treasurer of the lodge shall, within three months thereafter, transmit to the Grand Secretary all the books, papers, jewels, furniture, funds and other property or evidence thereof of the lodge so demised.

When two or more lodges desire to consolidate their membership into one lodge, they may do so by taking one of the names and one of the numbers of said lodges and officially informing the Grand Master of such action; that upon such consolidation being perfected the title to the property of the two lodges shall be vested in said consolidated lodge, and a new special charter shall be issued by the Grand Master to said lodge by its new name and number, without fee: Provided, That no proposition looking to such consolidation shall be acted upon by any lodge until the same shall have been presented at a regular meeting and laid on the table for one month: And, Provided further, that such consolidation shall only be effected by the unanimous consent of all members present when such proposition shall be acted upon.

SEC. 34. No elections for officers shall take place in a lodge U. D., but all vacancies shall be filled by appointment by the W. Master.

PETITIONS FOR INITIATION OR MEMBERSHIP.

SEC. 35. Subordinate lodges are instructed not to receive any petition for membership, or the degrees, unless the petitioner shall in such cases set forth whether he has or has not made application to any other lodge for initiation or admission, nor act upon any petition, either for initiation or membership, unless the same shall have laid over four weeks.

When the petition of a non-affiliated Mason for membership in any lodge in whose jurisdiction he may reside, shall be rejected, he may again petition the same or any other lodge for membership without regard to time. In towns or cities in this jurisdiction, where two or more lodges exist, upon the presentation of any petition to any lodge in such town or city, either for membership or the degrees, notice shall at once be given to each lodge in such town or city of the presentation of such petition, and of the time when the same will be acted upon.

SEC. 36. Subordinate lodges shall not receive a petition for initiation from an applicant who lives nearer to another lodge than the one he petitions, without first obtaining the unanimous consent of the other lodges at a regular meeting. Nor shall any petition for membership or the degrees be received unless the petitioner shall have signed the same with his full name, and all lodges are required to preserve in their records the full name of each person hereafter becoming members thereof.

SEC. 37. No subordinate lodge shall be permitted to return a petition which has been presented and referred, for membership or initiation, without first balloting for the candidate.

SEC. 38. The subordinate lodges under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge are instructed not to initiate any candidate who has not resided in the State of Illinois twelve calendar months before such application be made. No subordinate lodge shall entertain a petition from a candidate who may have been rejected by any lodge in this jurisdiction until after the lapse of one year from such rejection.

A Sketch.

Our readers in this county will recognize the subject of the following sketch, which we clip from the Herald and Free Press of Norristown, Pa., where he formerly resided:

"Twenty-five years ago, one morning, a cry was raised in one of the old cotton mills on Washington street, 'A boy killed.' Upon the doctor's arrival, he found a boy of fourteen years of age bleeding at the mouth, ears, nose and eyes, his breathing so imperceptible that many of the spectators pronounced him dead. He had just been drawn through a part of the machinery in so confined a space that to live after the pressure seemed impossible. With good nursing and medical aid his life was preserved. He was subsequently apprenticed to an architect, settled in Galena in 1854, engaged in the erection of some of the finest buildings and left a lucrative position in the Construction Bureau of the Treasury Department to enter the United States Army during the war. He entered the ranks as a private, and passed through every grade up to that of General, by merit alone. His name is familiar wherever Odd Fellowship is known on this continent, and he now holds an office of trust under the U. S. Government, at Galena, Illinois. His Norristown friends and relatives will recognize the original of our sketch in John Corson Smith, P. G. Representative of Illinois."

The writer might have added that he is now M. W. Grand Master of the State. The sketch concludes as follows:

"During these years of busy life, Gen. Smith has not forgotten his old Norristown home and he regularly renews his yearly subscription to the Herald, which enables him to keep posted about our local affairs and progress in general."—Galena Gazette.

Sketch of Washington.

His mind was great and powerful, without being of very first order; his penetrations strong, though not so acute as that of Newton, Bacon or Locke; and as far as he saw, no judgment was ever sounder. It was slow in operation, being little aided by invention, but sure in conclusion. Hence the common remark of his officers, of the advantage he derived from councils of war, where, hearing all suggestions, he selected whatever was best, and certainly no general ever planned his battle more judiciously. But if deranged during the action, if any member of his plan was dislocated by sudden circumstances, he was slow in readjustment. The consequence was that he often failed in the field, and rarely against an enemy in station, as at Boston and York. He was incapable of fear, meeting personal dangers with the calmest unconcern. Perhaps the strongest feature in his character was prudence, never acting until every circumstance, every consideration was maturely weighed; refraining if he saw a doubt, but if once decided, going through with his purpose, whatever obstacles opposed.

His integrity was most pure, his justice the most inflexible I have ever known; no motives of consanguinity, of friendship or hatred, being able to bias his decision. He was, indeed, in every sense of the word, a wise, a good, and a great man. His temper was naturally irritable and high toned; but reflection and resolution had obtained a firm habitual ascendancy over it. If ever, however, it broke its bonds, he was most tremendous in his wrath. In his expenses he was honorable, but exact; liberal in contributions to whatever promised utility, but frowning and unyielding on all visionary projects, and all unworthy calls on his charity. His heart was warm in its affections; but he exactly calculated every man's value, and gave him a solid esteem proportioned to it. His person you know, was fine, his stature exactly what one would wish; his deportment easy, erect and noble, the best horseman of his age, and the most graceful figure that could be seen on horseback. Although in the circle of his friends, where he might be unreserved with safety, he took a fresh share in conversation, his colloquial talents were not above mediocrity possessing neither copiousness of ideas nor fluency of words. In public, when called on for a sudden opinion, he was unready, short, and embarrassed. Yet he wrote readily, rather diffusely, in an easy and correct style.—Jefferson.

On the Higher Education of Women.

I desire to direct attention to a few considerations which show that young women, viewed not as future lawyers, physicians, politicians, or even teachers, but as future wives and mothers, should enjoy a high and liberal culture, and which may help us to understand the nature and means of such culture. It is in the maternal relation that the importance of the education of woman appears most clearly. It requires no very extensive study of biography to learn that it is of less consequence to any one what sort of father he may have had than what sort of mother. It is indeed a popular impression that the children of clever fathers are likely to exhibit the opposite quality. Men in public positions, or immersed in business, are apt to neglect the oversight of their children. It is a noteworthy fact that eminent qualities in men may almost always be traced to similar qualities in their mothers. Knowledge, it is true, is not hereditary; but training, and culture, and high mental qualities are so, and I believe that the transmission is chiefly through the mother's side. Further, it is often to the girls rather than to the boys, and it frequently happens that if a selection were to be made as to the members of a family most deserving of an elaborate and costly education, the young women would be chosen rather than the young men. Imagine an educated mother, training and moulding the powers of her children, giving to them in the years of infancy those gentle yet permanent, tendencies which are of more account in the formation of character than any subsequent educational influences, selecting for them the best instructors, encouraging and aiding them in their difficulties, sympathizing with them in their successes, able to take an intelligent interest in their progress in literature and science. How ennobling such an influence, how fruitful of good results, how certain to secure the warm and lasting gratitude of those who have received its benefits, when they look back in future life on the paths of wisdom along which they have been led. What a contrast to this is the position of an untaught mother—finding her few superficial accomplishments of no account in the work of life, unable wisely to guide the rapidly-developing mental life of her children, bringing them up to repeat her own failures and errors, or perhaps to despise her as ignorant of what they must learn. Truly the art and profession of a mother is the noblest and most far-reaching of all, and she who would worthily discharge its duties must be content with no mean preparation.—Good Health.

A Lesson in Politeness.

How the Great Firm of —— & Co. lost $5,445.

About two weeks ago, a check or draft for $55 was presented at the office of —— & Co., and in the usual course of business was stamped thus:

ACCEPTED:
Payable at the 4th National Bank.
—— & Co.

Two or three days afterwards the draft was presented to the 4th National Bank for payment. The figures had been altered to $5,500, but not so as to attract attention. The man who presented the check, however, was so nervous that the suspicions of the paying teller were aroused. He detained the man who presented the draft, and sent a messenger to the house of —— & Co., to see if it was good. After some trouble, the messenger forced an interview with the junior member of the firm. The young gentleman seized the check, drew it through his jeweled fingers, and said:

"Young man, there's our stamp on that draft right in plain sight of your eyes. If that stamp was a bear it would bite you. Tell your paying teller that time is valuable to us, and if we are to be interrupted in our business hours through his stupidity, the firm of —— & Co., will have to make some arrangements so far as the 4th National Bank is concerned."

So saying he seized a pen, and before the messenger had recovered from his surprise and could tell him of the paying teller's suspicions, he wrote across the face of the check—

GOOD FOR $5,500.
—— & Co.

handed it to the young man, again rebuked him for bothering the great firm of —— & Co., and vanished. The messenger returned to the bank, and the paying teller indignantly paid the money without further question. The gentleman who altered the figures went on his way rejoicing; but two days afterwards the great firm of —— & Co. discovered the fraud. They had lost just $5,445 because of a want of good breeding.

The Mysteries of Chinese Masonry.

Perhaps it is not generally known that the Chinese have secret orders established among themselves, whose designs and objects are much the same as those of more civilized nations. On the evening of the fourth a branch order was established with appropriate mystical ceremonies in Chinatown, at the Jones House. Large numbers of the celestials gathered in the evening and proceeded toward the building. A few outside barbarians attempted to gain admission. A Chinaman was accosted and asked the meaning of the gathering. "Yeshsee, thishee seclet order allee same Melican Mason, you sabbee." As the building was hardly finished a handy knot-hole gave an opportunity for observing the ceremonies. The room was fantastically decorated with Chinese writing, tiger heads and Celestial symbols. An aisle was formed by swords stuck in the floor, on each side of which the brethren stationed themselves, and allowed the Hiyeemuck-a-muck to pass to his seat on the platform. Swords were clanked over his head, and a lot of unintelligible gibberish chanted by the assemblage. An impolite Chinaman happened to place his back against the knot hole, and further observation was lost.—San Jose (Cal.) Independent.

The New Year.

We are not about to inflict a homily upon our readers. The year that has just left us, with all its events, has passed into history. Its disasters in the west, happening mostly at one time, have no parallel. The sudden transition from plenty, comfort, home, and often from affluence to the direst misery, destitution and hunger, with only the sky for shelter, met with equally sudden relief, shelter and commiseration in practical form from thousands of sources, from different nations, and all classes and conditions of humanity. The lives lost cannot be restored and many events are to be remembered only in sorrow. But with all the calamities come lessons that wise men will utilize, and from devastation and ruin will again come a larger and more permanent prosperity. To our beloved brethren we simply say: Keep on the armor of charity and be not slow to relieve; profit by the past and live so as to be worthy of the "tongue of good report."

"Aspiring to Office."

Bro. Rounseville's article with the above heading has caused some talking out of meeting. The question is asked us if every lodge can "fill the bill," mentally, morally and physically. Not knowing, we are unable to answer, but presume that there are not many lodges lacking the material physically and morally, and which might be rendered suitable mentally if their services were in requisition.

Another asks us to name any one who can "fill the bill." That we can do. And if we had been permitted to carry out our long cherished desire of visiting all the lodges in the State, we have no doubt that we might name one hundred. But of the number we do know and whom we have seen in the chair within the last two years,, and who are none of them yet thirty-five years of age, we name Bro. Geo. W. Davis, of Carrollton; Bro. Thomas J. Whitehead, of Odin; Bro. W. H. Lamb, of Tuscola; Dr. Darrah, of Tolono; Bro. S. M. Martin, of Jacksonville; Bro. C. Wilson, of Canton; Bro. A. Davidson, of Lexington; Bro. Louis Zeigler, of Chenoa: these come readily to mind, and we could name a great number farther advanced in life, including our Bro. Rounseville himself. Physically, mentally, in a Masonic sense, and morally the above named brethren "fill the bill," and brethren Davis, Whitehead, Lamb and Darrah we know to be eloquent and specially impressive and graceful in their work. We do not know that we quite concede Bro. Rounseville's views in regard to physique, for we have known some men of small stature who made both good judges and good Masters. But it will undoubtedly be admitted without question that good moral character, good Masonic attainments, a good voice and a commanding and graceful presence, are requisites greatly to be desired.

Metamora.

A few evenings since we were the guest of Col. J. W. Page, the present, and an early Master of Metamora Lodge. He built the first house in Metamora and his father and family were among the earliest settlers in the county. The colonel was in the Mexican war, and has held several important county offices. It was in Metamora Lodge that M. E. Comp. Jas. H. Miles, the accomplished Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter, first saw the light of Masonry. In the evening we made an official visit to Metamora Chapter, E. S., witnessed a correct initiation, and a good exemplification of the work. The attendance was large and the interest excellent.

Metamora is situated on an eminence and commands a view of the country for miles in every direction. It is now connected with the world of enterprise by a rail road running south west from Dwight, meeting a road from Ottawa and another from Pontiac at Streator, crossing the Central at Wenona, and uniting with the T. P. & W. at Washington.

HALL OF OBLONG CITY LODGE NO. 644, A.,
F. AND A. M., November 23, 1871.

At a regular communication of Oblong City Lodge No. 644, held in their hall, in Oblong City, Illinois, on the date above, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, One W. J. HEACKER, who lives within the jurisdiction of this lodge and who claims to be a Master Mason in good standing, is not a Mason and has never been so recognized by this lodge; and

WHEREAS, His pretensions to identity with the Order are such as to induce some to believe he is a Mason, to the great injury of this and neighboring lodges; therefore be it

Resolved, That Oblong City Lodge No. 644, A., F. and A. Masons, do hereby say, from lawful information obtained, to all men, and especially to all Masons, that said W. J. HEACKER is not a Mason, but an unprincipled impostor, and we warn all to treat him as such.

Resolved, That the above preamble and resolutions be published in THE MASONIC TROWEL.

Given under my hand and seal of the lodge, this 24th day of November, A. D. 1871.

Proceedings of Various Grand Bodies.

We gratefully acknowledge the courtesies of several Grand Secretaries and Grand Recorders for the transactions of the Grand Lodges of New Brunswick, Delaware, Quebec, Nebraska, Nova Scotia and Tenessee; of the Grand Chapters of Indiana, Nova Scotia, Maine and Canada; of the Grand Councils of Vermont, Indiana, Minnesota, North Carolina and Ohio, and of the Grand Commanderies of New Jersey, Maine, Missouri and Kentucky.

NEW BRUNSWICK.—Grand Lodge.—William Wedderburn, of Hampton, is Grand Master, and William F. Bunting, of St. John, is Grand Secretary. The fourth annual meeting was held at St. John last September. It has twenty-seven lodges, with 1,751 members. Five of the lodges are in the city of Saint John, with 706 members. No opinion was expressed in the matter of the Grand Lodge of Quebec.

QUEBEC.—Grand Lodge.—John H. Graham, L. L. D., of Richmond, is Grand Master, and John H. Isaacson, of Montreal, Grand Secretary. The second annual meeting was held at Montreal last September; thirty-three lodges; 1,496 members. Four lodges in Quebec and five in Montreal. A large number of visitors was in attendance among whom were P. G. Master Drummond, Grand Master Lynde and Grand Secretary Berry, of Maine; P. G. M. Englesby and Grand Master Davis, of Vermont; Bro. Fitzgerald Tisdall, of New York; and Bro. James Douglas, of Chester, Illinois. A plan had been agreed upon for a union of the lodges adhering to the Grand Lodge of Canada with the Grand Lodge of Quebec, which was rejected by the Grand Lodge, and the complete and absolute supremacy of the Grand Lodge of Quebec asserted over all matters pertaining to symbolic Masonry in the Province of Quebec by a vote of forty-seven to four. A door was opened by which all lodges can be admitted.

NEBRASKA.—Grand Lodge.—William E. Hill, of Nebraska City, is Grand Master, and Robert W. Furnas, of Brownville, Grand Secretary. Last June the fourteenth annual communication was held at Lincoln; thirty-five lodges; 1,579 members. The three lodges in Omaha have 373 members. This Grand Lodge is now increasing rapidly and its proceedings indicate vigor, ability and culture.

NOVA SCOTIA.—Grand Lodge.—Hon. Alevander Keith, of Halifax, is Grand Master, and D. C. Cullen, of Halifax, is Grand Secretary. The annual meeting was held at Halifax last June. This Grand Lodge has fifty-nine subordinates and 2,266 members. Halifax has eleven lodges with only 513 members. Better consolidate. This is a well-governed body and its proceedings indicate unity, vigor and prosperity.

TENNESSEE.—Grand Lodge.—John C. Brown, of Pulaski, was Grand Master, and John Frizzell, of Nashville, Grand Secretary. The proceedings are those of November, 1870, which have been noticed from other channels before; 331 lodges and 18,601 members. We hope to be able to report upon the doings of last November soon.

DELAWARE.—Grand Lodge.—Rev. J. C. McCabe, of Middletown, is G. M., and J. P. Allmond Wilmington, Grand Secretary. The annual meeting was held at Wilmington last June. This small jurisdiction has twenty-six subordinate lodges, 1,028 members and is in a prosperous condition.

CANADA.—Grand Chapter.—T. Douglas Harrington, of Ottawa, Ontario, is Grand High Priest, and Thomas Bird Harris, of Hamilton, Ontario, is Grand Scribe E., answering to our Grand Secretaries. The Grand Convocation was held at Hamilton, in August last. The jurisdiction is divided into twelve districts, with a Superintendent in each. Forty-four chapters, with 1,832 members. Of the chapters twelve are located in the Province of Quebec and two in New Brunswick.

INDIANA.—Grand Chapter.—Rees J. Chestnutwood, South Bend, is G. H. P., and John M. Bramwell, of Indianapolis, Grand Secretary. The Grand Convocation was at Logansport, last October. Eighty-five chapters have a membership of 3,757; increase during the past year, 209; average, 45.

MAINE.—Grand Chapter.—Stephen J. Young, of Brunswick, is G. H. P., and Ira Berry, of Portland, Grand Secretary. The annual meeting was held at Portland last May. Thirty-five chapters; 3,069 members; 381 exaltations. Comp. Drummond submitted the report on correspondence. It is, as are all his reports, complete, timely and able. He regards the assumption of control over the Order of High Priesthood by the Grand Chapter of New York, as erroneous. Under the head of statistics he puts down thirty-eight Grand Chapters, including those of Canada and Nova Scotia, with 1,837 subordinates; 105,351 members; 11,801 exaltations in one year. Comp. Drummond is comparatively a young man, certainly not over forty-five, and it is not probable that any other man in this country has performed so much useful service, held so many responsible stations in Masonic bodies, and found ample time to devote to his professional duties and mingle in political affairs. The whole matter is summed up in a few words: a fine, well-organized physique; temperate; good natural abilities; well-educated; thoroughly posted; logical; always ready; generous and humane, and spurred on by a strong and ambitious will. At the present time he is engaged in an extensive law practice, presides over Royal Arch Masonry in the United States, over the A. and A. Rite, N. J., and reports for all the four grand bodies in Maine. Has passed the positions of Grand Master, Grand High Priest, Grand Puissant and Grand Commander and has served the State twice in the Speaker's chair. He must have presented from thirty to forty reports on correspondence, all good, and more than average, while some have never been excelled.

NOVA SCOTIA.—Grand Chapter.—Stephen R. Sircom, G. H. P.; James Gossip, Halifax, Grand Secretary. The annual meeting was held at Halifax last April; five chapters; 136 members. This Grand Chapter is newly formed.

INDIANA.—Grand Council.—Martin H. Rice, Indianapolis, G. M.; John M. Bramwell, Grand Recorder. Annual meeting at Logansport last October; thirty-seven councils; 1,381 members; increase, 128. Two hundred dollars was contributed for the relief of the suffering Masons in Chicago.

MINNESOTA.—Grand Council.—Three councils met in December, 1870, at St. Paul and formed a Grand Council. The first convocation was held immediately; J. C. Terry, was elected Grand Master, and W. S. Combs, of St. Paul, Grand Recorder. The second convocation was held in January last and A. E. Ames was elected G. M., and B. F. Wright, G. Recorder, Comp. Combs having been promoted.

NORTH CAROLINA.—Grand Council.—Thomas B. Carr, Wilmington, G. M.; H. M. Katz, Wilmington, Grand Recorder. Annual meeting at Wilmington, last June; four councils; ninety-nine members.

OHIO.—Grand Council.—Joseph R. Conrad, Atwater, G. Master; John D. Caldwell, Cincinnati, G. Recorder. Forty-first annual meeting at Sandusky City, last September; fifty-nine subordinates. Why does not Comp. Caldwell publish his footings?

VERMONT.—Grand Council.—Edward S. Dana, Middlebury, Grand Master; W. H. S. Whitcomb, Burlington, G. Recorder. Annual meeting last June; fourteen subordinates; 784 members.

KENTUCKY.—Grand Commandery.—H. M. Smith, Maysville, G. C.; Wm. C. Munger, Franklin, Grand Recorder. Annual meeting at Mt. Sterling in July; next meeting at Frankfort, second Wednesday in July; thirteen commanderies; 587 members.

MAINE.—Grand Commandery.—Henry H. Dickey, G. C.; Ira Berry, Portland, G. R. Annual meeting at Portland last May; where the next is to be and when, does not appear; eleven commanderies; 1,117 members.

MISSOURI.—Grand Commandery.—Francis M. Tufts, Platte City, G. C.; Geo. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, Grand Recorder. Annual conclave at St. Louis in October; next at St. Louis on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in October next; nineteen subordinates, 771 members.

NEW JERSEY.—Grand Commandery.—Wm. W. Goodwin, Camden, G. C.; Thos. J. Corson, Trenton, G. R. Annual meeting at Trenton last September; thirteen Commanderies; 754 members. That unique Reporter, Doctor Corson, "rises to explain;" well, we commenced at "Delaware Grand Lodge," at precisely 4 o'clock A. M. this 18th day of December, A. D. 1871, waded through grand chapters, councils, commanderies; found out the magnates and pack horses; noted the times of hob-nobbing, and brought statistical order out of statistical—well, no matter, until 7 A. M., when we ran against Doctor Corson. As the Doctor says, we "must take suthing," and as it would be contrary to rule, and expose us to the point of the sword to omit something, we have "gone through" his report; exhausted, wearied, buttons off our—ahem! sides sore, hoarse, and not daring to commence again, we take the following:

> "After having disposed of poor Sir James, we returned to the banquet, but as we entered the room a horrible sight met us. There sat Sir John W. Simons, of New York, looking the very counterpart of Sir John Falstaff, but for an expression of agonizing sorrow upon his usually placid countenance. Surrounded by empty plates and bottles, whose contents had departed from earthly vision, he was keeping watch over a pyramid of ice cream, a dish of lobster salad, a plate of charlotte russe, and other edibles, and feebly crying, "Off, I say be off, the great State of New York will not suffer her rights to be trampled upon—if the great lodge of *Ham*burg interferes I'll cut her up into sandwiches. I can't eat any more now, but these things are mine, and no 'foreign power' shall interfere." Poor John, although he has an appetite that a Mastodon might envy, and although his powers of imbibition would put to shame the healthiest old Bactrian camel that ever laid in a supply of liquid for a desert tramp; he had been over-matched this time. His weakness, 'not his will,' consented to stop. His victual energies were extinct and all the powers of mastication had ceased their operation, and there the 'miserable relic' of his former self sat in utter despair."

Cosmopolitan Masonic Calendar.

We are under many obligations to Bro. Geo. Kenning, publisher of the Freemason, London, for a beautiful copy of the Cosmopolitan Masonic Calendar, containing a list of lodges in the United Kingdom, France, Germany and Italy, with much valuable information in relation to bodies of the higher degrees and of a Masonic character.

The United Grand Lodge of England is governed by the Marquis of Ripon, G. M., assisted by the Earl of Carnarvon, Deputy; Lord Lindsay, S. G. W.; and Col. Whitwell, M. P., J. G. W.

The Grand Lodge has a Board of General Purposes, a Colonial Board, Lodge of Benevolence, forty-one Provincial Grand Masters and twenty-six District Grand Masters, located in foreign dependencies. It has upon its roll 1,335 lodges, the larger part of which are in England, but many are located in Wales, Victoria, Burmah, India, South Australia, South Africa, Bahamas, Prince Edward's, Queensland, New Zealand, Vancouver's, Egypt, Anglesea, Isle of Man, Turkey, China, South America, etc.; of these lodges eighty-seven are lodges of instruction.

The Marquis of Ripon presides over the Grand Chapter, which has 348 subordinates, nine of which are chapters of instruction.

Rev. G. R. Portal presides over the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters, which has 139 subordinates.

Sir Knight William Stuart presides over the Supreme Conclave of Knights Templar and 112 subordinates.

The Earl of Bective presides over the Masonic and Military Order of Knights of Rome and of the Red Cross of Constantine; it has sixty-two conclaves.

Charles Von Vigne is Sov. G. Commander of the Supreme Council, 33d degree. The number of subordinate bodies is large.

The Earl of Rosslyn governs the Grand Lodge of Scotland and its 508 lodges in Scotland and in the foreign countries occupied by the Grand Lodge of England.

The Earl of Dalhousie governs the Grand Chapter and its ninety-seven subordinates.

Mark Masters, Royal Order of Scotland, Religious and Military Order of the Temple, Ancient and Accepted Rite, all flourish in Scotland.

The Duke of Leinster governs the Grand Lodge of Ireland and its 400 subordinates, and 220 Royal Arch Chapters. The Templars flourish in Ireland.

We pass over France.

The Emperor of Germany is Protector of the Grand Lodges in his dominions, and the Crown Prince, the very able and learned Frederick William, is the Deputy Protector.

Freemasonry flourishes in Italy, Sweden, Norway, Belgium, Denmark, Greece, and exists in Portugal, Turkey and Spain.

A calendar is set apart for every day in the year. Arranged in convenient pocket form, with rubber band and pocket. Price fifty cents and postage. Address Geo. Kenning, 1, 2, 3 and 4, Little Britain, London, England.

A Venerable Mason gone.

Robert Latham was born in Lyme, N. H., Feb. 9, 1793, and died where he was born Sept. 25, 1871, being at the time of his death, 78 years, seven months and 16 days old. He was a consistent member of the Congregational church for more than fifty years; was made a Mason in Bridgewater, Mass., in 1809, and was subsequently a member of both lodge and chapter at Bradford, Vt., and of course had been 52 years a Mason. His brother was the celebrated stage proprietor and mail contractor in Ohio, many years ago. Dr. Allen Latham, of this city, our present town clerk, is his third son, and left the Templar gathering at Baltimore just in time to receive the paternal blessing, close the father's eyes in death, and see his remains consigned by loving brethren and neighbors to the earth to await a joyful resurrection.

Queen Esther Chapter No. 1, E. S., Hannibal, Missouri.

On the 20th of December last we visited Hannibal and constituted Queen Esther Chapter No. 1 and installed the officers with all the formalities.

This first chapter in Missouri starts off with thirty-nine members, among whom are several brethren distinguished in business and professions. Several candidates were initiated, perfectly, the opening services were really elegant, and the music on the organ accompanied by voices of both sexes was excellent.

Bro. Elliott is perfectly at home as Patron, while Mrs. Crosby presides as Matron with most exquisite grace.

Our attention was attracted to the ease, dignity and self-poise of the ladies, who seemed to have that happy frankness and self-possession which rest so handsomely upon well-bred women. It is pleasant to witness the performance of work when mistakes are unnoticed, confidence is perfect and embarrassment a stranger.

Our treatment has endeared the chapter to us, and true to Hannibal history, we could not be permitted to return until we had been thoroughly oystered as a close to our welcome.

Hannibal is a beautiful business place and the rail and highway bridge is a splendid work of science and engineering skill.

The Kentucky Freemason for November presents a very full report of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge. Under the head of "Grievances" the editor says:

> "Bro. Pickett, Chairman, made the ablest report on grievances that was ever presented to the Grand Lodge, nearly every recommendation of which was adopted without debate or amendment."

Bro. Pickett was subsequently elected J. G. W.

Relations of Freemasonry to Sectarianism.

Bro. Samuel Evans and two hundred and twenty-nine other brethren, in Massachusetts, petitioned the "M. W. Grand Lodge to institute a thorough examination and investigation into the present ritual and work, and also into the usages and practices of lodges, for the purpose of ascertaining whether that most important landmark—the universality of Freemasonry—has been overthrown or disregarded; and if so, to order such corrections and alterations in the ritual and work as may be needed to restore them into accord with that landmark; to condemn and forbid whatever usages and practices may be found in conflict therewith."

The petition, with its preamble and conclusion, was referred to Deputy Grand Master Charles Levi Woodbury and Breth. John A. Goodwin, Henry Chickering, Ezra Palmer and Thomas H. Harding.

The report, made on the 13th of September last, covers fifteen pages of Minion type, is very thorough and exhaustive in researches, candid in all its statements, free from all harshness and irresistible in its arguments and conclusions. Its great length compels us to forego its entire publication, and after passing over the introduction, history and historical statements concerning "Saint John in Massachusetts," "The Bible in the lodge" and "The parallel lines," we give the argument in regard to "Masonic prayers," together with the "Conclusion" of the Committee:

MASONIC PRAYERS.

It also has been objected that the tolerant spirit of our Institution has been abused by a frequent voluntary invocation of Christ, the Savior according to Christian faith, that gives an air of sectarianism to the lodge. This complaint is made in other States also, and has been much discussed in Masonic periodicals. The prevailing predominence of Christian faith in the whole country, among the people both in and out of the lodges, is well known; but that fact should induce us more carefully to respect the feelings of those who are not of our creed in a place devoted, among other things, to removing the prejudices engendered by differences of creed. The candidate knows, at his application, how the lodge is erected and dedicated: and he is told that nothing injurious to his own faith will be demanded of him, nor should it be. He already has a religious creed, or he cannot enter. The candidate does not enter to revolutionize ancient and established forms, or to proselyte to his creed; but on the contrary promises to maintain the landmarks; the two are equivalents of each other. He enters knowing there is a dedication to Saint John, and that he is neither to proselyte nor be proselyted. We have already stated that the plan of Masonic toleration does not demand that one should attach the same value or faith to any particular symbol or ceremony that another does. The assent of his conscience is not asked to another's belief within the prescribed creed limits. Masonry is of all the creeds that its members are. Because a symbol is not dear to one, he has no right to attack it if it is dear to another. His duty is to tolerate it, knowing also that he is not asked to believe as to it what his neighbor does, and that quarrels about religion are forbidden in the lodge. This is the only ground on which peace and harmony can reign in a lodge of various creeds, or religious toleration exist. It is the ground on which it has existed heretofore; the plan of our landmarks. Both the Jewish and the Christian holy books lay on our altar and no man is asked on which he pins his faith, nor how much he admits or rejects.

In examining the records, it appears that Christian prayers have been in use more or less, probably at all times, in English and American lodges. The lodges have usually had Christian Chaplains, sometimes probably those who were not. They have officially attended Christian churches to hear Christian sermons preached to them on their own invitation. A copious American literature of this character exists of the last and the present centuries. It is right for an institution of various creeds to do this. It would equally be right to attend divine service with any creed that puts its trust in God. This is tolerance. Some prayers in our ritual are as absolutely Jewish in style of invocation as some are Christian. If the lodge cannot as respectfully listen to one as the other, it has not true Masonic toleration. As a body we are unitarian as well as trinitarian. The reasons that would cut away one class of prayers, would cut away the other. Consequently we do not recommend interfering with the present ritual, fearing lest all prayers would suffer.

Voluntary prayers are often requested in the lodge. What rule should be adopted as to these?

The invitation is given for the benefit of Masons of the several creeds in the lodge, and asks that the spirit of the utterer frame the best prayer suited to their condition. His judgment is therefore solicited rather than his peculiarities of opinion. We think confidence in such case must be reposed in the Chaplain, that he will not offend or excite prejudices among his hearers. If he does, do not ask him again. He is not a mere praying machine, like the water wheel of the Budhist, but a Mason, obligated to promote harmony by a tolerant spirit. If he proves destitute of it, Masonry has not perfected him; and those having its true spirit will soon regulate the evil. Our lodges contain most respectable representatives of both trinitarian and unitarian creeds, and so long as they mutually respect each other's feelings of devotion, we shall prosper and be happy. When either becomes too fanatical to do so, then our harmony will be lost. Those who are too fanatical for religious toleration, usually decline to seek our lodges. We certainly are the gainers thereby, but we by no means think they are so. Your Committee think that a Masonic lodge, consistently with its profession of religious liberty, could listen to the prayer of any creed capable of admission to the mysteries of Freemasonry; and sooner than give up all prayer or confine prayer to a single creed, it would be better that tolerant prayers of all creeds were embodied in the ritual. As regards unitarians, both Jew and Christian as well as trinitarians, the ritual, as already said, does meet their cases sufficiently. To the question whether either shall be turned out or dropped, we answer no! No evidence has been given us that any particular Chaplain has, in this jurisdiction, exceeded the limits of courtesy towards his brethren of other creeds; but in this and other jurisdictions some little cause for anxiety has arisen, which the good of Masonry requires we should allay by re-stating the true grounds and mode of Masonic religious toleration, as well as we could without a particular case before us for consideration.

CONCLUSION.

Your Committee in stating the general views on the early history of Freemasonry in England, do not ask their adoption as the standard views of the Grand Lodge. It is rare that a historical question is ever set at rest, and the mind should be left free to receive in the future with candor and weigh with fairness every new light and new discovery which hereafter may arise on the subject and assign it its proper place among the links of proofs. It certainly cannot now be said that the means of evidence have all been explored or exhausted. We know of many mines now being worked by earnest brethren.

The code of this Grand Lodge furnishes means for the disposal of this subject. Your Committee, in relation to Masonic law, are merely seekers after a light only possessed in its fullness by the Grand Lodge itself. It has not been usual for this body to declare constructions, except so far as is needful in deciding on infringements of general regulations, or on cases where all the facts are before them. The major portion of the matters which were brought to the notice of any of us, hung upon the abstract proposition that Freemasonry in its original form was "deistic," and devoid of religious color; and hence, that its present usages should be reformed where they varied from, and be made to conform to, what we should find to be the original usages, &c. We have stated enough of the pertinent facts which have come to our knowledge, to show why we do not think that at present the pregnant proposition has been proved to be true. There has therefore been no necessity for us to examine further than we here report.

These main questions about the extremely ancient usages of the Craft in a foreign country, belong to the domain of history; where, as matters of interesting investigation and ingenious speculation, they will long hold their place. A vote upon them by this Grand Lodge would not settle a single fact or delay a single investigator in continuing the search for more facts and more light, now in energetic process and long likely to continue. The Grand Lodge is not the forum to decide historical questions.

It is only within the past year that we have received the valuable contributions of Bro. Hughan, and the promise of further publication of manuscripts is dependent on the avidity shown by the public for those now given us. Until a complete reconciliation of all known facts can be made, or historical investigation is exhausted, the subject is not ripe for decision as a historical question addressed to its legislative discretion. We agree that it is the duty of the Grand Lodge to the Craft to stand by and adhere to the ancient landmarks as we have received them; and to hold them in trust for the Craft unmoved until a case of proof beyond a doubt shall be made against them. So far as relates to a comparison of the practice of our art by this Grand Lodge and its predecessors in Massachusetts, your Committee, after careful search, are satisfied that no innovations of a sectarian nature have crept in. The conservation has been faithful.

Your Committee recommend the petitioners have leave to withdraw.

The report was accepted and its recommendation adopted, with but one dissenting vote.

A true copy.

Minnesota.

Through the politeness of Comp. W. S. Combs, Grand Secretary Grand Chapter of Minnesota, we are in receipt of the transactions of the Grand Chapter of Minnesota, in one volume, from its organization until January last.

The original convention to organize was held December 17, 1859, of which Hon. A. E. Ames was President and G. W. Prescott, Secretary. Upon the formation of the Grand Chapter, A. T. C. Pierson was elected Grand High Priest; down to 1871, R. S. Alden, A. E. Ames, Geo. W. Prescott, C. W. Nash, B. F. Smith, Luther Dearborn, M. W. Getchell, E. D. Porter and G. W. Merrill have held that position; Comp. Prescott, only, for two years. Comp. Prescott was the first Grand Secretary and held the position one year; Comp. Pierson, four years; Comp. C. W. Carpenter, one; Comp. L. E. Thompson, one, and he was succeeded in 1867 by Comp. Combs, who bids fair to be his own successor for a long time.

The report on correspondence last January was from the facile pen of Comp. Pierson. He is himself, only more so. He says that a dimit is an American institution. We deny it and demand the proof. He says he has no notion of throwing stones at us: that implies that he is ready to throw them at somebody, which is like the honest Hibernian who couldn't resist the temptation to hit a head when he saw it. He is quite facetious on Comp. Wright, of Iowa, for putting 32° to his name. In his tilt with Iowa, he roundly asserts that the General Grand Chapter was the ORIGINAL body. Comp. Pierson usually knows what he is talking about, but here his record needs patching. Better look over the books again.

Rail Roads.

Main Trunks—Branches and Extensions—Miles—Connections—Principal Towns—Country—Character.

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WARSAW.

Main line, State line via Peoria to Warsaw .... 227 miles.

In connection with the road from State line to Logansport, Indiana.

Connects north and south at Gilman, Chenoa, El Paso, Peoria, Canton and Bushnell. Incidentally at Washington, Peoria and Hamilton.

General connections at Peoria and Bushnell.

River connections at Peoria, Hamilton and Warsaw.

This road traverses a very important part of the military tract, and, like the T. W. & W., a fine agricultural and stock region. Watseka and Peoria are the county seats, and in addition to towns already named, Warsaw is a large and important river point. Washington, twelve miles east of Peoria, is a large place.

This line has very direct connections east and west, and is being sought for by the mammoth roads.

ROCKFORD, ROCK ISLAND & ST. LOUIS.

292 miles. This road commences at Sterling, on Rock River, and on the road from Chicago to Fulton; follows the river to Cleveland, thence to Rock Island, thence to Monmouth and St. Louis.

Connections east and west at Rock Island, near New Windsor, Monmouth, Bushnell, Vermont, Chapin; and north at Whitehall and Brighton. Incidentally at Orion, Beardstown and Alton Junction. Generally at St. Louis and Rock Island.

Sterling is a large place, and has a valuable water power. Rock Island is a fine city and at the foot of the Island, while Moline—a large manufacturing place and virtually, as it really ought to be, a part of the city of Rock Island—is at the head. Opposite Rock Island is the city of Davenport. Milan, on Rock River, embraces a vast water power. Beardstown and Winchester are important county seats.

This road has valuable river connections at Rock Island, Beardstown and St. Louis. It passes through the grades of grass and dairy, stock, corn and fruit regions, and traverses a rich portion of the military tract.

OHIO & MISSISSIPPI.

Main line, St. Louis to Cincinnati.....	340	miles.
Branch, Lawrenceburg to Louisville	106	"
Branch, North Vernon to Louisville	53	"
Total..	499	"

Connections north and south at North Vernon, Seymour, Mitchell, Vincennes, Flora, Odin and Sandoval. General connections at Cincinnati and St. Louis.

River connections at same points, and at Louisville and Vincennes.

Vincennes and Lawrenceburg, in Indiana, are important towns. In Illinois, Olney, Salem and Carlyle are county seats; Lebanon is the seat of a college, and East St. Louis is a large and growing place.

It passes through the fruit region and a stock country as well.

Until recently it was a wide-graded road; now, narrow. Well officered and doing a large business.

SPRINGFIELD & ILLINOIS SOUTHEASTERN.

Beardstown to Pana..................................	88	miles.
Altamont to Shawneetown.................	112	"
Total built..	200	"

Connections east and west at Enfield, Flora, Altamont, Pana, Springfield; connections north and south at Edgewood, Pana, Springfield, Ashland, Virginia and Beardstown.

River connections at Shawneetown and Beardstown.

There are two regular passenger trains between Beardstown and Pana, each way, every week day, making close connections with the R., R. I. & St. L. at Beardstown and close connections, in the morning, east, and in the afternoon, with the Central at Pana.

The remainder of the road from Pana to Altamont on the T. H., V. & St. L. R. R. will probably be completed by the time this article goes to press, which will make a complete thoroughfare by way of this road and the R., R. I. & St. Louis to Rock Island, via Flora, Edgewood, Altamont, Pana, Springfield, Beardstown, Vermont, Bushnell and Monmouth. It is expected that the road will be extended to Keokuk. Its equipments are first-class and its management vigilant, thorough and enterprising.

Shawneetown is an old place of importance on the Ohio river. Fairfield is the county seat of Wayne. Most of the towns are new, but most of the road is through a country which has been settled for half a century and is famous for stock, corn and fruit.

INDIANAPOLIS, BLOOMINGTON & WESTERN.

Peoria via Pekin, Bloomington, Champaign, Urbana, Danville, Covington and Crawfordsville to Indianapolis....................................... 212 miles.

This road diverges from the P. P. & J. and the P. L. & D. at Pekin, crosses the C. A. & St. L. and the Ill. C. at Bloomington; the G. C. & S. at Farmer City; the Chicago branch of the I. C. at Champaign, the T. W. & W. and the C. D. & V. at Danville, and the L., N. A. & C. at Crawfordsville, and meets not less than ten railroads in the Union Depot at Indianapolis.

Crawfordsville and Covington are important Indiana county seats. Urbana is the county seat of Champaign and Pekin of Tazewell, and are all large and thrifty towns. Tremont, Mackinaw, LeRoy and Farmer City, in Illinois, are growing and enterprising places.

Part of the Illinois country has been long and thickly settled, while other portions were open to closer affiliations.

It has Illinois river connections at both Pekin and Peoria.

At Peoria it makes connection with roads leading to Keokuk, Burlington, Rock Island and Chicago.

It has three passenger trains, each way, daily.

PEORIA, PEKIN & JACKSONVILLE.

Entire length.. 83 miles.

This road leaves Peoria on the west side of the Illinois river, crosses by bridge at Pekin and passes through the important towns of Havana (county seat), Bath and Virginia. It follows the course of the Illinois for fifty miles and then crosses the productive Sangamon region, and through the fertile lands of Cass and Morgan. It leaves the I. B. & W. and P. L. & D. at Pekin, crosses the S. & I. S. E. at Virginia and makes connections east, west and south at Jacksonville. It is kept in first-class condition and its even grade makes it a desirable business road.

It makes very desirable connections at Peoria, Jacksonville and St. Louis.

PEORIA & ROCK ISLAND.

Entire length.. 91 miles.

From Orion, Henry Co., this road and the R., R. I. & St. L. run on the same track eighteen miles to Rock Island.

It is a new road; traverses the splendid agricultural and coal lands of Rock Island, Henry, Stark and Peoria; has the best of water connections at each end, and crosses the C. B. & Q. at Wyoming and Galva.

Cambridge is the county seat of Henry, and Toulon of Stark. Galva is a large place, and Princeton, Wyoming, La Fayette, Orion and Coal Valley are lively business towns.

Milan, formerly Camden Mills, is at the foot of the Black Hawk Tower, on Rock River, and is the seat of a fine water power and flourishing manufactures.

GILMAN, CLINTON & SPRINGFIELD.

Entire length.. 110 miles.

This is a new road; leaves the C. A. & St. L., T., W. & W. and S. & I. S. E. at Springfield, crosses the P. L. & D. at Mt. Pulaski, I. C. at Clinton, I. B. & W. at Farmer City and reaches the Chicago branch of I. C. and the T. P. & W. at Gilman.

Mt. Pulaski, Clinton, DeWitt, Farmer City and Gilman are all live towns.

Much of the country is well settled and a large portion is open to settlement.

Its track is number one, its stock first quality and its management good.

We shall notice several large roads in our next.

Kentucky Freemason.

R. W. Bro. A. G. Hodges, Grand Treasurer of Kentucky, has disposed of his interest in his paper to R. W. Bro. H. A. M. Henderson, now Grand Chaplain and Superintendent of Public Instruction in that State, who is to be sole proprietor. Bro. Henderson is an easy and intelligent writer and a capital editor.

The paper will be published at Frankfort. We wish him abundant success.

By the way, Bro. Henderson, "The Story of the Northeast Corner" should be credited to THE TROWEL.

Haines' Legal Adviser.

The subscription books of this law periodical were destroyed by the late fire at Chicago. The publisher asks the favor that postmasters will send to him a list of persons who received the Adviser through their offices, or that subscribers will take the trouble to forward their names—there being no other way in which the list of subscribers can be restored.

The publisher also announces that the Legal Adviser will soon be enlarged and greatly improved. He has lost largely by the fire, and hopes that his old friends throughout the State—as he has many among justices and town officers—may renew their patronage. Terms, $1.00 a year.

The Lakeside Monthly.

We are glad to welcome this valuable periodical once more to our table. It comes forth in all its former beauty and simple elegance, bearing a charmed and glowing life. Its principal article is "The Story of Chicago," well told, in five parts, closing with new Chicago, and followed by several articles in relation to fires of the present and past, historical and real. A good feature of the whole is the display of several plates, among which are pictures of the Water Works, Chamber of Commerce, Court House and several hotels, business blocks and churches.

One word to our Lakeside people. You do well to tell the story of Chicago. But now it is told our reading people will expect you to forget that Chicago is Illinois or the great west, and will also expect that while her vast commercial, social, educational and esthetical interests shall be well cared for, yet that the history, resources, expansions and developments of our State and the west shall bear a greater proportion to the whole than heretofore. He is wise who profits by lessons of the past.

Vick's Illustrated Catalogue for 1872.

Vick's annual of 120 pages interspersed with beautiful floral, landscape and garden pictures, and a fine one of himself, is a very welcome and timely guest. Such of our readers as desire advice in regard to floral, horticultural or garden cultivation, or wish to get rare and good seeds, roots, bulbs or cuttings will do well to enclose twenty-five cents to James Vick, Rochester, N. Y. for a copy.

Our Schools.

Through the politeness of R. W. Bro. J. A. Hawley, we are in receipt of the first annual report of the public schools in Dixon, including a history of the same. Bro. Hawley is President of the Trustees, and Bro. J. D. Crabtree, W. M. of No. 7, is Secretary. Each side of the river has a large school-house and the schools are in an enviable condition of prosperity.

WE regret to learn from the Kentucky Freemason that our revered cotemporary, Comp. Philip Swigert, is seriously ill.

Conflagration of Chicago.

We acknowledge with thanks the receipt of Richard's statistical and illustrated map of the great conflagration, published by the R. P. Studley Company, St. Louis.

Thanks to R. W. Bro. G. P. Randall for his pamphlet upon the fire in Chicago, and what, and what are not, fire-proof buildings. He has put on a new harness and displays great energy and courage.

HON. J. S. Bradford, bookseller and newsdealer at the old post office on sixth street, in this city, has placed on our table a little volume of poems, by Mr. Geo. P. Carr, of Galesburg, entitled the "River of Life." There is variety, soul, wit and sentiment interspersed, and more than usual talent. His address to Mr. Thomas Catt, would benefit many a love lorn swain. By all means go to Bradford's, buy the book, read and laugh, and then dream in the sweet sleep that follows.

Thanks

To G. H. Priest Hawley for a copy of the by-laws of Nachusa Chapter.

Selected Poetry.

Very Choice Stanzas.

Madam, put this in your husband's watch-case.

Speak kindly, gently to thy wife,
She knows enough of sorrow;
Oh, seek not from each petty ill,
An angry word to borrow.
For in her heart there's treasured love;
Oh, prize its golden worth;
One gentle word, one smile of thine,
Can ever call it forth.

When thou art harsh, and stern and cold,
And from thine own dear home
The sunshine of domestic love
In sorrow seeks to roam,
Upon her heart thy cold words fall
And chill life's tender life;
Then, oh, amidst thy trials all,
Speak kindly to thy wife.

Speak softly, kindly to thy wife;
She may have left a home
Of cherished love, and to thine own
But scarce as far have come,
Though five or ten have told the time,
And thou hast shared its strife—
Whene'er thy footsteps homeward turn,
Speak kindly to thy wife.

Speak kindly, gently to thy wife,
She may be growing old,
And soon ye both may garnered lie
In shadows of the mould.

Sir, put this in your wife's mirror.

Have faith in thy husband, confide in his vow.
Should he speak unkindly, be true to him now.
Though e'en in thine anguish thy bright hopes are dim,
Whatever awaits thee, be faithful to him.

Have faith in thy husband, nor seek from thy home
A balm for thy sorrow which sometimes may come;
'Mid all thy dejection trust not in another;
But let us have faith and be kind to each other.

Have faith in thy husband, and when he is tried
By trials and crosses, come stand by his side,
And try with affection to lighten his heart;
There, e'en if thou failest, 'tis acting thy part.

Have faith in thy husband, thy own home within,
Whate'er be his coldness, true kindness may win;
Though e'en in thy sorrow thy fond hopes are dim,
Yet still he may love thee—be faithful to him.

Old Grandfather Graybeard's Corner.

Dear Bro. Reynolds:

In a former article I gave you the Entered 'Prentice's song. I do not know who was the author, for the most of those old Masonic songs were published anonymously and are among the first that were given to the world; nor does the idea appear to be carried out in any of the old ballads, that is, a song for each degree and for each officer. Thomas Smith Webb saw this defect and hastened to remedy it by writing and setting to music the Master's and Warden's songs, and they have never been excelled—so think your old fogies—and being assembled once more and in merry mood, we will let Bro. Smith give them in his own inimitable style:

MASTER'S SONG.

I sing the Mason's glory,
Whose prying mind doth burn,
Unto complete perfection,
Our mysteries to learn.
Not those who visit lodges
To eat and drink their fill;
Not those who at our meetings
Hear lectures 'gainst their will;
But only those whose pleasure
At every lodge can be,
To improve themselves by lectures,
In glorious Masonry.

Hail, glorious Masonry!
Hail, glorious Masonry!
To improve themselves by lectures
In glorious Masonry.

The faithful, worthy brother,
Whose heart can feel for grief,
Whose bosom with compassion
Steps forth to its relief,
Whose soul is ever ready
Around him to diffuse
The principles of Masons,
And guard them from abuse.
These are thy sons, whose pleasure,
At every lodge 'twill be,
To improve themselves by lectures
In glorious Masonry.

King Solomon, our patron,
Transmitted this command:
"The faithful and praiseworthy
True light must understand;
And my descendants, also,
Who're seated in the EAST,
Have not fulfilled their duty,
Till light has reach'd the WEST."
Therefore our highest pleasure,
At every lodge should be,
To improve ourselves by lectures,
In glorious Masonry.

My duty at my station,
As Master in the Chair,
Obliges me to summon
Each brother to prepare;
That all may be enabled,
By slow though sure degrees,
To answer in rotation,
With honor and with ease.
Such are thy sons, whose pleasure,
At every lodge 'twill be,
To improve themselves by lectures,
In glorious Masonry.

That is very good, and if the advice was only followed, what a power of good it would effect. The next call was for the SENIOR WARDEN'S SONG.

When the Senior Warden, standing in the West,
Calls us from our labors to partake of rest,
We unite while he recites the duties of a Mason,
On the level meet, on the square we part,
Repeats each worthy brother, this rule in view,
We thus renew our friendship for each other.

When our work is over, implements secure,
Each returning homeward, with intentions pure,
Our wives we kiss, give sweethearts bliss,
Which makes them both love Masons;
And thus, we say, enjoy each day,
At home and at our meetings;
Our sweethearts eased, our wives well pleased,
Saluted with such greetings.

When the Senior Warden, &c.

Now, there's advice and example too. Go right home when the night's work's done; don't stop to while away an hour or two at billiards or over your cups, and then tell your wife that they had extra work at the lodge to-night, or she will soon think you'd better lodge at home. The last is the

JUNIOR WARDEN'S SONG.

When the Junior Warden calls us from our labor,
When the sun is at meridian height,
Let us merrily unite, most cheerily,
With social harmony new joys invite.
One and all, at the call, to the feast repairing,
All around joys resound, each the pleasure sharing.

Mirth and jollity, without frivolity,
Pervade our meetings at the festive board.
Justice, temperance and prudence govern us;
There's naught but harmony amongst us heard.

One and all, at the call,
To the feast repairing,
All around joys resound.
Each the pleasure sharing.

Thus we may ever enjoy the pleasant moments
Given unto us from the Master's Chair,
Till the sun an hour has passed meridian,
And then each brother to his work repair.

One and all, hear the call,
From the feast repairing,
All around gavels sound,
Each the labor sharing.

FREEMASONRY IN THE HOLY LAND.

THESE interesting lectures became so popular last winter that I found it impossible to fill engagements required in this State, and at the earnest solicitation of friends, have concluded to spend a portion of the winter here. I therefore make the following proposition to the several Masonic lodges in Illinois and elsewhere.

To deliver my Lodge Lecture on Masonic Researches in the Holy Land, verifying the truth of Masonic ritual and tradition, and exhibit some interesting relics from Jerusalem. I will also give an account of my visit to the English lodges, with the forms of initiation, passing, raising, schools of instruction, banquets, signs, passes, &c., &c. My charge for this Lecture is twenty dollars and expenses while at your place.

My Public Lecture is descriptive of Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Easter Week in the Holy City, Gethsemane, the Mount of Olives, and the surrounding country.

My charge for the two Lectures is thirty dollars and expenses while at your place. For admission to the public lectures you can charge such sum as you see fit. Properly managed, it will pay the entire expenses and ought to leave a fair surplus for the benefit of the Lodge.

THE STAR,

with its five points in Blue, Yellow, White Red and Green colors, with the emblems in each and the Pentagon in the center, with its usual divisions, letters and devices.

Over the Star, in Gold are the words,

"I have seen His Star in the East,"

while beneath it, in Green are the words,

"And have come to worship Him."

The border is blue and red, and the spaces are filled with ornaments in gold.

On the opposite side is a certificate embordered in Red and Blue, with large letters "E. S.," in light shading, in the centre, over which is printed a blank certificate, with room in one corner for seal, to be signed by the Matron and attested by the Secretary. On the end is a line for a signature of the lady receiving this certificate. The thought camo from Bro. Hubbard—the design is our own.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are se down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

The Masonic Trowel.

Masonry is a System of Morality, a Supporter of Law, and the Friend of Religion.

VOL. X. WHOLE NO. 120. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, FEBRUARY, 1872. NEW SERIES NO. 10.

William Rounseville's Department.

Opposed to Religion.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

"Your lodge our religion opposes."
It does not appear in that light;
Let us hear what your knowledge discloses,—
'Tis possible you may be right.

"Belief in a God?" On the threshold
The neophyte learns to adore,
And at every new step we endeavor
His mind to impress with it more.

"Love God!" with us 'tis an axiom,
That love is a duty we owe
To God as Creator and Savior
As much as full hearts can bestow.

"Love our neigbor?" Our solemn profession
Fulfillment of that law requires,
And he is no worthy companion
Whose action it never inspires.

To love with his strength the Creator
His neighbor as he loves himself,
Is the gist of a Mason's religion
Regardless of honor or pelf.

We do not oppose such religion—
If this is the kind that you mean,
We give you God-speed on your journey
And burdens assist you to bear.

The Triune Ballot.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

The theory of Freemasonry is that no one shall be received into the lodge without due inquiry and examination into his character. This being done in a proper manner, there is little danger that the Fraternity will be imposed upon by unworthy persons. If it is done, the inquiry will embrace more than the biography of the individual for a few months. It should go over his whole life. A man may control his passions and cover his vices for a series of years, and then not be thoroughly reformed. We should be extremely careful about receiving as members, those who at any time of life have been unfit subjects for our mysteries. But when this examination has once been made, and has been pronounced by the ballot of the lodge which elects him, to be sufficient, we have never been able to apprehend the justice in submitting his character to another, and even to a third scrutiny, before he can receive the degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry.

Assuming that the examination has been exhaustive as it ought to be, in our opinion there should be but one ballot, and that no objection should thereafter be made against him for anything which transpired previous to this investigation. If this be just, then there is no need of a further ordeal for him to pass through, because he has been received for the first degree with whatever imperfections might have been attached to him. The lodge has decided him a fit subject for Masonry with the character which the first scrutiny gives him, and that result cannot be reviewed. It is pretty well established that no one can be proceeded against for misdemeanor preferred before his reception, unless wilful concealment is connected therewith. Then what is the need of a still further scrutiny into the character of the brother when he petitions for a higher degree? In our way of viewing the subject, it is wholly unnecessary.

It is more than unnecessary; it is unjust. When a man petitions for the degrees of Masonry, he expects to receive them all, if any; and he would never attempt to become a Mason did he not believe he would reach the concluding degree. To be a Fellow Craft without the Master's degree, is to be nothing. To be an Entered Apprentice with no power to take the succeeding steps is worse than nothing. It gives no privileges, confers no rights, invests with no power. It abridges his privileges in that he cannot apply to another lodge, and does not give him even the poor satisfaction of sporting the badge of the lowest degree of Masonry in procession, even at a funeral.

But the rejection for the second is as positive as for the first. There is no explanation, no appeal. The Entered Apprentice has no redress. He is not even furnished with the information by which he might possibly right the wrong, or heal the difficulty. He cannot know why he was rejected, or who opposed him. This is not only unnecessary and unjust, but it is unfraternal also. It is a cardinal law of Masonry that no member of the Order shall be tried on charges without having an opportunity to defend himself and disprove them. But in the case under consideration, he is rejected without trial, condemned without hearing and suspended without remedy.

It would be a natural inference, we think, that the conferring of the first degree should invest him with the privileges and rights of Fraternity, so far as to enable him to defend his character when attacked, and to answer when objections were made to his advancement. It should go further than this. It should so clothe him with the attributes of brotherhood as to give him the privilege of demanding to be confronted with his accuser, to have a copy of the charges against him, and to be secure from all charges of a private nature to which he could not be allowed to respond.

It is somewhat singular that the argument for the triune ballot is founded upon this very invasion of fraternal right. It is said to be a sifting process by which, when an unworthy person happens to pass the first scrutiny, he may be suspended by the second. This not only deprives him of the right to answer, but what is almost as foundationless in justice, allows an ex parte trial to take place on points of his character which have been approved by the first ballot. He may be rejected by a member for acts done and committed before the first scrutiny, and which ought then to have been fatal to his reception, if ever; and the possibility of thus deciding in the second instance is the argument used why the second and third ballot should be had.

It may well be admitted that it is a shorter way to suspend or expel, than that laid down in the code of Masonry. A court-martial usually makes short work of a prisoner who falls into its hands being suspected of being a spy; but we have never heard sane men advocate that the military courts should take the place of the civil tribunals, merely because they arrived at conclusions more expeditiously.

It having been seen that the second and third ballots are unnecessary, unjust and unfraternal, it remains to provide for the suspension or delay of an Entered Apprentice applying for the higher degrees. We answer most confidently that the proper, necessary, just and fraternal method to proceed, is to prefer charges. If the candidate is guilty of acts which should debar promotion, let them be charged against him, and allow him to respond as in the higher de

If he is guilty, let it so appear, and that is a sufficient reason why he should go no further; but let him have an opportunity to respond and vindicate himself. It is a very possible thing that a silent ballot may be given through personal spite, and that the member who would adopt this secret mode of thrusting the knife beneath the fifth rib of his neighbor, would not assume the responsibility of preferring charges merely to gratify an unforgiving disposition.

The three ballots, in our opinion, gives too great liberty in this regard to members to gratify private malice. That the power is sometimes, if not frequently, used for that purpose, no one will deny. Those who are cognizant of the working of a lodge too well know that cases of this nature often occur.

It is presumed that it will not be contended that the triune ballot is a landmark of Masonry, because in many jurisdictions it is unknown. It is rather an innovation upon the ancient position, and one, which, in the opinion of many devoted Masons, ought to be immediately discontinued. Until it is so, it will be seized upon by the passionate and unforgiving to injure and wrong those who fall under their displeasure. When it is done, we shall try an Entered Apprentice as we do a Master Mason, on charges preferred. If he is found guilty, he goes no further until the impediment is removed. If his innocence is shown, no protest or private ballot ought to delay his progress.

We regard this as an important subject; one that should be fully and thoroughly canvassed, and as time and opportunity do not present themselves in Grand Lodge, we know of no better way than to discuss it through the press of the Order. This is all the apology we have to offer for thus intruding our opinions and convictions on the readers of The Trowel.

Qualifications of Officers.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

I am heartily glad that what I have written on the subject of official qualifications in the lodge, has made the brethren think and talk. The great difficulty is that we attend to those duties without thinking. It will not be disputed that all other things being equal, a commanding presence and bearing are desirable in an officer. A man may be in possession of these qualities and yet be unfit for the station in the east; but if he possesses them, he is better fitted for the place than he would be without them. It appears to me that there will be none to dispute this position. Then is not a commanding and dignified carriage one of the accomplishments of a good Master? He is better with than without it, and hence he is not as good a presiding officer as could be, when he lacks this qualification.

There is much in the impression which the candidate receives when introduced to the Master. I suppose every one has read of the preacher who was called to fill the desk of one who had an immense amount of dignity and physical force, the substitute being a small, ill-shaped man of singular expression of countenance. When he arose to commence his discourse, his head barely surmounted the cushion, and an eagle beak and spreading lips did not serve to make the impression received by his audience any more favorable. But when, in a squeaking voice he announced his text, as he appeared to be struggling to keep his head in sight from the pulpit, "It is I, be not afraid!" the ludicrousness of the scene was too great, and the solemn, church-going people could not restrain their laughter, and the audience burst into a very unchristian roar.

Though this is an extreme case, it will the better serve to illustrate the subject. It would not be good policy—it would be very wrong to install a man as Master of a lodge with whom there was a possibility of getting up such, or a scene remotely approaching it; and yet most of us have seen something that somewhat resembled it. It is time that we should remember that every good member cannot make a good officer. My friend may be one of the best of members, but that is only one of many qualifications for office.

When the article was written which the editor of this paper says has made some talk out of meeting, I did not for a moment suppose that every lodge could "fill the bill." It would have been much nearer my belief that none could do so. I am much pleased to learn that there are some which are able to provide themselves with such Masters as I have attempted to describe. But that very fact is a strong proof with me that I was right—at least that I did not set my estimate of what should enter into the character of a good officer too high.

The precepts of the Christian religion enjoin a condition of piety and morality to which few, even the most devoted, ever attain. But we do not thence conclude that the standard of Christianity is raised too high. Rather we argue that we should the more strive to come as near that state of moral perfection to which it points as we are able. We do not expect to become perfect, but we have this for our consolation, that we may strive to our utmost, and there is no danger that we shall surpass that point in our journey to perfection that we are expected to reach. Strive as we may we are a little short of perfection.

We apply the same principle to the subject under consideration. Not many, and perhaps none, can come up to the point of perfection. Few lodges have members of whom they can make such Masters as we want. What then? Shall we say there is no such thing as approximating to perfection? Shall we say there is no degree of excellence to be attained, because absolute perfection eludes our grasp? Shall we have no Master because we have none who can entirely "fill the bill?"

It is probable that none of us have all the qualifications to enable us to become perfect in our ministrations in the east. It is just as likely that every lodge has one or more members who possess more than one of the requisite qualifications. What we should do then is to choose those to minister at the altar of Freemasonry who will best be qualified to perform the duties. Choose the best men, and then see to it that they use all their gifts, natural and acquired, to perform their duties as well as possible. Though we may none of us stand on the pinnacle of the mountain of perfection, yet it is our business to see that we climb as near that point as our capacities and opportunities will admit.

Saved by Masonry.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

In the days when steamboating on the western rivers was at the zenith of its prosperity, and fast boats were run by faster men, the chances of a safe passage were few and far between—the accidents were the rule, the safe journey rather the exception. And yet we can hardly find it in our hearts to blame those who only followed out the wishes of their patrons, who, as a general thing would prefer to run the risk of blowing up a few times rather than be passed by an opposition boat. When timid old women gave lard to feed the flames under the trembling boilers, and invalids seeking health in travel, were the first to propose that a barrel of rosin should be pitched into the fire to add speed to the lagging craft, we cannot wonder that most persons also, partaking of the general excitement, should offer to sit upon the safety-valve until victory was won, or a short passage made "beyond the river."

It was in that age of steamboat racing, and consequently of steamboat explosions, that an acquaintance of ours who lived at the south, and who had been spending a summer at the north, took passage for New Orleans on board a boat lying at La Salle. We would not intimate that the La Salle boat was going through to New Orleans, for that was a feat not often accomplished by the smaller boats, but he was to exchange that for a larger one at St. Louis, and run his risk of completing his journey on that.

Our friend was a young man, just commencing life for himself, and consequently not materially burdened with funds, and when he had secured his passage, found that his exchequer was even lower than usual. In fact he found that he had not more than enough money to pay his cigar bill while on the trip, and that by a system of self-denial to which he had not been accustomed. But that could be managed provided the trip was made safely, and trusting to former immunities from accident and the care of Providence, he went on board.

The weather was fine, the company on board agreeable, the management of the cuisine admirable, and the voyage commenced with all the appliances of a pleasant and successful trip. As it happened, another boat belonging to another line started out nearly at the same time as that upon which our friend embarked. Of course there was a strife between them which should reach St. Louis first. Each stopped at pretty much every landing along the Illinois, and consequently, sometimes one was in advance and sometimes the other. Town after town was passed and still neither had gained any advantage. The passengers began to partake of the desire cherished by the officers and crew to beat their antagonist, and soon opinions were expressed backed by bets of a magnitude that would be astonishing now, on the speed of the respective crafts.

The firemen joined in the excitement and dark clouds of heavy smoke continually rolled from the chimneys, while the steam in its struggles to escape found new seams in the boilers, and hissed louder as if in joy at its emancipation. The opposition boat, in a stretch of ten miles and no stop, was drawing slowly ahead. The ever present rosin was resorted to and sticks of wood dipped in the inflammable substance, were placed in liberal quantities under the quivering boilers. This pushed her ahead so the next landing was made simultaneously. While at the shore the fires were kept up and no steam allowed to escape for the few minutes required to discharge and receive freight and passengers, for it was necessary to come off a victor in the race, that every means of accelerating speed should be adopted.

The passenger last on the plank or "stage" had just reached the deck, the line had been cast off, the ponderous wheels, starting with an unusual speed, commenced their revolutions, and the vessel was already backing out from the levee, when a vast volume of steam and smoke, filled with sticks, iron and timbers, instantaneously followed by a deafening sound, proved to the experienced in travel that the boat had blown up. Our friend was in the cabin nearly over the bursting boiler, and even as the hot steam came through the thin barrier on which he stood, he felt his footing give way and that he would fall into the vortex created by the explosion below. As quick as thought, he sprang to the door, and as he reached it he saw the floor upon which he had been standing, settle into the fiery abyss below.

On looking about he saw that the "hurricane deck" was uninjured, and to it he made his way. There he was above the blinding steam, which, owing to the prevalence of a wind blowing off shore, passed away nearly horizontally across the stream. He also found on arriving on the upper deck that he was severely scalded. In an instant his condition flashed through his mind—badly injured, with no money in his pockets and among strangers. On the impulse of the moment he gave that sign which has saved thousands who were ready to perish and which, in a civilized country was never made in vain. The pain from his wounds became so great that in a few moments he fell in a state of helpless insensibility.

When the explosion took place, there was quite a number of people on the levee, who were watching the steamer's departure, but immediately thereafter, and in an incredible space of time, it seemed as if the whole population had congregated there. As soon as the disabled vessel was brought to shore, she was boarded by two or three of the best known citizens, among whom was a physician, who made their way in spite of all obstacles, to the upper deck. They had seen the sign and were proceeding to answer it. A litter was improvised from a shutter wrenched from the "texas," and the yet insensible man was borne carefully and tenderly to the best and most commodious dwelling in the city.

The citizens cared for the injured persons in a very kind and Christian manner, kept them until the next boat passed down, and then as they were able, they placed them on board and bid them God-speed on their way.

When our friend came to himself, he was lying on a comfortable bed in a spacious room, and anxious faces, both male and female, were bending over him. His wounds had been dressed and he was now comparatively free from pain. Addressing himself to one who was nearest to him he inquired:

"Where am I?"

"Where you will be cared for. Do not now ask any more questions."

"But you are strangers!"

"But we are brethren."

"I am penniless. I cannot reward you for your kindness."

"We found you poor and penniless, almost naked, unable to contribute to your own necessities, and now though among strangers, you are also among friends."

"Masons?"

"Members of the Universal Brotherhood."

For weeks the wounded man was compelled to quarter upon the hospitality of his new friends, for he was fearfully injured. But at last the day came when he could safely depart. He had before explained his destitute condition, and had only to thank his preservers for saving his life; for to this day he believes that the medical aid and kindly care which he received were the means of preserving his life, and that with the ordinary care that a person so thrown upon strangers, would have received, he must have died.

As he was about to continue his journey, so suddenly brought nearly to an end, he took the hand of the noble brother into whose house he had been taken, and thanked him with such words as a warm and grateful heart could frame to pronounce under such circumstances, and pledged himself to remunerate him so far as money could do it, as soon as his means would allow. The old man, with watery eyes and unsteady voice, said as he grasped his hand:

"My brother, let this be a striking lesson to you, and should you ever meet a friend, but much more a worthy brother Mason, in like destitute circumstances, you should contribute to his necessities as far as your ability will permit without material injury to yourself."

"God helping me, I will remember the timely admonition."

Accompanied to the boat, the restored brother then bade his Masonic brethren adieu, and probably has not since met them; but there is a warm place in his heart as there would be by his fireside, for those who were faithful to Masonic obligation and sought him out and saved him in his dire calamity.

An Ancient Mason.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Occasionally we meet one of the ancient members of our Craft, whose life reaches back beyond the time that tried, "so as by fire," the Masonic institutions, and separated the dross from the pure metal, compacting and diminishing its bulk, but enhancing its value

When we come into the presence of one of these faithful ones, we feel something of that thrill of awe which Moses felt when he heard the command: "Put off the shoes from thy feet for the place whereon thou standest is holy." We revere and venerate those who stood firm and unblenchingly against that crusade of fanaticism and folly which swept over the land, ostracising some of the best men, and condemning some of the best principles which the world has ever produced; who stood nobly in defense of those principles and with a courage not naturally in human hearts, braved the anathemas of the church, and the still stronger demands of public opinion.

Such a man lately visited us. John Wham was born in county Antrim, Ireland, in the month of February, 1782, consequently he is near ninety years of age. He was made a Mason over sixty years ago, in the city of London, England. Not long after that event he removed to the State of New York, in Clinton county, where he has ever since resided. He was there during the Morgan excitement, and a member of the Presbyterian church. At that period, the members of most of the churches looked upon Masons as little better than fiends incarnate, and very many ecclesiastical bodies not only refused to receive as members, Masons who adhered to the lodge, but they commenced a crusade against those members who had already been received, who would not renounce the Order.

Among those who were thus attacked was Mr. Wham. He had always preserved an upright walk and pure conversation, was a power in the church, and known to be very decided in his opinions. It was worth while for the church to make an effort, at least, to continue such a man in the church, not only on account of the pecuniary aid that would thereby be insured, but for the social and moral influence he would exert. Accordingly a committee of the most influential members was raised for the purpose of "laboring with Brother Wham." They repaired to his residence, introduced the subject which was the cause of their mission, and proceeded to enlighten him on the exceeding sinfulness of Masonry, no doubt giving him some new facts concerning it that he had never learned in the ritual or instructions of the Order.

He listened attentively, and even respectfully, for he was determined to demean himself in a Christian manner, whatever the committee might do. They expatiated upon the assumed fact that a man could not be a Mason and at the same time be a Christian. They told him that his love for Masonry drew away his love for the church and for the Savior. They set forth the horrid oaths which they assured him all Masons took upon themselves, and which at that time were published as the real obligations of Masonry. They called his attention to the belief then so prevalent, that Masons had murdered Morgan, and assured him that there was no mistake on that point—Morgan was cruelly butchered by Masons. When he expressed doubts upon that subject, the committee held up their hands in holy horror, and in their most pious tones demanded:

"Don't you know the Masons killed Morgan?"

"I know nothing of the kind!" was the answer.

"Don't you believe he was killed by the Masons?" they inquired.

"Not having any proof either way," said the old man, "I can scarcely say I believe, or that I disbelieve it. But of this I have no doubt, if he took all those oaths which you say he did, they certainly ought to have killed him."

The committee voted him incorrigible, gave a holy groan over his depravity and left him with the alternative, either to be expelled from the church or to renounce Masonry. He informed them that he wanted no time to consider the question. He should never renounce Masonry, and they could expel him from their church whenever it suited their inclination or convenience. Thus in the day of trial, he preserved his integrity, was faithful to Masonic principle and dared the ecclesiastical censure of the church which then ruled with almost supreme sway over the social circles of the Empire State.

And now, at the age of ninety years, he is an active Mason, and shortened his visit to his son, because he would not forego the pleasure of attending the celebration of the festival of St, John, which he had not missed for a long series of years. Though at his advanced age, he made the journey of near a thousand miles alone and safely, and returned in the same manner, refusing to be attended by any one, saying he was able to take care of himself. He says while he lives he shall not forget the festival of St. John.

The visit here was made under the firm conviction that it would be his last journey until he travels to "that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns." A few months since his wife died, since which time he has been "setting his house in order," and the journey here was a part of the business of preparation for the last that man shall perform.

He has returned to his home. May the great lights in Masonry illumine his pathway to the land of silence; the all-seeing eye watch over his welfare, and when faith shall be lost in sight, and hope in fruition, may he experience the boundlessness of that charity which is greater than either, and which is co-existent with the being of the All-Father.

Communication.

GALESBURG, Dec. 23d, 1871.

Bro. Reynolds:

I have been much pleased and instructed in reading the communications of Bro. Rounseville, in THE TROWEL, but I have a word of fault-finding with his article headed "Extent of Protest," in the last number. It contains, as I believe, some very grave errors; and however unpleasant, and perhaps thankless, the task of pointing out those errors, viewing the matter as I do, I cannot well avoid the duty.

As I understand Masonry, its very soul and essence is fraternity and congeniality of spirit. The more there is of these in the lodge, the more there will be of harmony and happiness, and the greater will be the influence for good of the lodge over its members. Now, one of the most effective means of securing and perpetuating that harmony, is the rule or law of the unanimous ballot. This law meets the candidate at the threshold, and is the great instrumentality for keeping out disturbing elements; and the right to object to conferring the degrees upon a candidate who has been elected, is merely auxiliary to this law of the ballot, making it complete and effectual. The meaning and intent of the rule is that no one shall be made a Mason who is offensive to any member of the lodge. We should remember that the lodge was made for man, not man for the lodge; and it is, or should be a family of congenial spirits and not a gathering of discordant elements.

Now Bro. R. finds fault with this "right of protest," because it is so effective in keeping out disturbing elements. Because the protest is more effectual in excluding the objectionable candidate, (objectionable to the objector at least,) he draws the inference that the objector purposely absents himself when the ballot is passed so as to have the better means of holding the candidate at bay. Suppose this is true, who shall condemn the objector for it? It is his house and happiness, as well as yours and mine, that he is defending against what he, however mistakenly, believes to be a troublesome or dangerous intruder. We all have our likes and dislikes, and those feelings are rarely without some foundation. But even supposing them to be so, in a given case, our happiness is none the less involved in their proper respect. We may not be able to give a sensible reason for them, but they are, to us, none the less real on that account.

> "I do not like you Dr. Fell;
> The reason why I cannot tell;
> But this I know, full well,
> I do not like you Dr. Fell."

Even in a partnership for business purposes, no one can be taken into the firm without the consent of all the members.

Bro. R.'s argument goes upon the ground that either the candidate has a right to be admitted, or that the lodge has a right to have him admitted in either case over the objection of the objector. Now I deny both of these propositions. First, no one has a right to admission; it is through the grace of the lodge that one gains admission. And second, the lodge has no right to admit except by the unanimous consent of the members. Each member has an absolute veto on admission, and most justly so; and there should be no coercion, compulsion or pressure. If Masons are free men, they must, especially in this matter, be permitted to act in freedom. You may persuade, reason, labor with, as much as you please, but beyond this you have no right to go. You have no right to substitute your will, mind or determination for his.

It is sometimes said, that so long as the objector keeps his reasons to himself, his objection must be respected by the lodge; but if he makes them known, it is then the right of the lodge to pass upon their sufficiency; or in other words, the making known his reasons dispenses at once with the Masonic law of the unanimous ballot, and substitutes in its place the majority rule of political bodies. Does the discovery of his reasons deprive the brother of his rights, or change the character of the Institution? Does the lodge then cease to be a body of congenial fraternal spirits, and become a body politic? It must be so, if Bro. R.'s reasoning is sound. The discovery of his reasons may enable the lodge, knowing where the difficulty lies, to more effectually reason with and persuade him; but when it undertakes to compel him to withdraw his objections, or to bring in the candidate over his head, it does violence to one of the greatest, most important, and useful of the landmarks.

It will, perhaps, be said that a member may be narrow-minded, pig-headed, or, if you please, devilish; very well, the lodge takes a brother as a man takes a wife, "for better or for worse." If it finds him to be possessed of these unpleasant qualities it must bear with him or expel him; and a lodge made up of sensible Masons will think several times before it will drive out or expel a brother to take in an outsider. But so long as the member is in good standing he is indeed master of the situation, and however unreasonable, in the estimation of the lodge, his objections are, such unreasonableness can be no ground for expelling him, because the lodge cannot be the judge of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of his objections. In undertaking to decide that question for him, the lodge strikes at the very foundation of Masonry. I know we are often admonished to lay aside all private pique and prejudice; but who shall decide whether the objector is influenced by mere pique or prejudice. In this matter the lodge may admonish, but the member alone can decide.

I had written much more on this subject, more especially in direct review of the different positions of Bro. R.'s article, but I find I am making this communication too long, and so here close it.

G. C. LANPHERE.

The Royal Arch Abroad.

The following reliable information respecting Royal Arch Masonry abroad, cannot fail to be of interest to our readers:

"In Scotland, the Grand Chapter was formed A. D. 1817, but for about seventy years before the degree was worked in that country, although irregularly. The Grand Lodge of Scotland only recognizes the three Craft degrees AND THE MARK. The Royal Arch is represented by an independent Grand Chapter, and is worked differently to England, as the Mark, Past Master, Excellent Master, and the 'Veils,' are required preparatory to the degree of Royal Arch being taken. This body has granted warrants to work the Mark degree in England, notwithstanding the legal formation of a Grand Lodge to work that degree, A. D. 1856, and which now has one hundred Mark lodges under its rule, and is in excellent working order. In Ireland the Grand Lodge is confined to the Craft, only it and all the older grand bodies are in unison, and a regular series or grade of degrees, from the first to the thirty-third, is reciprocally worked. The Grand Chapter only gives the Mark, 'Veils,' and Royal Arch degree. Before a brother can take the Rose Croix he is required to be thirty-three years of age, seven years a Master Mason, and to have been admitted a Mark Master, Royal Arch, Knight of the Sword, Knight of the East and West, Knight Templar, and Knight of Malta, and have been a Master of a lodge for six months! The degrees of 'Royal and Select Masters' are not known in either country, and are virtually given in the first degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, of which they are copies. The Grand Chapter of Ireland approaches the nearest to Capitular Masonry in the United States, although, as in England and Ireland, 'High Priesthood' is not recognized.

"In England the Royal Arch is most carefully worked, is exclusive in its membership and has attained a high degree of perfection, especially in London, where many of its preceptors are able exponents and ritualists of the sublime mysteries of the Order.

"Under the Grand Lodge of England there are over 1,200 active lodges, 400 Royal Arch Chapters and 100 Mark lodges (under Grand Lodge of Mark Masters). The lodges of the 'Union of 1813' were taken alternately from the 'Ancients' and 'Moderns,' the latter coming first, so that the mere number is not an evidence of date alone, as e. g., No. 2 is much older than No. 1, and so No. 4 and 3, and Nos. 2 and 4 than the Grand Steward's Lodge, which comes first. The 'Moderns' are easily recognized by turning to the calendar published by the Grand Lodge, as those only have the dates of their constitution given before 1813. As each chapter takes the number of the lodge to which it is attached, it would be wrong to suppose that, as the last chapter mentioned in the calendar for 1870 is No. 1,222, that there were over one thousand chapters under England, as some of our American friends have done, whereas, in reality, there are not now half that number.

"The Grand Lodge of Ireland has some 400 lodges and the Grand Chapter has about eighty chapters on its roll. The latter are numbered according to the lodges under which they work.

"In Scotland there are also about 400 lodges* (although the last granted bears the number 1,014 under Ireland in 1869, there are not 500 really in existence in that country as the numbers are not altered every now and then, as in England especially, and in Scotland, the vacancies being occasioned by lodges resigning warrants on forming new grand lodges abroad). The Grand Chapter musters some 100 chapters and about twelve Mark lodges, working under its authority out of that country.

"The Grand Lodge of England has done a great work. 'The immense Masonic constellation that now shines in the far Pacific seas has arisen in light and beauty of late years. Remote and almost mystical corners of the globe have received the benefits of Freemasonry under its auspices. From Japan to Gibraltar, from the Cold Coast to the Himalayan mountains, through the ancient empire of Cathay and the bleak regions of Newfoundland, the blessings of our friendly Craft have been spread through its fostering care,' and what is more, it is virtually the great parent of every Grand Lodge under the sun, and the Grand mother of about two millions of Masons now walking the earth, who, if they but followed its teachings, might soon change this world into a moral (as well as it is now, a terrestrial) paradise."—Comp. Wm. Jas. Hughan.

*Royal Arch Masonry, as in Great Britain, is only worked where the English language is spoken verbally. It is unknown in France, Germany, and, in fact, everywhere but in England, Scotland, Ireland, the United States and British possessions. The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, in the 18th degree, supplies the main features for the foreign brethren.

GEN. Robert Anderson, of the U. S. Army, who died recently at Nice, France, was made a Knight Templar in Trenton, N. J.

A CLOWN, insincere and mercenary himself is quick to ascribe the same bad qualities to men of real talents and eminent virtues.

Selected Poetry.

The Past.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Who, looking backward from his manhood's prime,
Sees not the spectre of his misspent years?
And, through the shade
Of funeral cypress planted thick behind,
Hears no reproachful whisper of the wind
From his beloved dead?

Who bears no trace of passion's evil force?
Who shuns thy sting, O terrible remorse?
Who does not cast
On the thronged pages of his memory's book,
At times, a sad and half reluctant look,
Regretful of the past?

Alas! the evil which we fain would shun
We do, and leave the wished-for good undone;
Our strength-to-day
Is but to-morrow's weakness, prone to fall;
Poor, blind, unprofitable servants all
Are we always.

Yet who, thus looking backward o'er his years,
Feels not the eyelids wet with grateful tears,
If he hath been
Permitted, weak and sinful as he was,
To cheer and aid in some ennobling cause
His fellow man.

If he hath hidden the outcast, or let in
A ray of sunshine to the cell of sin—
If he hath lent
Strength to the weak, and in an hour of need,
Over the suffering, mindless of his creed,
Or home, hath bent—

He has not lived in vain. And while he gives
The praise to Him in whom he moves and lives,
With thankful heart
He gazes backward, and with hope before,
Knowing that from his works he nevermore
Can henceforth part.

By-Laws of the Grand Lodge.

CONFERRING DEGREES.

SEC. 40. No subordinate lodge in this jurisdiction shall confer the degrees upon any candidate unless he be a perfect man, having no maim or defect in his body that may render him incapable of learning the art and becoming perfect in the degrees. And all lodges are expressly forbidden to confer any of the degrees, or to transact any other business save such as pertains to a lodge of sorrow, on the Sabbath day.

SEC. 41. No subordinate lodge in this jurisdiction shall confer any of the degrees on non-resident citizens, without the consent of the proper jurisdiction, first had and obtained.

SEC. 42. When any candidate for the privileges of Masonry shall be rejected by a subordinate lodge by mistake or misapprehension, the person or persons making such mistake, or voting under such misapprehension, may at any future meeting have the opportunity to correct their votes. Provided, All the members of said lodge have notice that said application will be made at said meeting.

SEC. 43. No lodge working under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall be allowed to do any work irregularly, unless it be by dispensation from the Grand Master; and any lodge working under such dispensation shall return the same to the Grand Master.

SEC. 44. A petition from a lodge to the M. W. Grand Master, praying for a special dispensation to confer degrees, shall set forth fully and clearly the emergency.

SEC. 45. Advancement to the degrees may be stayed at any time, for good reasons, by the lodge or the Master.

SEC. 46. No candidate shall receive more than one degree on the same day without a dispensation from the Grand Master, and no candidate for the second and third degrees shall be advanced to such degree unless, upon examination in open lodge, he shall show a satisfactory knowledge of the lectures of the degree upon which he stands. except upon like dispensation; nor shall any lodge confer any degree upon more than one candidate at the same time.

BALLOTING.

SEC. 47. No ballot shall be spread except at a regular communication, unless by special dispensation.

SEC. 48. In balloting for candidates, all members of the lodge present shall vote; for, according to an old regulation, "No man can be entered a brother in any particular lodge, or admitted to be a member thereof, without the unanimous consent of all the members of that lodge then present when the candidate is proposed;" nor shall a member be excused from the performance of this important duty except by the unanimous consent of all the members present. No Mason shall be required by the Master or lodge to give his reasons for the vote which he has deposited, for the very secrecy of the ballot is intended to secure the independence and irresponsibility to the lodge of the voter.

SEC. 49. The ballot shall be spread for each degree, and shall be unanimous. A "unanimous ballot for each of the three degrees," should be understood literally and should be the same in each, and unanimous in all, upon the moral, intellectual and Masonic qualifications of the applicant; no lodge may interfere with the right of private ballot; and if a member of a lodge expresses to the Worshipful Master an objection to conferring a degree upon a petitioner, even after such petitioner shall have been elected to such degree, such candidate shall stand as rejected, and shall be so entered of record, and shall so stand, until such objection is withdrawn; nor can the reasons for such objection be demanded. Where a candidate for the second and third degrees has been rejected by the lodge, such rejection shall not debar him from applying for such degree at the next or any subsequent meeting.

SEC. 50. After the ballot has been taken and duly examined. first by the Wardens, and finally by the Master, the result shall be declared by the Master, unless only one negative vote appears, in which case the Master may order the second trial of the ballot, which shall in all cases be final, nor can it be set aside by the lodge, Master, Grand Master, or even the Grand Lodge.

FEES.

SEC. 51. No lodge shall confer the three degrees for a less sum than twenty-five dollars, to be paid in advance.

RIGHTS OF WARDENS.

SEC. 52. Lodges shall not open or call to labor unless the Master or one of the Wardens be present.

SEC. 53. Wardens may preside and confer degrees in the absence of the Master.

DEMITS.

SEC. 54. It is contrary to and inconsistent with the ancient usages and precepts of our Order, to withdraw from a subordinate lodge, or to reside in the neighborhood of a subordinate lodge without becoming a member thereof.

SEC. 55. A Masonic demit dates from the lodge record when the same was granted, and membership ceases with said date.

SEC. 56. No lodge shall grant a demit unless the applicant shall have paid his dues and produced a receipt therefor.

CHARTERS.

SEC. 57. It is not in the power of a majority of the members of a subordinate lodge to surrender the charter of said lodge, so long as seven Master Masons, members thereof, continue to work under said charter, and according to the ancient landmarks of Masonry.

SEC. 58. Whenever the charter of a lodge shall be destroyed by fire, or in any other manner, or shall be stolen and surreptitiously taken and detained, without the fault of the lodge or Master, it shall be lawful for the Grand Master to order another charter to be issued to said lodge; which charter shall set forth the names of the members and officers named in the charter so lost, detained, or destroyed, the grand communication at which it was granted, the names of the grand officers attached thereto, and the circumstances of its loss, destruction, or detention, and shall be signed by the Grand Master and attested by the Grand Secretary, under his hand and the seal of the Grand Lodge, without fee.

SEC. 59. Whenever the charter of any lodge shall become so defaced or illegible as to be unfit for use, it shall be lawful for the Grand Master to grant them another charter, bearing the same name and number, setting forth the names of the members and officers named in the first charter, the date thereof, the names of the grand officers attached thereto, and the reason for granting another charter, which shall be signed by the Grand Master and attested by the Grand Secretary, under his hand and the seal of the Grand Lodge, and who shall be entitled to the usual fee therefor.

MORALS—CRIMES—MISDEMEANORS.

SEC. 60. All chartered lodges under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall have full power and authority to perform that duty which requires them to exercise penal jurisdiction over all Masons, unaffiliated as well as affiliated, within their geographical jurisdictions. for violations of moral and Masonic law.

SEC. 61. This Grand Lodge will sustain the action of any subordinate lodge under its jurisdiction in punishment by reprimand, suspension, or expulsion of any member who shall be found guilty of the inordinate use of intoxicating drinks, profanity, gambling, quarreling with or abusing a brother Mason; and will likewise sustain any lodge in administering any reasonable punishment upon any member who shall attempt to give the aid of Masonry in organized or individual form to any lottery or gift enterprise.

TRIALS.

SEC. 62. All trials for Masonic offenses in lodges under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge shall be as follows:

A regular charge, in writing, specifying the nature of the offense, and signed by the accuser shall be delivered to the Secretary, who shall read it at the next regular communication, at which time the Master shall appoint the time and place for trial, of which it shall be the duty of the Secretary to give due and timely notice to the accused, who shall be entitled to a copy of the charges, and to ample time and opportunity to prepare his defense.

SEC. 63. All Masonic trials shall be in the lodge of the highest degree to which the accused has attained, in which the examination of witnesses shall take place in the presence of both the accused and the accuser, who shall have the right to be present at all examinations of witnesses, in or out of the lodge, and to propose such relevant questions as they may desire.

SEC. 64. After the trial is concluded, the accused and the accuser shall be requested to retire, and in case the trial has been in a lodge of Entered Apprentices or Fellow Crafts, the lodge shall then be opened on the third degree; for no decision shall be made for or against a brother, after regular trial, except in a Master Mason's lodge, in which the question of "guilty" or "not guilty," shall be put by the Master, in which all the members present shall be required to vote, and of which two-thirds shall be in the affirmative or the accused shall be declared "not guilty."

SEC. 65. If the verdict is "guilty," the Master or presiding officer shall put the question as to the amount of punishment, beginning with the highest and ending with the lowest Masonic punishment herein provided. The vote on the nature of the punishment may be taken by a show of hands, and decided by a two-thirds vote of the members present.

SEC. 66. If the residence of the accused is not known, or if, upon due summons, he refuses or neglects to attend, a lodge may proceed to trial without his presence.

SEC. 67. The witnesses in all Masonic trials, whether Masons or not, shall be persons who have the use of their reason, and such religious belief as to feel the obligations of an oath, and who have not been convicted of any infamous crime.

SEC. 68. The testimony of Masons shall be taken in lodge or in committee; that of competent persons, not Masons, by committee, on oath, administered by a competent legal officer, and may be by affidavit.

SEC. 69. A subordinate lodge shall not suspend a member for non-payment of dues without written notice and a fair trial.

PUNISHMENTS.

SEC. 70, The Masonic punishment which may and shall be inflicted by the Grand Lodge and its subordinates for unmasonic conduct, shall be either reprimand, definite or indefinite suspension, or expulsion from all the rights and privileges of Masonry.

SEC. 71. A reprimand shall be given in open lodge, upon a majority vote of the members present.

SEC. 72, When a Mason is expelled from a lodge, he is thereby expelled from all the rights and privileges of Masonry.

APPEALS—RESTORATIONS.

SEC. 73. All Masons have the right to appeal from the decisions of subordinate lodges to the Grand Lodge, in which case the lodge shall furnish the Grand Lodge and the appellant with an attested copy of its proceedings on the trial, and such testimony in its possession as he may require for his defense.

SEC. 74. An application to reinstate an expelled Mason must in all cases be accompanied by a recommendation from the lodge by which the brother was expelled. Provided, such lodge be still in existence.

SEC. 75. Restoration, after a definite suspension by a lodge, shall take place at the expiration of the time specified in the sentence.

SEC 76. Restoration, after an indefinite suspension by a lodge, shall be by the action of such lodge at a regular meeting, after due notice, and by a two-thirds vote of the members present.

SUMMONS.

SEC. 77. A summons issued by a subordinate lodge, or the Worshipful Master thereof, must be written or printed, and under the seal of the lodge.

SEC. 78. Any summons issued as aforesaid need not contain any other matter except the requisition to attend the lodge issuing the same, or the Master thereof when required.

SEC. 79, Every Master Mason is bound to attend before the lodge, at the meeting of the lodge so requiring him, on being summoned or notified.

Sec. 80. Any member of a subordinate lodge is subject to the discipline thereof, excepting only the Worshipful Master.

Sec. 81. Repealed.

Sec. 82. Repealed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sec. 83. Subordinate lodges are required to do all their business in a lodge of Master Masons, except conferring the first and second degrees, and the trial of Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts.

Sec. 84. The return of each and every subordinate lodge shall contain the number of miles necessarily traveled by the representatives to attend the communication of the Grand Lodge and be made a part of said return.

AMENDMENTS.

Sec. 85. The Grand Secretary shall append to the printed proceedings all propositions for the amendment of the Constitution and By-Laws, or any other matter upon which it shall be necessary for subordinate lodges to act. He shall notify the lodges by circular, embodying such propositions as it shall be necessary for them to act upon, in season for their action; and such lodges shall make report of their proceedings in such cases to the Grand Secretary, on or before the first day of September thereafter.

Sec. 86. No alteration or amendment shall take place in these By-Laws, except in the following manner: Every amendment shall be proposed in writing, at a regular meeting of the Grand Lodge, which shall be spread upon the minutes and printed with the procedings of the Grând Lodge; and if a majority of the members at the next regular communication shall agree to the same, it shall become a part of these By-Laws.

Sec. 87. The previous question is unmasonic, and all proceedings had by means of it, in grand or subordinate lodges are irregular and unlawful.

Sec. 88. When any lodge in this jurisdiction shall cease to work for a period of six months or more, citizens within its jurisdiction shall be permitted to petition the next nearest lodge for the degrees, without regard to the claims of the dormant lodge.

Sec. 89. At every annual communication the work shall be exemplified in each of the degrees. When for any reason the charter of any lodge shall be annulled, the Grand Secretary may, upon being satisfied that any member of such lodge, free of charges and in good standing, has paid all dues against him, issue to such member a dimit under the seal of this Grand Lodge. And the Grand Secretary may in like manner issue dimits to Masons made in lodges under dispensation, when, for any reason such dispensations have been returned and no charter granted to such lodge.

GENERAL REGULATIONS.

LODGES U. D.

Regulation 1. No dispensation shall be granted for a new lodge, the location of which shall be within five miles of any other lodge, unless the said lodge shall consist of at least forty members, or the lodge prayed for is to be located in a city or town containing a population of three thousand inhabitants.

REPEAL.

Reg. 2. The resolutions in force, as published with the proceedings of A. D. 1857, together with all so published at any time prior thereto, of a binding character, are hereby repealed, and the By-Laws and General Regulations are adopted in lieu of them.

AMENDMENTS.

Reg. 3. These Regulations may be amended revised or repealed, in whole or in part, at any regular grand communication, two-thirds of the members present agreeing thereto.

Address by the Worshipful Master.

My Worthy Brethren of Palatine Lodge No. 314:

There is an occasion when every person looks back to a certain time of his life, when his memory will rise up before him either with pleasure or sorrow; so then dear brethren, let us as we are fast approaching the close of another calendar, as well as a Masonic year, look back upon the past, and question ourselves. Have we regulated our lives, and lived in accordance with the teachings of the first great lights and principles of Masonry? Have we acted upon the square of virtue with all mankind and especially with our brethren of the Fraternity? Have we by a constant use of that valuable instrument (the compass) circumscribed our desires and kept our passions within due bounds? Have we with the trowel liberally spread the cement of brotherly love and affection, and used our best endeavors to unite us into one common band and brotherhood, among whom no contention should ever exist, but that rather noble emulation, who can best work and best agree? Dear brethren, love and humility, which are the precious tenets of a Mason, are by some selfish and highminded brethren entirely discarded. Is it not pitiable when brethren of high spiritual profession entirely turn their backs to the lodge and not even visit the meetings, because probably the previous election of officers did not result in accordance to their wishes? Dear brethren, by such actions who will vouch for us that ere long or short our pillars will wave and become shaky, if not entirely crumble, when our obligations and duties are so often neglected?

As accomplished men and as Masonry requires, we should walk and act irreproachably as an example to the world. Therefore let us impress the friendly advice upon our minds, which our eminent patron St. John gave, as he drew near the last hour of his life, and in his feeble state spoke, "Brethren. love ye one another." Therefore, let us endeavor to draw closer the bonds of love and affection, which are sustenance and refreshment for the mind, which will enable us to perform the labor of preparing the rough ashlar from its natural state, and fit our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Therefore keep the heart pure and ready for a noble deed. Remove the rough stone, prepare the path for a weary brother's feet. The stone lies not in rocky walls, nor in the depth of the ground. In your breast you will find it all, and there the rough stone will be found. So then, dear brethren, let us cleanse ourselves from all worldly evils and impurities of life and caution ourselves of the true duties which were inculcated upon our minds while at the sacred altar.

Let us this evening elect such officers, who, imbibed with wisdom, strength and beauty. will set the Craft at work and give them proper instructions; who will pay the Craft their wages if any be due, and superintend the Craft in a proper and Masonic way, during the hours of refreshment. Let us elect a Master, who not only as the saying is, is a smooth worker, but one that will guide us and dispense true Masonic light, as the bright rays of the sun dispenses true light when rising in the eastern horizon; one who will guide an erring brother and remind him in a friendly manner and not behind his back, of his faults, and surround him with the chain of brotherly love: one who possesses the talent of exhorting the brethren of any unmasonic conduct in love and tranquility, so that we may not again be compelled to have the profane world called upon to substantiate our Masonic virtues and morals (as per example occurred). To all of this may the Almighty Architect of the Universe grant us His blessing, that we may be led by His wisdom and strength; that we may not deviate from any of the true Masonic edicts. May the brethren who shall be elected officers of this lodge this evening for the ensuing year, not accept in a vain and transitory manner, but out of pure love and Masonic principles, and fulfil their arduous labors with true Masonic zeal, to the close of their official time, so when at last their work shall be done and their earthly tabernacle shall be lowered into the silent grave, the brethren remaining may shed the tear of sorrow for their remuneration.

And now, my brethren, upon retiring from the chair, as W. M. of this lodge, permit me to return my sincere thanks for the kindness and patience you have shown me during the past year. I have endeavored to rule and regulate the lodge with true Masonic principles, and to promote peace, love and unity among the Craft, and if my duties may have been in many cases neglected by me, I ask the pardon of the brethren. A few more words and I will have finished this meagre and probably uninteresting address. I wish to say to the brethren to join together during the coming year and be as one man; attend the lodge meetings as often as possible, and when we do come, let us come with hearts full of love; let us assist in the work of the lodge wherever and whenever we can; let us be obedient to our superiors; let us maintain secresy, and above all practice charity, and with those duties truly and Masonically performed, I will vouch for the prosperity of the lodge during the coming year.

May the heavenly blessing be with us all during the coming year, is the sincere wish and prayer of

Your obedient servant,
H. C. Batterman.

Order No. 3.

Grand Encampment of Knights Templar for U. S. of America, Sir J. Q. A. Fellows, M. E. Grand Master.

To all the Grand Commanders of our State Grand Commanderies, and the Commanders of commanderies holding their charters immediately from our Grand Encampment—Greeting:

Whereas, The first clause of paragraph one of Section five of Article one of Constitution of the Grand Encampment, in defining the duties of the Grand Master, expressly provides that, "as a part thereof, he shall have a watchful supervision over all the commanderies, State and subordinate, in the United States, and see that all the constitutional enactments, rules and edicts of the Grand Encampment are duly and properly observed, and that the dress, work and discipline of Templar Masonry everywhere are uniform."

And Whereas, at this time, under the foregoing provision of the constitution, the Grand Master has occasion only to call the attention of all commanderies, whether grand or subordinate, to the edicts of the Grand Encampment upon the subject of dress, enacted in 1862, and to urge a greater uniformity.

To this end, therefore, he has caused to be republished the Edict of the Grand Encampment of 1862 (pp. 45 to 50 of the proceedings of that session), as hereto appended, and to order a strict compliance therewith. That edict is absolute in its character, and supersedes and repeals all former enactments, rules, and edicts upon the subject. The costume it prescribes is, as reported by the committee, neat, durable, economical, and distinctive in character, and no excuse can be considered satisfactory why the same should not have long since become universal.

In addition to the failure to adopt, a worse evil has, however, begun to prevail—that of innovation and change—and to this tendency this order is more particularly directed. Simply to illustrate the character of the departures from a strict nniformity, the coat may be instanced. The only description in the edict is. "black frock coat." This can mean nothing else than the frock coat of society, cut in the usual style, of the ordinary length, with such buttons as are usually worn, and those placed in the ordinary manner, in other words, a "black frock coat" is one that can be worn on any occasion, and wherever a black frock coat may be worn, and which may not cause any distinctive observation or remark whatever.

These remarks may be applied to every other article of dress, costume, or uniform, or whatsoever may be included in the edict hereto appended.

There are to be added to the articles specified, under the heads "full dress" and "fatigue dress," those trimmings, &c., which are described in the edict, and as there described, and absolutely no other. A strict observance of these directions is necessary to uniformity, and to prevent that tendency to extravagance of dress which is hardly consistent with the vows of a Templar.

We trust, therefore, that each Commander to whom this shall come will comply with the terms of this order, and enforce a strict uniformity, and see that his command is fully and properly uniformed.

Done at New Orleans, Louisiana, this 30th day of December, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one.

By the Grand Master.

[SEAL.] Attest my hand, and the seal of our Grand Encampment, at Iowa City, Iowa, December 30th, A. O. 753.

Anti-Masonic Fanaticism.

Several letters inform us that Rev. Mr. Blanchard, the younger, has on several occasions asserted the following propositions as incontestible; that Masonry is anti-Christian; that Masons are not Christians in fact; and, that no Christian can be a Mason. It is agreeably to our information that the elder and the younger, while holding other objections to Freemasonry, hold the above three propositions as paramount, and all other objections as inferior and subordinate to them. In the past we have not so understood it. We understood the position of the elder Blanchard at Galesburg to be this; that Masons who had ceased to be active as such, should not be disturbed in their membership, but that Masons should not be admitted to church fellowship, leaving them to seek other affiliations; but we did understand that it was Masonry that debarred them, while their Christian character otherwise was not called in question.

It is unquestionably and unfortunately true, that men may argue themselves into the firm belief of doctrines formerly discarded, and that fanaticism and consequent oppression and cruelty will thrive and enlarge from the effects of its own pernicious food.

The younger Blanchard, trained by the elder, does, we presume, hold to the doctrines taught by Trinitarian Congregationalists. If like the elder, both carry their teachings and doctrines to their logical conclusion. To their credit then, be it said that they believe what they profess, and discard all that they do not believe; but, to their discredit be it said, that their extreme notions about Masonry prove them to be extremists in everything else, and per consequence, assuming to judge Masons, they judge all who differ with them in belief, and discard them. It is but fair then to presume, that discarding all who differ with them, they class them outside of the Christian fold.

Let us then, test the younger Blanchard by his own assertions and belief. He believes that Christ is very God—very man, and that there is no salvation except as he has wrought it out for man; he believes that none who are morally accountable can have salvation, unless they penitently forsake sin, and accept Christ by professing him before the world.

He rejects the doctrine that Christ is a mere man, and of course he discards the doctrine held by many, that Christ could, in his mere human nature, atone for fallen men.

It follows then, that a large portion of the Congregational denomination are not Christians, and cannot be saved, because they do not believe in the divinity of Jesus of Nazareth. It follows also, that all sects rejecting the divinity of Christ, are "hay, wood and stubble," fit only to be burned.

To be a Christian then, one must believe as the younger Blanchard does. He cannot refuse his own logic. Then, as he judges, none but Christians can enter heaven; no Mason is a Christian or can be, neither is any one a Christian who does not accept Christ as God. Let us carry this logic farther; the younger Blanchard says that Christians cannot associate with Masons, because Masons are not and cannot be Christians; it is clear then, that he passes this judgment in the interest of Christianity; if so, then he will discard the association of all but his sort of Christians in his crusade, and so none are wanted for the anti-Masonic party but such as believe in the divinity of the Son of God. Masons professing Christianity have nothing to fear. They know in whom they put their trust, and living in obedience to His commands, they may safely commit their cause to Him who "judgeth righteously."

New Lodges.

The following laws and regulations should be observed by lodges and brethren interested in the formation of new lodges:

A petition for a new lodge should be signed by those only who intend to remain with the organization should a charter be granted, giving name, number and location of the lodge of which they are at the time or were formerly members; also, the population of the town in which the new lodge is located.

All petitioners who are affiliated should pay dues to date, to their respective lodges; a certificate of such fact must accompany the petition. Those non-affiliated must forward their dimits.

The recommendation of three lodges nearest the location of a proposed new lodge is necessary.

The fee for a dispensation is one hundred dollars. All applications for recommendations must be received by lodges at a regular communication and lie over at least four weeks before final action.

The concurrence of two-thirds of the members present is necessary to endorse a petition for a new lodge.

In addition to the usual form, lodges must state in their recommendations the number of members on their respective rolls, the distance of said lodges from the proposed new lodge; also, that the matter has been before the lodge four weeks and was concurred in by a two-thirds vote.

Attention to the foregoing will avoid delay, save trouble and insure prompt attention to issuance of dispensation.

Grand Master Price, Kansas.

In December, 1869, M. W. Bro. John M. Price, of Atchison, Kansas—the home of the noted anti-Masonic Senator Pomeroy—was elected Master of Washington Lodge No. 5, consisting at that time of sixty-nine members, and meeting in inconvenient apartments. From that number the lodge has grown to be the largest in the State, meeting in a spacious and elegantly furnished hall. The Grand Lodge, wisely appreciating his creative and constructive ability, elected him to the elevated position of Grand Master At the recent election, he laid down the gavel of subordinate authority, whereupon his brethren, through their new Master, Bro. C. J. Neal, presented him an elegant Past Master's jewel, formed of solid gold, set with precious stones, and suitably engraved. The M. W. brother was sensibly touched, and responded in that grateful eloquence born of sublime emotions, solid merit and worth.

The happy occasion closed, as all such scenes should, in a sumptuous banquet, where feminine grace presided.

Order of the Eastern Star.

This subject should be treated under several distinct heads; its social character; its means and benefits of recognition; its cosmopolitan and charitable work; its elevating and praçtical tendencies; its value in a humanitarian sense, and its influence upon society as a religious order. Under these or similar heads we shall give our views in future numbers.

Other matters, proper for all to understand, must be attended to now, and we hope finally. The system of verbal detraction, which has persistently pursued us, misrepresented and unjustly injured us, set on foot by brethren who ought to be in better business, has reached us in regard to this beautiful Order. We have not resented this treatment in the past, nor do we now. But those whose cause we have espoused have a right to know our position. We foreshadowed that this might be necessary in our November number. What we said in November we say in February: "The objection we urged was to its fugitive, transient and unorganized condition." The charter members of the thirty-six chapters we have organized in person will bear witness that this was a prominent argument with us in favor of a thorough organization.

Early in our Masonic history we received the degree of Heroine of Jericho. It is a magnificent thing, true to history and full of excellent teaching. The degrees of Master Mason's wife and Master Mason's daughter made their brief impression and passed into the land of forgetfulness.

Then came the degrees of the Eastern Star, with its constellations, which were so cumbrous that they broke down of their own weight. The degree of Good Samaritan came to the surface, served its brief but beautiful hour and passed away. The judgment of the Craft fell severely upon degrees full of good promises which seldom bore fruit. The agitation which convulsed the Masonic Fraternity some years ago obscured all such matters. When this agitation ceased, the practicability of devising and organizing something valuable for woman was again discussed. The degrees had not been conferred upon us. We do not pretend that we favored them, or that we even considered methodically the matter of organization. We had just come out of a severe conflict, ostensibly a winner, but in all seriousness a loser physically, mentally and financially. A physical hurt we received at the time our office was invaded, and which we have studiously concealed until recently, had brought us close to the grave, and from its effects we never expect to recover. The mental strain was terrible, and it has deprived us of our former elasticity and diminished our mental power. Boldly facing and defying and surmounting every obstacle, we were thoroughly impoverished. In such a condition, rudely, wickedly and continuously assailed, our influence crippled and our means of usefulness sadly diminished, is it singular that we regarded with little favor degrees propagated and left to die by those whom we had regarded as the architects of our misfortunes? In this mood we remained for some time. Then families were organized. They had no head, and may be said to be but a little removed from the individual. But an organizer appeared. From confusion order sprang.

Time brings reflection; retrospection follows; honestly pursued, self-examination finds few men blameless even when essentially in the right. Trying to think and act as a Mason should, these antipathies and dislikes vanished like dew before the rising sun. Good principles, even though propagated by unprincipled men, are not by any means to be discarded for such a reason. We were long coming to a decision in our mind, but with the result of that decision we have eminent reason to be satisfied: If any class of men should heartily desire the sympathy, confidence and co-operation of their wives, daughters, mothers and sisters in their good work, that class is the Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons. If it be desirable to secure and retain so important an end, the members of the Fraternity should evince a corresponding sympathy, confidence and co-operation. This is an era of investigation and thought. Crimes, corruptions, abuses and oppressions are being mercilessly exposed and punished. So let it be. The utility and benefit of societies and organizations are inquired into. While our wives and daughters may not desire, much less seek to know the few binding secrets of the Masonic Fraternity, they certainly have a right to know what our associations are, and if even reputable, whether they are meritorious also. The Order of the Eastern Star, strikingly benevolent and religious, opens up a vast field for the exercise of all the elements of gentleness and tenderness, counsel and sympathy, charity and affection, support and patience, which exist so munificently in the nature of good women.

In our next we will treat the social phase.

PIO NONO comforts himself for his loss of temporal power, it is said, by playing billiards, in which he has grown particularly skillful since Rome ceased to be an ecclesiastic city.

A Pleasant Trip.

Agreeably to previous arangements, we visited Petersburg, Jan. 18, and were the guest of R. W. Bro. John Bennett, one of the founders and the first Master of Clinton Lodge No. 19. Here we met Col. Judy, who commanded the Menard Regiment in the late civil war. In the afternoon we visited the lodge room—a beautiful and convenient one—and there organized a chapter of the Eastern Star, named Bennett in honor of our host, who was also unanimously elected Patron. The worthy Matron is the daughter of our aged Bro Samuel Smith, another founder of the lodge, and a lady of superior executive ability. Her Associate is the talented Mrs. Col. Judy, who in addition to unusual ability adds a large experience. The Treasurer, Mrs. Lucy D. Wright, and the Secretary, Mrs. Mary Jane, wife of Bro. John Bennett, are sisters of lamented Bro. Cabiness, formerly of this city, deceased. The Conductress, Mrs. Mary I., is the accomplished widow of the late and distinguished Maj. Thomas L. Harris, who made his mark as an attorney and in the Mexican war, and who was once elected to the State Senate, and three times to Congress. He was also an able Master of the lodge. The Associate Conductress is the daughter-in-law of Bro. Bennett, and one of those ladies, who know just how and what to do, and who are always ready and welcome.

The chief feature of the evening was the initiation of a great favorite—Miss Rainey—in the presence of seventy-five or eighty members. And we were very glad to welcome an old acquaintance at Knoxville, Bro. Hobart Hamilton, H. P. of Menard R. A. Chapter.

Review of Proceedings.

ARKANSAS. — Grand Chapter. — This body, so long governed by Albert Pike, L. E. Barber, and Judge English, assembled at Little Rock, Nov. 2, M. E. Elbert H. English, presiding; L. E. Barber, G. Secretary. Comp. English speaks thus comprehensively and with rare beauty of the Chicago fire:

> "When, recently, the great city of Chicago, sitting like a beautiful queen upon the shore of an inland sea, bathing her feet in its waters, her brow crowned with the palm of commerce, and her lap filled with plenty, was suddenly overwhelmed by a terrible fire, more than ten thousand of her houses reduced to ashes, and a hundred thousand of her horror-stricken people driven before the flames, roofless and destitute, into the streets and highways, the hearts of all the civilized people of the globe, wherever the electric wires flashed the dreadful news, were moved with compassion; and promptly, over every sea, and along every river and railway, money, food and clothing were sent to the relief of the sufferers."

He reviews proceedings at Baltimore in his suggestive way; how strikingly beautiful is this tribute to the memory of Judge Taylor, of Texas:

> "During an excursion over the bay, a companion, half sick, sat upon the upper deck of the great ship, looking gloomily over the waters, and seeming to be lonely, though in the midst of a throng. A passing cloud had shut out the sun, and cast a great shadow over the bay; and there was a shadow on his heart. One, seeming like an angel of mercy, sent to earth to smile away its sorrows, came to his side, and looking cheerfully into his sad face with her bright eyes, pointed with her delicate hand to a silver-lining along the edge of the cloud; and then called his attention to the spires of a city away over the bay, glittering in the sunbeams. Earth, said she, has its shadows and its sunshine. The gloom of to-day may be succeeded by the brightness of to-morrow; and away over the sea of life, there is a temple, not made with hands, of which we are reminded by yon tall spire glittering in the sun-beams beyond the cloud that overhangs the bay!
> "An eminent companion and sir knight, Judge Taylor, who came far from his home to represent the Masons of Texas, at Baltimore, sickened and died. Learning that he was to be buried on a beautiful Sabbath evening, after the close of the General Grand Chapter, and supposing that but few, save the procession of local brethren, would attend the stranger to his resting place, I determined to be present at his funeral. Strolling out to the beautiful cemetery, I was agreeably surprised to find that thousands of ladies and gentlemen were crowding into the grounds. And when the fallen stranger was lowered to his sleeping place, innumerable white handkerchiefs, held to weeping eyes, were moistened with tears; and the autumnal breeze that swept over the solemn scene, was burthened with sighs heaved by tender, sympathizing hearts. If he had been buried among his own neighbors, greater sympathy could not have been manifested."

Having been elected Dep. G. G. High Priest at Baltimore, Comp. English retired, and Rev. G. A. Dannelly was elected G. H. Priest. The officers will be found in another place. Sixty-one chapters; members 1,561; average 26.

Grand Council—Met at same time and place, Geo. A. Dannelly, presiding; L. E. Barber, Grand Recorder. Every council was represented and harmony ruled. Comp. English was elected Grand Master. We desire to remind our Arkansas readers that our mantles as Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter and as Grand Recorder of the Grand Council, now rest gracefully upon the shoulders of Comp. James H. Miles, P. G. H. P., Masonic Temple, corner Randolph & Halsted streets, Chicago.

ILLINOIS.—Grand Council.—This body met at Masonic Temple (old) Chicago, Oct. 5, H. W. Hubbard, presiding; A. W. Blaksley, Grand Recorder. Dispensations were reported for new councils at New Rutland and West Chicago, and charters were granted them.

The statistical tables show 53 councils; 1,989 members; 164 advancements; 30 admissions.

Wm. A. Levanway, M. D., of Dixon, was elected Grand Puissant, and James H. Miles, Masonic Temple, corner Randolph and Halsted streets, Chicago, was elected Grand Recorder. See elections.

The proceedings of 1870 are also reprinted.

VERMONT.—Grand Council—Met at Burlington, June 15, E. S. Dana, presiding; W. H. S. Whitcomb, Burlington, G. Recorder. Both re-elected—14 councils; 735 members.

"Fill the Bill."

Our Bro. Rounseville, was pleased to discourse somewhat upon the desirable physical qualifications of Masters, and we are gratified to say that the Masonic reading public are generally treated to it through other publications. We took occasion to put in our oar in the January number, and may be committed an indiscretion in naming several brethren less than thirty-five years old, whom we knew to be every way worthy and well qualified and included in Bro. Rounseville's rule; we did write in the name of Bro. Geo. H. Raymond, of Litchfield, but some how the printer left it out, and the omission escaped our attention in the proof reading; to the number we now add Judge John D. Crabtree, of Dixon. These names occurred to us from a hasty call upon memory, and by stopping to think we could name many not yet thirty-five years of age, and probably more than two hundred who are over that age. We must not omit to name Gen. John C. Smith of Galena, who is probably one of the younger list, and here we will stop.

Bro. Rounseville comes in again this month in a merry and facetious mood upon the same subject.

The Illinois Mutual Benevolent Society,

Located at Princeton, L. R. Jerome, Secretary, has three hundred members enrolled, among whom it numbers the careful Bro. James A. Hawley, of Dixon; has paid one benefit, and is rapidly augmenting in numbers and strength. In fact, it is as sound as the gigantic affair in Indiana. We should like to hear from kindred organizations in Paris and Greenville.

AN able address by Bro. Samuel J. Dodds, of Lena, will appear in the March number of THE TROWEL.

Chicago Masonic Relief.

The Relief Committee, now located at No. 5 Masonic Temple, corner Randolph and Halsted, Bro. James Morrison, Superintendent, are striving hard to furnish employment to every one qualified to act in any commercial or manufacturing business.

Thanks

To Geo. W. Childs, southwest corner Sixth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, for the Public Ledger Calendar for 1872. It is a valuable register and compendium as well.

Mrs. De Geer

Suffered much loss by the Chicago fire, but with her accustomed Scotch energy she brings out her Coming Woman's Magazine punctually. It is devoted to the best interests of woman, literature and temperance.

Breth. Shugart and Lininger,

Of Council Bluffs, Iowa, send us their twenty-eight page illustrated catalogue of farm machinery and seeds. It pays, and none are worthier.

Five Jewels of the Orient,

Is the title of a beautiful new book by Juliette T. Burton, presented to us by the Masonic Publishing Company, 626 Broadway, New York.

It is for the benefit of the ladies of the Eastern Star, and treats of Jephtha's Daughter under the head of Turquois; Ruth, the Topaz; Esther, the Diamond; Martha, the Emerald, and Electa, the Ruby; 244 pages; tinted paper; nine costly and beautiful illustrations.

The Vermont Mason,

By R. W. Bro. Henry Clark, Grand Secretary of Vermont, is a small four page monthly, published at Rutland, Vt., at fifty cents per year. We take an article from it this month, which proves it to be neither "sounding brass" or "a tinkling cymbal," but true and polished gold.

The Evergreen,

For January, is graced with a beautiful engraving of the good humored and intellectual face of M. W. Bro. O. P. Waters, G. M. of Iowa.

The Evergreen also has a biographical sketch of the venerable Wm. Leffingwell, from the pen of Comp. Langridge. He was well in years before he became a Mason, but his zeal, persistence and ability have made up the time.

The Keystone

For New Years, comes with a beautiful engraving of the new Masonic Temple, occupying an entire block encompassed by Broad, Filbert, Juniper and Cuthbert streets, Philadelphia, 150 feet wide by 250 feet deep, three stories in height, with basement and sub-cellar. The Grand Lodge Hall is 51 feet wide, 105 long, and 48 high. This vast edifice, including grounds and furnishing, is to be completed within the sum of $2,250,000, and is forever free from taxation.

* * *

WE regret exceedingly to learn that The Landmark, published by Bro. Geo. F. Illsley, New York, has been discontinued for want of adequate support.

Bro. Illsley was surely a competent, generous and enterprising editor, and the Craft in New York City alone ought to have sustained him.

So publication after publication in New York goes to the wall. The vehicles of Masonic information and literature most noteworthy in that city are departments in political papers edited by Past Grand Master Simons, and the talented Fitzgerald Tisdall.

The Song Messenger,

For December, contains the song of Mrs. O'Leary's Cow, by "P. Green;" editorials on "Adapting Hymns to Tunes," and "The Cabinet Organ in Play." Also a new song, "Ye Have Done it Unto Me." Specimen copies ten cents. The Song Messenger is edited by W. S. B. Mathews. Published by Root & Cady, Chicago, at $1.00 a year.

* * *

The Little Corporal

For January, makes his salute in a handsome new uniform in the garb of peace. This number contains the first chapter of the prize story, which opens out in a very interesting manner. The illustrations are not excelled by any other similar periodical in the land. Terms $1.50 a year, John E. Miller, publisher, Chicago, Ill.

Mothers' Journal.

The home magazine, for January, is out in a new and beautiful dress, as fresh and instructive with life as the youngest of our magazines. This number commences the 37th volume. Really, this magazine is one of the very best in the market for the family. Its articles are carefully and ably prepared—with a fine variety—always pleasing and always pure. It can be trusted in every family and by persons of all ages. It is just what its name indicates—a magazine for the HOME.

American Homes.

The January number of this popular illustrated dollar magazine is as full of good things as a New Year's morn is of good promises. Among the notable articles is one on "Society in Washington," by Mr. Ramsdell, the well-known Washington correspondent, and there is the usual supply of stories, disquisitions, wit. houshold articles, a popular song and departments for Freemasons, I. O. O. F., G. A. R., K. of P., &c.—the whole forming a rich collection of literature for ten cents. The New York Tribune well says "that its pictorial embellishments enhance the value of American Homes, and that it will hold its own in many families against more costly magazines." A new story by George Alfred Townsend is announced for the February number. A perfect copy of the Grand Duke Alexis' autograph is sent with the January number, and our specimen shows that it is a valuable memento of the Duke's visit. Chas. H. Taylor & Co., 51 Water street, Boston, are the publishers.

The Chicago Pulpit,

Is a weekly publication issued by the Index Company, at 105 West Randolph street, Chicago, at $2.50 per annum. The second number—all that has been vouchsafed to us—has a sermon by Rev. Robert Laird Collier. The pulpit promises a good sermon from some leading Chicago minister in every number, and has a good pulpit miscellany besides.

Rail Roads.

Main Trunks—Branches and Extensions—Miles—Connections—Principal Towns—Country—Character.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC.

Main line, Chicago to Council Bluffs..	493	miles.
Branch, Bureau to Peoria....................	46	"
Branch, Milton, Iowa, to Leavenworth, Kansas....................................	321	"
Total..	860	"

This road, from Chicago to Rock Island, is one of the early roads in the State. It is now, both to Council Bluffs and by bridge to Omaha, and also by bridge to Leavenworth, essentially a main trunk road, being a part of the direct connection from New York to San Francisco, via Omaha, and with Kansas and the southwest to the Pacific via Leavenworth.

Connections north and south at Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Wyanett, Davenport, Columbus Junction, Ashland, Belknap, Beverly, Leavenworth, West Liberty, Des Moines and Council Bluffs.

General connections at Chicago, Rock Island and Omaha.

Water connections at Chicago, Rock Island, Peoria, Council Bluffs, Leavenworth, La Salle and Peru.

Des Moines is the State capital of Iowa, and Davenport, Council Bluffs, Leavenworth, Rock Island, La Salle, Ottawa and Joliet are noted places. The penitentiary is located at Joliet, and is the seat of an immense business in stone, besides iron and woolen manufactures. Ottawa is the seat of justice for the Northern Grand Division and for La Salle county. La Salle is at the foot of the canal and the head of navigation on the Illinois. Of Peoria and Rock Island we have made mention. Davenport and Council Bluffs are metropolitan towns in Iowa, and Leavenworth is the metropolis of Kansas. Morris, in Illinois, is a county seat; Peru is largely engaged in manufacturing; Geneseo is famous as a seat of learning, and as a grain, stock and dairy station. In Iowa we can speak of no other towns advisedly, except Iowa City and Muscatine. Iowa City was formerly the seat of government for the Territory and State and is now the seat of the State University, and is Masonically noted as the residence of the eminent Masonic scholar and philosopher, Theodore S. Parvin. Muscatine is an important Mississippi River town and the seat of justice for Muscatine county. Grand Recorder Langridge resides here.

There are three passenger trains from Chicago to Council Bluffs and return six times per week; two from Bureau to Peoria; one from Wilton to Leavenworth, and one from Wilton to Jamesport.

This road runs along the northern margin of the stock raising country.

Its manufacturing resources and capacities are of the grandest character. The water power, commencing at Moline and terminating only at the foot of Rock Island, is unexcelled, unlimited and subject to no possible destruction or decay.

That at Ottawa, formed by the junction of the Illinois and Fox Rivers is splendid and vast.

This road is a vast institution and its direct connections east and west make it a through thoroughfare, while its constantly rumbling freight trains disclose its value as a first-class medium of transportation.

CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN.

Line via Fulton City to Omaha..........	491	miles.
Line to Freeport..................................	91	"
Wisconsin Division to Fort Howard..	242	"
Milwaukee Division........................	85	"
Peninsula Division, from Escanaba to Marquette..................................	75	"
Madison Division, from Harvard, Illinois, to Madison, Wisconsin......	138	"
Kenosha Division, from Rockford, Illinois, to Kenosha, Wisconsin......	72	"
Total..	1194

It will be seen that no other road in the west commands so many miles of track; and this total does not include the road from Elgin to Richmond, which would probably increase the sum total to 1,250 miles.

It contends with the Rock Island & Pacific for the passenger and freight business between Omaha and San Francisco and commands both over a large portion of Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa.

It connects with the Illinois Central at Chicago, Dixon and Freeport and has prominent connections with other roads at Milwaukee, Clinton Junction, Milton Junction, Watertown, Minnesota Junction, Sterling, Clinton, Cedar Rapids, Marshall, Grand Junction and Council Bluffs and Omaha.

It has steamboat connections at Oshkosh, Appleton, Fulton, Omaha and Chicago.

Four through passenger trains each way between Chicago and Milwaukee; two between Chicago and Fort Howard; two between Chicago and Madison; two between Chicago and Freeport and an additional one from Chicago to Rockford; two between Chicago and Omaha; one between Escanaba and Marquette; one between Kenosha and Rockford, besides numerous trains connecting one point with another and short runs to outlying stations and suburban residences.

It enfolds Madison, the seat of government in Wisconsin; Milwaukee, the Metropolis; and such important points as Watertown, Racine, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Kenosha, Appleton, in Wisconsin; Clinton, Marshall, Cedar Rapids and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Freeport, Rockford, Belvidere, Elgin, Waukegan, Woodstock, Geneva, Dixon, Sterling and Fulton, in Illinois: Freeport, Dixon, Geneva, Waukegan, Rockford, Belvidere, Woodstock and Morrison are county seats.

This company is probably the most powerful corporation in the west.

INDIANAPOLIS & ST. LOUIS.

This line embraces the old St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute. Distance 261 miles.

General connections at St. Louis, East St. Louis and Indianapolis; and important connections at Litchfield, Pana, Mattoon, Terre Haute and Greencastle.

Bunker Hill, Litchfield, Pana, Shelbyville Mattoon, Charleston, Paris, Terre Haute and Greencastle are county seats; Bethalto, Butler, Irving, Nokomis, Rosamond, Tower Hill, Windsor, Kansas City and Dudley are lively business towns.

This road runs along the southern boundary of the stock region and the northern line of the fruit country, abounding in coal, well-settled and wealthy. It is an important line for travel and business and contends stoutly for its share of through business.

ST. LOUIS, VANDALIA, TERRE HAUTE & INDIANAPOLIS.

This is the old Brough road. In the legislature of 1849, three lines were competing for legislative favor and the contest was warm. The first line was from Terre Haute to Alton, via Paris, Charleston and Shelbyville, and advocated upon what was called the State policy principle; the second line was direct from Terre Haute, via Marshall, Effingham, Vandalia and Greenville to St. Louis; the third from Vincennes via Lawrenceville, Olney, Salem, Carlyle and Lebanon to St. Louis. The two first were Indianapolis routes, while the two last were St. Louis routes. The first and third were opposed to the second, while all were at war with each other. Among other advocates we may name Geo. W. Rives, of Edgar, as the champion of the first; E. H. Starkweather, of Cumberland, of the second, and E. Z. Ryan, of Lawrence, of the third. John Brough was on the ground and St. Louis tactics were prominent. It became evident that neither road could command a majority and combinations began to be looked after. Starkweather, a straightforward, incorruptible man, being in the middle interest, fell between. Rives, good natured, conversational, watchful and wary, moved the wires skillfully. Ryan, trustful, easy and certain, a general favorite, permitted Rives to get his bill to a passage first; two days afterwards Ryan's bill came up, received a majority but failed to secure the required thirty-eight votes. Brough, Ryan and Starkweather have passed away and Rives is still legislating. In the process of time all three roads have been constructed.

This road is splendidly built and is 238 miles in length from St. Louis to Indianapolis. It passes through the county seats of Greenville, Vandalia, Effingham, Marshall, Terre Haute and Greencastle, and the thriving towns of Highland, Pocahontas, Greenup and Martinsville. It has water connections at St. Louis and Terre Haute; general connections at East St. Louis, St. Louis and Indianapolis, and very important connections at Vandalia, Altamont, Effingham, Terre Haute and Greencastle.

It runs three passenger trains each way between St. Louis and Indianapolis; an additional train from St. Louis to Effingham, two of which run in connection with the Central to Chicago, and an additional one between Indianapolis and Terre Haute.

PEKIN, LINCOLN & DECATUR.

This road passes through a fertile country and the business along its line is immense. Its length is sixty-seven miles, and it has two passenger trains each way. It takes in its course the old thriving town of Delevan, at the crossing of the Jacksonville branch; Lincoln, the county seat of Logan, and Mt. Pulaski at the crossing of the G., C. & S. It has now passed into the control of the Toledo, Wabash & Western, and is one of its important arms.

A BROTHER, formerly resident at Farmington, thereafter many years on the Pacific coast, pronounces Bro. Rounseville's articles "unequalled." He is by no means alone in that opinion.

AT Decatur the T., W. & W. R. W. sends its main trunk west to Quincy; an arm via Taylorville, Litchfield and Edwardsville to St. Louis, and another via Mt. Pulaski, Lincoln and Delavan to Pekin, on the Illinois River; at the Bluffs it sends another arm to Hannibal and at Clayton another to Keokuk.

ON the 27th of December W. Bro. W. H. H. Rader, acting as the proxy of the Grand Master, dedicated the new Masonic hall in Camden, and as our deputy installed the officers of Louisa Chapter, E. S. Rev. Mr. Garner delivered an address. A supper closed the scene.

Resolution of Respect by Hardin Lodge No. 44, at Mt. Sterling, Illinois.

WHEREAS, HON. JOHN BIGLER, one of the charter members of this lodge, and its first Senior Warden, afterwards twice Governor of the State of California, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and Minister to Chili, departed this life, at the city of Sacramento, in said State, the latter part of the month of November last; therefore,

Resolved, That we have heard with regret of the death of our distinguished brother, and that we will cherish his memory so long as life shall last.

Resolved, That though but few of the present members of Hardin Lodge knew him as a member of the Craft, yet many of us recollect him when a citizen of our town, and some of the older members have often met him in the lodge, and remember with pleasure his portly figure and his genial countenance.

Resolved, That our deceased brother in all the relations of life exemplified the principles of our Order, and justly merited the title bestowed upon him of "Honest John Bigler."

Resolved, That whilst we deplore the loss of our departed brother, yet we realize that he has died full of years and full of honors, leaving his example to encourage and cheer us in our pilgrimage on earth; and we indulge the pleasing hope that when the Supreme Architect of the Universe shall summon us hence, we may meet our departed brother in that Grand Lodge above; that temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and also that they be published in the Mt. Sterling Gazette and THE MASONIC TROWEL.

A Higher Morality Among Masons.

There is one topic which is engaging the attention of all our grand lodges, and finds a place in the addresses of all the Grand Masters. It is an earnest and anxious movement in behalf of a higher, truer and better morality among Masons. If it had been agreed upon by consent of the several Grand Masters, it could not have been more united and universal. Spontaneous as it has been, the evils rebuked are wide-spread, and that from one side of our land to the other, the dangers that menace the Fraternity are seen, and are the same in all sections. But it shows also, that in every jurisdiction there are good men and true, who are struggling manfully for the right. The warning has been the swift precursor of the arming, and the simultaneous effort that is being made everywhere by the Grand Masters, who speak with authority and from observation, cannot fail to accomplish much good. Masonry is already a power in the world, but it has been fettered by apathy, and by the unworthiness of many of its professed friends, and thus hindered from the fulfilment of much of its glorious mission. It is pleasing to note the exhortations to and evidences of Masonic reform everywhere to be observed. Masonry is becoming more and more in earnest every day. The brethren are being taught that it means something more than a monthly assemblage, a set form of words or a prescribed ceremony. They are learning that the symbolism of our lodges is not merely a matter of curious inquiry for antiquarians and philologists, not merely a subject for pleasant research in which to while away an otherwise idle hour, but the embodiment of living truths which must find a lodgment in the heart, and an expression in the conduct of every true Mason. It is gratifying to observe that there is a striving after this better, nobler, truer Freemasonry, and that many brethren eminent no less for their private virtues than for their Masonic experience and learning, are casting the weight of their great influence in this direction. The cause of Masonry seems to be prospering; the general increase is as large as can be desired, but a higher standard of morality should be inculcated, in order that we may dwell among all people in "unity of spirit and in the bond of peace."—Vermont Mason.

Miscellaneous.

A Strange Guest.

In a little post town among the Highlands of Scotland, far away from any great city, there lived, a few years ago, a woman much respected and well beloved, though of lowly and humble fortune—one Mrs. Jean Anderson. She had been left a widow, with one son, the youngest and last of several children. She was poor, and her industry was taxed to the utmost to keep herself and son and to give him the education he ardently desired.

At the early age of sixteen Malcom Anderson resolved to seek his fortune in the wide world, and became a sailor. He made several voyages to India and China, and always, like the good boy he was, brought some useful present home to his mother, to whom he gave a large portion of his earnings. But he never liked a seafaring life, though he grew strong and stalwart in it; and when about nineteen he obtained a humble position in a large mercantile house in Calcutta, where, being shrewd, enterprising and honest, like most of his countrymen, he gradually rose to a place of trust and importance, and finally became a partner. As his fortune improved, his mother's circumstances were made easier. He remitted money to secure her the old cottage home, repaired and enlarged with garden and lawn, and placed at her command annually a sum sufficient to meet all her wants, and to pay the wages of a faithful servant, or rather companion; for the brisk, independent old lady stoutly refused to be served by any one.

Entangled in business cares, Mr. Anderson never found the time and freedom for a long voyage and visit home, till at last failing health and the necessity of educating his children compelled him to abruptly wind up his affairs and return to Scotland. He was then a man somewhat over forty, but looking far older than his years, showing all the usual effects of the trying climate of India. He was gray and somewhat bald, with here and there a dash of white in his dark, auburn beard; was thin, a little bent, but his youthful smile remained, full of quiet drollery, and his eye had not lost its old gleeful sparkle by poring over ledgers and counting rupees.

He had married a countrywoman, the daughter of a Scotch surgeon, and had two children, a son and a daughter. He did not write to his good mother that he was coming home, as he wished to surprise her and test her memory of her sailor boy. The voyage was made without accident.

One summer afternoon Mr. Malcom Anderson arrived with his family at his native town. Putting up at a little inn, he proceeded to dress himself in a suit of sailor clothes, and then walked out alone by a path he well knew, and then through a shady lane, dear to his hazelnutting days, all strangely unchanged, he approached his mother's cottage. He stopped for a moment on the lawn outside to curb down the heart that was bounding to meet that mother, and clear his eyes of a little mist of tears. Through the open window he caught a glimpse of her sitting alone at the spinning wheel, as in the old times. But, alas! how changed! Bowed was the dear old form once so erect, and silvered the locks so brown, and dimmed the eyes once so full of tender brightness, like dew-stained violets, but the voice which she was crooning softly to herself was still sweet, and there sat on her cheek the same lovely peach bloom of twenty years ago.

At length he knocked, and the dear remembered voice called to him, "Coom ben!" The widow rose at the sight of the stranger and courteously offered him a chair. Thanking her in an assumed voice, somewhat gruff, he sank down as though wearied, saying that he was a wayfarer, a stranger to the country and asked the way to the next town. The twilight favored him in his little ruse; he saw that she did not recognize him, even as one she had never known. But after giving him the information he desired, she asked him if he were a Scotchman by birth.

"Yes, madam," he replied, "but I have been away in foreign parts many years, I doubt if my own mother would know me now, though she was very fond of me before I went to sea."

"Ah, noo! it's little ye ken about mithers if ye think sae. I can tell ye there's na mortal memory like their's," the widow somewhat warmly replied; then added: "And where hae ye lost the Scotch frae your speech?"

"In India—in Calcutta, madam."

"Ah, then it's likely you ken something o' my son, Malcom Anderson?"

"Anderson," repeated the visitor, as though striving to remember. "There may be many of that name in Calcutta, but is your son a rich merchant, a man about my age and size, with something such a figure-head?"

"My son is a rich merchant," replied the widow, proudly, "but he is younger than you by many a long year, and, begging your pardon, sir, far bonnier. He is tall and straight, wi' hands and feet like a lassie; he has brown, curling hair, sae thick and glossy, and cheeks like the rose and a brow like the snaw, and big blue een, wi' a glint in them like the light of the evening star. Na! na! you are a guid enough boy, I dinna doubt, and a decent woman's son, but ye are na like mine."

Here the masquerading merchant, considerably taken down, made a movement as though to leave, but the hospitable dame stayed him, saying:

"Gin ye hae traveled a' the way frae India, ye maun be tired and hungry. Bide a bit, and eat and drink wi' us. Margy coom down and let us set on the supper."

The two women soon prepared quite a tempting repast, and they all three sat down to it, Mrs. Anderson reverently asking a blessing. But the merchant could not eat. He was only hungry for his mother's kisses, only thirsty for her joyful recognition; yet he could not bring himself to say to her, "I am your son." He asked of himself, half grieved, half amused: "Where are the unerring natural instincts I have read about in novels?"

His hostess, seeing he did not eat, kindly asked if he could suggest anything he would be likely to relish.

"I thank you, madam," he answered, "it does seem to me that I should like some oatmeal porridge, such as my mother used to make, if so be you had any."

"Porridge?" repeated the widow. "Ah, he means paritch. Yes, we hae a little left frae our dinner. Gie it to him, Margery. But mon, I guess it is cauld."

"Never mind; I know I shall like it," he rejoined, taking the bowl and beginning to stir the porridge with his spoon. As he did so Mrs. Anderson gave a start and bent eagerly toward him and then sank back in her chair with a sigh, saying in answer to his questioning look:

"Ye minded me of my Malcom then, just in that way he used to stir his paritch—gieing it a whirl and a flirt. Ah, gin ye were my puir laddie!"

"Weel, then, gin I were Malcom," said the merchant, speaking for the first time in the Scottish dialect, and in his own voice, "or gin yer boy were broon, and gray, and bent, and old as I am, could ye welcome him to your arms and love him as in the auld lang syne? Could ye, mither?"

All through this touching little speech the widow's eyes had been glistening and her breath coming fast, but at the word "mither," she sprang up with a cry, tottering to her son and almost fell fainting on his breast. He kissed her, kissed her brow and her lips and her hands, and the big tears slid down his bronzed cheeks, while she clung about his neck and called him by all the dear old pet names and tried to see in him the dear young looks. By and by they came back, or the ghosts of them came back. The form in her embrace grew comlier; love and joy gave it a second youth, stately and gracious; the first she then and there buried deep in her heart, a sweet, beautiful, peculiar memory. It was a moment of solemn renunciation in which she gave up the fond material illusion she had cherished so long. Then looking up suddenly in the face of the middle-aged man who had taken the place, she said:

"Where hae ye left the wife and bairns?"

"At the inn, mother. Have you room for us all in the cottage?"

"Indeed I have—twa gude spare rooms wi' large closets, weel stocked wi' linen I hae been spinning or weaving a' these lang years for ye baith and weans."

"Well, mother dear, now you must rest," rejoined the merchant, tenderly.

"Na, na, I dinna care to rest till you lay me down to take my lang rest. There'll be time enough between that day and the resurrection to fauld my arms in idleness. Now 'twould be unco' irksome. But go, my son, and bring me the wife. I hope I shall like her; and the bairns, I hope they will like me."

I have only to say that both the hopes of the good woman were realized. A very happy family knelt down in prayer that night and many nights after, in the widow's cottage, whose climbing roses and woodbines were but outward signs and types of the sweetness and blessedness of the peace and love within.

Yankee Courtship.

One evening as I was sitting by Hetty and had worked myself up to the point of popping the question, sez I:

"Hetty, if a fellow was to ask you to marry him, what would you say?"

Then she laughed, and says she:

"That would depend on who asked me."

Then, sez I, "suppose it was Ned Willis?"

Sez she, "I'd tell Ned Willis, but not you."

That kinder staggered me, but I was too cute to lose the opportunity, and so sez I again:

"Suppose it was me?"

And then you ought to see her pout up her lips; sez she:

"I don't take no supposes."

Well, now, you see there was nothing for me to do but to touch the trigger and let the gun go off. So bang it went. Sez I: "Lor, Hetty, it's me; won't you say yes?"

And then there was such a hullabaloo in my head I don't know zactly what tuk place, but I thought I heerd a "Yes" whispered somewhere out of the skrimmage.

Died.

At Blue Grass, Vermilion county, Illinois, November 28, W. Bro. NEWTON GRIFFING, W. Master of Blue Grass Lodge No. 407.

The deceased was a valuable citizen, a good father and husband, and a most exemplary, worthy gentleman. The impressive funeral was conducted at Wallace Chapel, by Rev. C. B. Seals, and then the remains received Masonic interment.

At Pekin, January 9, Bro. WM. M. OLMSTED, aged forty years, a member of Pekin Lodge No. 29.

The remains were buried with Masonic honors.

THROUGH the press we learn of the death of Col. R. B. SERVANT, of Chester, Randolph county; the deceased was a noted member among the talented men of the Constitutional Convention of 1847.

At Cherry Valley, Saturday evening, January 6th, Bro. MAYNARD M. HOWE, aged thirty-two years, and a member of Cherry Valley Lodge No. 173.

He left a wife and children, and a good name; his brethren paid the last honors to his remains.

On the 4th day of January, 1872, Mrs. BATTERMAN, wife of Bro. H. C. Batterman, Past Master of Palatine Lodge No. 314 and Past Ex. Scribe of Palatine Chapter No. 117.

At his residence, in Knoxville, Illinois, January 4th, 1872, Bro. SILAS BRUCE; and on the 11th of same month, Bro. CHAS. W. STEVENS, both members of Pacific Lodge No. 400.

The lodge passed the usual resolutions of respect to both the brethren.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for protcessions, with an appendix in which are sedown the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

EASTERN STAR CARDS.

I HAVE A SURPASSINGLY beautiful card, which will answer the purpose of a certificate as a member of a Chapter of the Eastern Star, three inches wide and four and a quarter inches long. On the face side is

THE STAR,

with its five points in Blue, Yellow, White Red and Green colors, with the emblems in each and the Pentagon in the center, with its usual divisions, letters and devices.

Over the Star, in Gold are the words,

"I have seen His Star in the East,"

while beneath it, in Green are the words,

"And have come to worship Him."

The border is blue and red, and the spaces are filled with ornaments in gold.

On the opposite side is a certificate embordered in Red and Blue, with large letters "E. S.," in light shading, in the centre, over which is printed a blank certificate, with room in one corner for seal, to be signed by the Matron and attested by the Secretary. On the end is a line for a signature of the lady receiving this certificate. The thought came from Bro. Hubbard—the design is our own.

FREEMASONRY IN THE HOLY LAND.

THESE interesting lectures became so popular last winter that I found it impossible to fill engagements required in this State, and at the earnest solicitation of friends, have concluded to spend a portion of the winter here. I therefore make the following proposition to the several Masonic lodges in Illinois and elsewhere.

To deliver my Lodge Lecture on Masonic Researches in the Holy Land, verifying the truth of Masonic ritual and tradition, and exhibit some interesting relics from Jerusalem. I will also give an account of my visit to the English lodges, with the forms of initiation, passing, raising, schools of instruction, banquets, signs, passes, &c., &c. My charge for this Lecture is twenty dollars and expenses while at your place.

My Public Lecture is descriptive of Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Easter Week in the Holy City, Gethsemane the Mount of Olives, and the surrounding country.

My charge for the two Lectures is thirty dollars and expenses while at your place. For admission to the public lectures you can charge such sum as you see fit. Properly managed, it will pay the entire expenses and ought to leave a fair surplus for the benefit of the Lodge.

Masonry is a System of Morality, a Supporter of Law, and the Friend of Religion.

VOL. X. WHOLE NO. 121. SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, MARCH, 1872. NEW SERIES NO. 11.

Patrons, Please Read.

In order that we may commence the eleventh volume on the first of June, the twelfth number of this volume—being the next—will not be issued until April 20, and no paper will be issued in May. This will give us time to make contemplated arrangements, and to clear off a mass of work which has accumulated in the office.

William Rounseville's Department.

To My Son.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

I'm waiting for the call, Will,
  The Supreme Grand Master sends,
When to the Lodge Celestial
  He deigns to invite his friends.

For all these fifty years, Will,
  I've placed in him my trust,
And unto all my brethren,
  Endeavored to be just.

I've essayed to be more. Will—
  To keep the golden rule—
To discipline my passions
  In the Savior's perfect school.

And now in looking back, Will,
  While standing on the ledge,
Which separates existences
  Upon the river's edge,

I see the rule was good, Will—
  It kept me in the right,
And never led me wandering,
  Though in the darkest night.

I see that God protects, Will,
  Who put their trust in Him,
He gives them courage in distress,
  Nor lets their faith grow dim.

I see the Golden Rule, Will,
  Is what we all need here—
That he is best and happiest,
  Who follows it most near.

The sum of real life, Will—
  You'll learn it on your way,
Is to trust in God forever,
  And the Golden Rule obey.

Fit for a Candidate.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

We frequently decide erroneously when we make up our minds as to who is fit for a candidate for the mysteries of Masonry. We may be intimately acquainted with a man, and believe that he will conform to the laws and mould himself to the spirit of Masonry, and when we give him a fair trial, find we have been mistaken in our estimate of his character. He does not drink in the spirit of the precepts of the Order as we expected; it does not influence his actions as we thought it would; it does not strengthen the good points in his character as we had a right to anticipate.

But there is one place where an officer of ordinary perception and discernment can judge of his fitness, and never come to a wrong conclusion. That place is in the lodge itself. The time is when the ceremonies are performed. Then his character as a Mason can be truly judged by the effect produced upon his mind. Is he solemnly affected by the impressive ceremonies; does his countenance light with joy and pleasure as the beauties of the work are unfolded; does he listen with rapt attention to the beautiful lectures and the still more beautiful explanations of the emblems of Masonry; does he imbibe the spirit of charity and fraternity; the facts can be read upon his countenance, and we may rest assured that he appreciates the mysteries in which he is being instructed, and that they will have due influence on his future life and conduct. He is a fit candidate for Masonry.

We have seen a candidate brought to the altar of Freemasonry, who went mechanically through the ceremonies, but who appeared to have no more conception of the beautiful morality of the ritual—no more appreciation of the lessons conveyed, than a marble statue. For moral beauty he had no taste; for charity when presented in its most lovely form, he seemed to have no admiration. We have come to the altar with such an individual, thank God, but few times; but we always felt like ordering him to be removed as unfit for being a candidate, his heart being entirely incapable of conçeiving, as his eyes were of beholding, the beauties of Masonry.

One of these men not long since told us that he did not see as the first degree amounted to much. He had only been honored with that. With him the solemn appeals and supplications to Deity; the fervid exhortations to virtue and piety; the apt illustrations of human obligations and duties; the emblematic meaning of the symbols—none of these amounted to much.

Ought such a man to be permitted to go further? Ought he to be allowed to pronounce our vows and assume the duties which Masonry demands of its votaries? Ought he to be permitted still further to penetrate the secrets of our mystic temple—still further to profane our solemnities and stultify in his ignorance and inappreciation, the beauties of our ceremonies? The man who can see no beauties—no good—no value—nothing worth much, in the ceremonies of the first degree of Masonry, will be very illy qualified to appreciate the second or third, or any other degree.

Yet hundreds of these inappreciative persons get into our lodges. It is impossible to prevent it. Though they profane our ceremonies when they undergo them and are a dead weight upon Masonry as long as they are known as members, yet we cannot get rid of them. They are the drones of the hive—the vagrants of our community—the paupers of the Masonic profession. What good they do we know not, unless it be to prove Masonry imperfect, and to keep good Masons humble.

About the Protest.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

I had slight idea when my views on the "Extent of a Protest" were written that I should call down the ire of "the grave and reverend Seignors" of the Order, but it seems such has been the result of that ill-fated article. However, I do not much regret it, and presume that my feelings are something like his who, in the days when crowns were held in reverence, boasted that the king had spoken to him. "And what did he say to you?" was asked. "He bade me get out of his way!" was the answer. I deem it rather an honor to be noticed by the magnates of the Institution of which I am a humble member, even though it be not in the most complimentary terms, and if it is only an order to "stand out of the way," am inclined to boast of it.

Past Grand Commander Lanphere devotes a paragraph to an apology for pointing out what he is pleased to call "grave errors." This was needless, because no Mason need apologize for reminding a brother of his faults. The second paragraph is devoted to a defense of the law which requires a unanimous ballot, which no one attacks. In the third he gets into the case and asserts that I object to the "right of protest because it is so effectual in keeping out disturbing elements—because it is more effectual in excluding the objectionable candidate." Then I found fault with a thing that does not exist. Does not the unanimous ballot, if not clear, most effectually exclude the objectionable candidate? It keeps him out of the lodge most effectually. He cannot get in until the ballot is unanimous in his favor. What more effectual result has the protest? Nothing farther than that the protest operates indefinitely as to time. The ballot if spread at the end of the year would again be just as effectual as in the first instance, and so for the third and succeeding years.

In a subsequent paragraph P. G. C. Lanphere indicates that my "argument goes upon the ground that either the candidate has a right to be admitted, or that the lodge has a right to have him admitted in either case over the objection of the objector." Asking pardon of my honorable friend and brother, he is mistaken. I presume he will not be able to point out a line of my article which will bear him out in the assertion. I did not even claim that the candidate whose character had been soiled by a negative ballot had the right to demand that he should be placed in circumstances where he could remove the stain. I did say, and by that principle I abide, that the lodge ought to give him the privilege of doing it. I insisted that he should have the right of petition when under protest the same as when rejected by ballot. That was all. I did not ask for him the right to come into the lodge against the objection of any member.

This was the point I made, and I must be a very numbskull in expressing my convictions. not to have made them plain to such a clear-headed, sharp and shrewd professional as the gentleman is conceded to be by all those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance, and yet I cannot now see any ambiguity in the article he has so deftly handled, and especially in the closing paragraph which I intended should express the point which I had been arguing. Then it is said: "If we have rejected a man, he should have thereafter a right to prove himself worthy. This the course pursued when rejected by the ballot secures him. If the above reasoning is correct the protest after the ballot should have no more force and duration than the unfavorable ballot, and that is the rule for which we contend. If a member fail to be in his place to cast a ballot against the admission of one whom he believes to be unworthy, give him the privilege of entering his protest to farther procedure for a year. Then give the petitioner the right to another scrutiny of character and perhaps the cause of the protest will appear to have been groundless, and a valuable member be received. But if the candidate is still unworthy the ballot or the protest will not fail to pronounce against him."

I have made this long quotation because, in my view, it completely neutralizes the objections which the learned critic has seen fit to urge, and the extract alone would have exonerated me from the charges brought forth. We believe with a full assurance of faith that our reviewer read the article which he reviews with great care. But we confess that our perception is so obtuse that we cannot see why one who had read it carefully should so forget the main statements it contained.

Will our good friend and brother produce an argument in favor of the perpetual effect of a protest that will not be equally strong in favor of the unlimited effect of the ballot? When he has done that he will find himself nearer the point I made in my former article than he has ever yet been.

A Flight from Dixie.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Many of the citizens of the United States, both north and south, will remember the difficulty and danger which beset those who would pass from one section to the other, during the continuance of the war of the rebellion. Scouts and spies who were acquainted with the by-paths and mountain fastnesses, who had become familiar with the untraveled roads and the almost inaccessible hiding places, very often passed through the lines of the contending armies in safety, but for one unacquainted with the geography of the country, ignorant of woodcraft and dependent on strangers whom he should encounter for information, not knowing whether they were friends or foes, the case was a desperate one. And yet many, caught in the rebellion, but desirous of reaching home, braved these dangers and got safely through. How many failed in the attempt, history will never record. They were buried where they were shot, if burial was at all accorded to them, and no monument or mound marks the spot. Friends grew tired of watching for the expected one, and at last the conviction slowly settles upon their minds that the missing is dead. Both ways rose this tide of human life, and on either side of the military lines there are those who mourn for the friends who never will wake the echoes of the family doorstone. Under the warm skies of the sunny south, as well as beneath the cloud-mists of the more northern clime, there are yet tears shed and hopes entertained for those whose graves are made in the mountains of Virginia, in the ravines of Eastern Tennessee, and in the claybanks of Western Kentucky.

When the war broke out, a friend of the writer, a clergyman of distinction, had made a residence at Shreveport, Louisiana, as the pastor of a religious congregation. When he went there, not being certain of a permanent engagement, he left his family in Chicago, intending to send for them should he conclude to abide there for a great length of time. His arrangements were made to do so, but in the meantime, the rebellion had commenced, vast armies had been put in the field by both sections, and military lines had been established by the contending forces. To send for his family was out of the question. It even became problematical whether he would go after them and succeed in bringing them to their new-found home. But he finally decided to make the attempt. As to what he experienced, we will give it as nearly as possible in his own words.

"In the month of January, 1862, I left Shrevesport, Louisiana, for Chicago, with the avowed intention of bringing back my family for a permanent residence in the former place. My doubts that I entertained as to whether I should be successful in that undertaking, I prudently kept to myself, for had it been supposed that I should not return, it would have been pretty certain that I should not have been indulged with the privilege of making the journey at all. Coming from the city of Chicago at the opening of the rebellion, and it was very natural that my neighbors should look upon me with distrust, although I kept aloof from politics as much as possible. Besides, it was really intended that I should return, if the journey could safely be made with my family.

"I had been cautioned on my arrival at Shreveport not to tell that I was from Chicago, which, owing to the fact that there President Lincoln was nominated, was rather more deeply detested than other northern cities. It was not very safe for me to say, as I was leaving Shreveport, that I was going to Chicago. Hence it had been circulated outside of my congregation, that I came from Memphis, Tennessee, and that was given out as my objective point when I left. I had been in Shreveport nine months, and in that time had heard nothing from my family.

"Accordingly putting eight hundred dollars in gold in my belt, I packed my trunk and started on my journey on the 9th day of January, taking the omnibus for Monroe, Louisiana, and the cars thence for Memphis by way of Vicksburg. In Memphis, one week was spent in trying to find friends who would advise me how to proceed further. But my efforts in this direction were futile. Instead of showing me how I could avoid difficulty and danger in going north, all concurred in advising me not to attempt the journey at all.

"After waiting a week and inquiring of every one whom I dared to approach, I came across two young men who were in a similar dilemma with me, and who were exceedingly anxious to get through the lines to their friends in the north. After a secret consultation of about an hour, we agreed to start the next day and do our utmost endeavors to get through. On the day following we made twenty miles by rail, coming to a small town, name not recollected. Thence we went with a hired team to another and so forward, always paying about as much as the team was worth for its use but a single day.

"By this time we had got into the region of the hostile armies, and had to take by-paths and wood roads to avoid the soldiers who would have refused to let us pass. We worked our way along in this manner over the hills and through the valleys of western Tennessee and Kentucky, until we reached Hickman. In that town there were two camps of the Southern army, through one of which we must pass, or run the risk of being caught by taking a circuitous route through the woods where there were little or no roads to guide us. This case required strategy, and that demands a man's best thoughts.

"On arriving at Hickman, our first trouble was to find a shelter for the night. We looked about some time before we succeded, but at last made terms with a leading rebel, and a gentleman in every sense of that word. Of course, we were bound to tell him we sympathized with him in his political opinions. That opened the way for further negotiations, and a certain sign which I deemed it politic to give him, drew forth a correct response, and the doors of his house and the avenues of his heart were thrown wide open He was a member of the Universal Brotherhood.

"We had spent pretty much all of one day in walking about the town before we fell in with this friend, and as it afterwards appeared had excited the suspicions of the citizens that we were something more than mere travelers. We were strangers. That was against us. We had no visible business. That was still worse. We were looking about the place as though we wanted something. That capped the climax. We were reported to the camps as Lincoln spies.

"On our retiring for the night, our friend informed us that scouts from the camp had an ugly and disagreeable habit of patroling the streets of Hickman about twelve o'clock, when they always stopped at his house. It would not be safe to be found there, and he advised us to make our beds in the hay in his barn, which was but a few yards away. It seemed to us that this would be a rather undesirable proximity to danger, but we could see no remedy or substitute for the evil, and accordingly we betook ourselves to the hay-loft, but the sleep we got was hardly worth mentioning.

"About twelve o'clock that night the soldiers came around as he had said they would, and subjected him to a pretty severe examination. They inquired of him if he had not seen these strangers walking about and examining the town, the previous day, and if such men had not been to his house. Much to our relief he answered both questions promptly in the negative, and after drinking, the soldiers went away. It may be imagined that we, who had overheard every word of the conversation, felt greatly relieved at their departure. As soon as they were gone, our landlord came to us and invited us to the house, saying that there was now no danger in indulging in the luxury of a good bed. We gladly availed ourselves of the hospitable offer and slept soundly until morning.

"On arousing, we found that our good landlord had been studying up our case. He said it would be of no use for us to try to elude the soldiers. Picket lines were stationed all along the roads, and in the fields and woods, so it would be impossible to get safely past them. Our only way would be to go boldly through the camp. He volunteered his services to go with us and see us through. He also advised us to take along some whiskey that we might 'drink with the boys,' and then to announce our business, which was to look for three strangers of a suspicious character, who had been seen in town the day before, and who it was said had taken the road to Helentown, the place whereto we were bound, if we succeeded in our undertaking.

"Accordingly, armed with a couple of jugs, a good pair of horses driven by our landlord, we drove into camp. The whisky acted like a charm. It was the 'open sesame' to their affections, and when the last jug showed signs of coming exhaustion, our driver introduced the tale of the three spies about the streets of Hickman, and we received immediate leave to drive out on the Helentown road and ake the rascals, dead or alive. Our landlord took us out about five miles, we gave him twenty-five dollars for his trouble and faithfulness, and we went on our way rejoicing, and he returned to camp without 'those d—d abolitionists.'

"We arrived at Helentown, without accident or incident worth relating. Our arrival finished six long weeks that we had been endeavoring to make our flight out of Dixie, and still our object was not accomplished. In fact, the worst and most dangerous of our journey was before us. Helentown is about twenty miles from Paducah. It was then in the hands of the rebels as Paducah was possessed by the Union troops. But there were no soldiers there, and if we could get away before the suspicions of the people were aroused, all would be well.

"My two comrades went out to get a team to take us to Paducah, but after a long search, returned unsuccessful. I concluded to try my own luck in the matter. I went through the town until I came to a man who was at work in his yard.

"'Good morning!' I said.

"'Mornin',' was the gruff reply.

"'Fine weather for work.'

"'Yes, good enough.'

"'You own a team, I suppose?'

"'Well, 'spose I do. What then?'

"'You would like to make a little money.'

"'I allow I would! How?'

"'Send a nigger with your team to Paducah?'

"'Stranger, I haint quite so green as you reckon.'

"'What will you ask to make the trip?'

"'What would my hoss be worth ef he should be druv into Paducah, do you think? The Yanks would have him in jest two minutes arter he got there. The nigger aint good for nothing no way. He mought stay and be d—d ef he wanted to.'

"'What might your horse be worth?'

"'I reckon about sixty dollars.'

"'Well, there are three of us want to go to Paducah. I will pay you sixty dollars, and you may send the nigger with us. If he returns you get your horse; if he does not you have your price for him.'

"'You're a trump, stranger! Let's see the color of your money.'

"Six gold eagles were counted out in his sight.

"'I'll be dog-goned if I don't like your ways, stranger. Them's the real shiners. Here, Sam, harness that hoss, and take the strangers to Paducah, or wherever in h—ll they wish to go. Come back if you want to, and if you don't, stay where you d—d please.'

“‘The bargain was then concluded. I returned to the shanty, which in the vocabulary of the country was called a ‘hotel,’ where we had bad rye coffee, unfit to drink, corn bread not fit to eat, for supper and breakfast, and slept on a dirty floor. Our bills were only ten dollars in gold, each.

“In company with Sam, we started for Paducah, where we arrived the same evening, making the twenty miles in the unprecedented short space of time of twelve hours. We left our nigger in the streets with his horse and buggy. Whether he ever returned to his old home, we know not, and care about it as little as we know. Most likely he made a speculation on the property by selling it to some of the army followers.

“We had at last passed through the lines; our attempted flight out of Dixie had been successful, and we anticipated no more trouble, but what was our astonishment to find that we were regarded as southern spies. We went to the provost marshal's office to get our passes to Evansville, which we obtained without difficulty. At twelve o'clock at night we went on board a steamer for Evansville. After we got on board, a squad of five soldiers came down to the boat, to examine our trunks. We all trembled for the result, because all of us had something from the south.

“When I left Shrevesport, a large number of letters had been confided to my care by persons in the south to their friends in the north. There were also a few newspapers sent in the same way. When I arrived at Memphis, I found that it would not do to carry these letters through the lines, and so I took a list of the persons to whom they were addressed and their places of residence, and read them carefully over, after which I destroyed them. This I did that I might drop a note, when I got through the lines, to the persons for whom the letters were intended, and thus convey to them the knowledge of the welfare of their friends in the south. The newspapers were not destroyed, because it was not supposed that there was anything about them which was contraband of war. On the contrary, I was foolish enough to suppose that the authorities would be pleased to get such information as they might contain.

“My comrades had not been so thoughtful as to destroy their letters, and consequently were less fortunate. The soldiers commenced searching one of my comrade's trunks. They found nothing contraband except the letters; the epistles of friends at the south to those whom they could not reach by any other channel; but these were sufficient to criminate him, and he was ordered to prepare for a march. The other one, on being searched, was found likewise guilty, and was similarly disposed of. When he learned that he would be detained, he exclaimed:

“‘Oh, God! I have done nothing wrong. I took these letters to accommodate my friends. There is nothing in them of a political character, or that would harm the government. I live in Philadelphia, and am on the way there to see my wife, from whom I have been separated for many months.’

“‘I love my wife as well as anybody,’ said the soldier, ‘and I have not seen her for six months. There is no way but for you to go.’

“So they took my two comrades from the boat, and then come to examine my baggage. I had no letters, but there were some New Orleans newspapers. These they did not find and I began to think I was all right, and should soon be out of the power of the military. However, after they had done searching my trunk they asked:

“‘Where do you come from?’

“‘From Helentown,’ I answered, thinking that truth would be best.

“‘What,’ said he, in a very rough manner, ‘don't you know you have no right to go to Helentown? I guess I will take you along too.’

“I paused for a moment and then said, ‘If you will allow me sir, I will tell you who I am and whence I came?’

“‘Well, go ahead!’ was his reply.

“‘I am a minister of the gospel. I lived in Chicago for three years, and my family is there now. I had an engagement in Shrevesport, Louisiana, and have been there since the breaking out of the rebellion. I am now on my way to join my family, having with much difficulty and danger got thus far on my journey.’ This was my history.

“‘Now, sir, you say you come from the south. I want you to tell me what is going on there, and all about what you have seen and heard.’

“‘I am a clergyman. I do not meddle with politics, and have taken no part on either side, and don't know anything about the merits of the case.’

“‘You are a h—ll of a minister. Go on! I don't want you. But let me tell you, if you had told me what you knew of things in the south, I should have taken you along, for he who will violate the confidence of one party, will do no better by the other. If you would tell what had taken place in the south, I should have had good reason to believe you had told what was going on in the north.’

“I was then permitted to go on board, and in due time arrived in Chicago, where I found my family in good health, and anxiously waiting for tidings from me. The trip cost me two months of excessive labor, and six hundred dollars in gold.

“My comrades in this flight from Dixie were placed in jail in Paducah, and were kept there for four weeks, when they were liberated and allowed to go home. Whether there was sufficient cause for their detention, let judges decide. For myself, it appears to me now, as it appeared to me then, to be a needless and cruel exercise of military authority.

“It is possible that I should have been able to escape had I not been a member of the Masonic Fraternity, but the probability that otherwise there would have been a drumhead court-martial, a firing squad, the sharp ringing of musketry, and three nameless graves. Believing this, I shall not cease to bless God that I was a Free and Accepted Mason.”

Reminiscences by a Past Grand Lecturer.

THE SIXTH ARTICLE.

The reader of these reminiscences must remember that we make no pretensions to writing original stories, or what may be called fiction got up for the occasion, believing that one fact is worth twenty fictions. The former shows the true working of the Order; the latter only what might have been under certain circumstances. The object has been rather to glean pleasing and instructive sketches from my own experience, and to relate incidents as I have received them from the actors.

And to rescue from oblivion such sketches as the following, which, with others in the series were given to the public years ago, believing that their reproduction will be gratifying to the readers of THE MASONIC TROWEL, we will proceed to give

THE DOCTOR'S STORY.

It was a little past a stormy midnight of December, 184—, that I retired after some forty hours of arduous professional toil. An epidemic of the most fearful character was devastating the beautiful village of K——, where I then resided. The tender child, the delicate woman, the robust man—it seemed to make little difference who were attacked by the subtle disease; a few hours and all was over.

The history of that terrible pestilence, I gave to the professional world soon after it had ceased its ravages. For a long time seeming to baffle all medical skill, those who were attended and those who were not, alike passed into the silent land amid suffering unutterable; we were almost happy to see even our own loved ones die to escape the agonies of “the spotted death," as it was shudderingly designated. Anon the disease lost its terrible energy—a few were saved or spared; then many, then all recovered. But to this day, few, then living in K—— can speak of the dark hours of that December, without a whitened lip and trembling voice.

Benumbed with cold and harassed with both mental and physical fatigue, I sought my bed for a few hours repose. But within an hour after, came the dreaded "alarm at the door," and wearily and with many maledictions at my own choice of a profession which exposed me to such hardships, I went out again into the storm. Miles and miles away, through forest and over prairie where the wind swept coldly and remorselessly, I followed my conductor until we arrived finally at his home, and such a home! A log house, in the middle of a clearing of some fifteen or twenty acres from the heavy timber, without a floor, the roof of poles, bark and straw, the interstices between the logs roughly chinked with chips and mud; upon the ground a pile of straw, and a few coarse blankets; a fire-place with its crane, and a few of the simplest cooking utensils; no crockery, or chairs or tables, save rough blocks cut from the neighboring trees. Suffice it to say, that in all my experience in a new country, I had never seen such utter evidence of destitution. And yet, here and there were little relics which convinced me that culture, refinement and "better days" had been known. Everything was scrupulously neat—the very arrangement of the blocks which served for chairs and tables showed that the occupants were no ordinary persons. Thanks to the abundance of at least one comfort, a great fire roared and sparkled on the hearth, diffusing a cheerful warmth and light, by which I could observe and examine my patients.

The wife was writhing and struggling in the delirium which marked the first reaction of the fever. Side by side upon the same poor couch were a boy of ten and a girl of fourteen, upon whose life-fountains the awful chill had breathed, and they lay pulseless and deathly cold, with only now and then an uneasy motion, and the heavy sighing and irregular respiration to show that life still lingered; they had been seized since their father had started from home.

Their features were so faultlessly chiseled, so delicate in formation, so graceful in outline, that as I looked at them my very breath was involuntarily bated from fear that the little flame still flickering in the socket of their lives might be extinguished by its impulse. The mother had been peerlessly beautiful, and neither the ravages of care or sorrow, nor the angry demon of disease could efface the evidence. But now the mind wandered among evidences of joy and sorrow "like sweet bells jangled out of time and harsh," snatches of childish song, then fragments of soul-stirring strains from the old masters of melody, then a plaintive measure which filled the eyes with fast flowing tears: "Let us go away, George, where we can forget and be forgotten!"

The father was wholly unmanned, and the strong man wept like a child. Accustomed as I had been for years to scenes of suffering and grief, I could scarcely restrain my emotions, but by an almost superhuman effort I mastered myself, and undertook the use of those agencies which experience had shown best adapted to relieve and save.

Thank God! they were successful. Soon after sunrise in the morning, the blood coursed freely through the veins of both the son and the daughter without any of the frightful delirium which too often accompanied the reaction. The mother slept quietly, and the crisis had evidently passed.

After giving my professional directions I took leave. Six hours after, the summons came again, but this time for the father. I found him insensible, cold, and with the characteristic lurid spots where the blood had stagnated and decomposed beneath the skin. My experience told that his days were numbered. The slightest touch upon the surface elicited groans of agony, but I could lift the eyelids, and put my finger upon the ball before the uncontracting pupil without any sign of feeling. The head was thrown back to its utmost tether, and the slow, irregular and labored respiration hissed through the clenched teeth. I thought he would die at once, but he did not. By and by the reaction came fierce and overmastering. The blood seemed literally boiling in the arteries, the cold and contracted features blazed with excitement, and the eyes gleamed like coals of fire. He fancied that he trod again the marble floor of the exchange, and muttered of gigantic speculations. Alternately he groaned and tossed, then he turned and greeted his wife and children, and the stern man of business was the husband and father, gentle and loving. It was all clear now, for soon he exclaimed, "it is lost—all is lost, but no shadow of dishonor shall rest upon your name or mine—we will pay it all"

And this they had done. She was a younger daughter of one of the proudest of England's nobility, who had forsaken all for her American lover. He was the son of a merchant prince of——. This father still lives in solitary magnificence in the same city, but discarded his son, with a curse, "because he was such a fool as not to compromise with his creditors, thereby saving, as he might have done, the bulk of his fortune." The kingly spirit of both son and daughter-in-law revolted from this. They paid the last dollar, and utterly penniless, but rich in honor and mutual love, with their children sought the then "far West." The rest of the story is soon told.

In the strange incoherences of his mental wanderings, I gathered that he was a Mason. A gold chain which I, at first, supposed supported a watch, proved to have attached to it a Masonic jewel, bearing the inscription: "Presented to ——, Past Grand Master of ——, by the Grand Lodge," with the date, and this: "In the darkness he feared not. In the danger he stood firm." At that time there was not a Masonic lodge, to my knowledge, within a hundred miles of K——. I was not myself then a Mason, although loving Masonry for my father's sake, who "feared not in the darkness, and in danger stood firm." I had heard that C. and W., of our village, were Masons, and speedily resolved upon a test. Mounting my horse, I rode to the village, called upon each of them, and stated the facts. Noiselessly, but efficiently, they acted, and acted at once.

It was wonderful how speedily that lowly log house, in the far away forest, was supplied with comforts, with luxuries, and sympathizing attendants. Alas, it was too late for poor ——. Once I thought his countenance glowed as though he felt the fraternal token from one that watched him in his final hour—but the secret is with God only. He passed away and left to his family an untarnished honor, and little else. But I saw him buried as a Mason; for the first time I had witnessed the solemn ceremonial. The wife and children were still unable to be present, but beneath the wintry sky, the evergreens fell upon a beautiful coffin, which brotherly love had provided, and fraternal tears followed him to the narrow house. The next day a petition for a Masonic lodge charter was signed in K——, and now and ever since it has had reason to boast of as prosperous and loving band of brothers as the country affords.

The widow and children were not forgotten. The rough log shanty has given place to a modest cottage, over which the vines clamber, and around which roses cluster. Want fled away and comfort came, charmed by the genius of Masonry. No niggardly provision was made by those Masons who had loved and cherished Masonry in the dark and speechless hours of its adversity, for the family of him who "in the darkness feared not and in the danger stood firm."

Time, which has scattered silver thread in the raven tresses of the Mason's widow, has also mellowed her sorrow into the serene hope of ere long joining him in that better land where the tears are wiped from all eyes.

The daughter lives and happy in new ties, brings glimpses of the earlier life to the sad eyes of her mother.

To-day the little boy, now grown a man, with all the father ennobling his brow, called upon me, on a furlough from his regiment, having received a severe but not dangerous wound, whilst leading his company during one of the most trying hours at Shiloh. He remembered me as one of his earliest friends, and made himself known as a brother, by evidences which, the world over, need no further vouchers.

In a Masonic official position, I have assisted in performing the last sad offices for two of the brethren indicated above, who have gone to their "refreshment on high;" some have gone to other lands, and it seems fitting that I should chronicle this brief history of that inner life of Masonry, as it was when the dark hours first began to fade into the light of a new morning of glowing prosperity.

[It may be interesting to the reader to know that the brother is now, and has been for many years, a resident of one of the largest cities in our State, where at the head of one of our best colleges, he has won more than golden honors, and has filled many importent positions in the gift of the Royal Craft.]

Address Delivered at the Installation of the Officers of Lena Lodge and Chapter in Dec. Last, by W. Bro. S. J. Dodds.

You have heard the solemn ceremonies of the installation of the officers of this lodge and chapter. These are no light and trifling forms. They are no new ceremonies improvised for this occasion for the purpose of presenting only the beauties of Masonry before the world, or to impress on the minds of those, not members of the Order, the good instructions here given, but they are such pledges as every presiding officer of a Masonic body, has from time immemorial been obliged to give before he could assume the duties of his office. The charges given are the same as have in every Masonic lodge on similar occasions been impressed upon those who, from time to time, have been called to fill these responsible stations in our Order.

If, in times past, any one has failed to fulfil these promises, or proved recreant to the good lessons taught in these ceremonies, as well as throughout the whole ceremonies of our Order, it is not for the want of the repetition of these important truths, nor the fault of the Institution, but the effect of the evil tendencies and the desperate wickedness of the human heart and the unsubdued passions.

As it would be wrong to denounce the religion of Jesus Christ, because, while ministers, Sabbath after Sabbath, proclaim the truth from the sacred desk, and the written Word of Life itself is in almost every house, men still listen unmoved to, and harden their hearts against the reception of God's eternal love; as it would be wrong to condemn the church because men with unrenewed hearts perjure themselves before its sacred altar, in the solemn ceremonies of admission into the church militant; as it would be wrong to deny the Divine reality of the Christian religion and the Divine origin of the church, as well as the good influence it exerts in the world, because hypocrites, unregenerated and sinful men gain admission into it; so to lay the faults, the misdemeanors, the imperfections, and the crimes of individual Masons at the door of the Institution of Masonry, and to condemn its teachings because they are not always put into general practice, is an absurdity.

Having listened to the charges and instructions given this evening, you are doubtless led to inquire in your own minds, what is Masonry?

Masonry is not religion. Although the Institution rests upon the solid foundation of a firm trust in the existence, omnipresence and over-ruling power of God; although we (as Masons are taught) take God's Holy Word as the rule and guide of our faith; although the glorious precepts which that Book contains are constantly held up before every Mason in each step he advances, and although the Mason first, last and at all times is taught to implore the blessing of Almighty God in every laudable undertaking, yet we do not claim that Masonry is a religion, or that it has or ever can save a soul from eternal death It is the handmaiden of religion. It points man to the same God the Christian worships. When its teachings are followed in their purity, it fits and prepares the heart for the reception of the instructions and Holy Truths of Religion.

Because many of our members do not embrace the plan of salvation which God has revealed in his gospel, and become members of some orthodox church, those that know nothing of Masonry, except from the every day acts of its members, erroneously say that we make Masonry our religion. It is not true.

Because of the unmasonic conduct of some of our brethren, by reason of profanity and intemperance, the Institntion is condemned. These two vices are regarded by the Masonic law as crimes deserving the greatest punishment known to our code, expnlsion from all the rights and privileges of the Order. No man can be a good Mason and true who indulges in either of these crimes, for they are nothing less than Masonic crimes. I am free to acknowledge that these violations of our laws are not punished with as much rigor as they should be. We are too apt to permit our Masonic charity to overreach itself and pass over these offenses, in the hope that our erring brethren may be induced to forsake their evil ways, and to walk in the paths of sobriety and morality marked out by Masonry. These two evils are to a considerable extent indulged in by members of the Order. Many Masons, losing sight of landmarks, and forgetting the solemn instructions given to the initiate, trample on the principles of Freemasonry with seeming impunity. They forget the lessons they have been taught within our walls, and led astray by their passions and the evil tendencies of the heart, they need the strong curb of Masonic law to bring them to the proper conception of right and justice, and the duties they owe to God and man.

Masonry is a moral and intellectual science. It teaches morality; morality in its highest and broadest sense; not as it is practiced by many, but as it is taught in its purity in the Bible, that unerring guide, which makes every duty plain, and the performance of them a pleasure rather than a burden. Every Mason is bound to obey the moral law. It teaches justice to all alike without prejudice or partiality. It teaches honesty in all transactions, and gives it as the best policy under any and all circumstances. It teaches brotherly love, a love true and genuine. Not such a love as is blind to the faults and imperfections of others, but a love that strives to reform, elevate and benefit others. Not that it is intended to pick up, redeem the debased and fallen, and by its efforts and teachings, bring them to a high standard of excellence, but such a love, as shall draw by the influence of kindness, kindred hearts together, and bind in indissoluble bands those who are true and worthy, keep them there, and make them better. It teaches us to avoid excess, and hence intemperance is as much an infringement against the laws of Masonry, as it is against the unalterable laws of God. It teaches the necessity of education; thus fitting and preparing the mind for higher and better things. Like the rugged stone taken from the quarries, which requires the action of proper tools in the hand of the skillful workman to fit it for the builder's use, so Masonry teaches us that the mind requires the chisel of education to fit us as stones for that spiritual building, "that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," and whose builder and maker is God. It teaches benevolence; not such benevolence as seeks the adulations and praise of a selfish world, but a benevolence as oftimes comes to the needy and distressed in their hour of affliction, unawares, and whose authors are seemingly unknown. We do not want our alms to be known and seen of men, but to ameliorate the condition of those who are needy. Yes, Masonry teaches charity truly first to the household of faith, but its teachings are not confined to these limits. No, its charity is world-wide; a charity as extensive as the blue vaults of heaven itself. It teaches equality. The high, the low, the rich and the poor, meet upon our mosaic pavement upon the square. Yes, it teaches the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and binds in that vast brotherhood all nations, tongues and kindreds of the earth. It teaches that purity of life and rectitude of conduct, are essential to gain admission into the eternal mansions of the blest. It teaches loyalty to the government, discourages plots and conspiracies, in evidence of which, witness the solemn promises of our W. M.: "Do you promise to be a good man and true and strictly to obey the moral law? Do you promise to be a peaceable citizen, and cheerfully to conform to the laws of the country in which you reside? Do you promise not to be concerned in plots and conspiracies against the government of the country in which you live, but patiently submit to the decisions of the law and the constituted authorities? Do you promise to pay proper respect to the civil magistrates, to work diligently, live creditable, and act honorably by all men?" It teaches industry: that as we came into the world rational beings, so we should be industrious ones; that thereby we may be able to contribute to the relief of our fellow-men, and thus aid each other in making smooth the rugged paths of life. It teaches us to regulate our lives by that Divine attribute, truth, which should permeate and influence our thoughts, words and actions. It teaches prudence whereby we may judge and determine those things which are for our present as well as future happiness. It inculcates virtue and impresses the necessity of this important Divine attribute. It inculcates a love for arts and sciences, and impresses a due regard of the importance of a full acquaintance with their useful principles. It teaches the shortness of human life, and the sure decay of all human greatness. It teaches a reverence for the sabbath, as a day of rest and for the contemplation of the perfections of God. It teaches of the wisdom, the truth, the perfection, and the glory of God. It teaches the resurrection from the dead. That though man is of few days and full of trouble; that though we travel over the rough and rugged paths of life, beset with dangers on every side, the heart torn and lacerated by afflictions, the spirit weighed down by difficulties; although we to-day enjoy the powers, possessions and pleasures, and encounter the stern realities of life, and to-morrow are cut down by an untimely death, and are laid in the cold and silent tomb, while dear and loving friends stand weeping round the narrow resting-place, and there pay the last sad tribute of respect to this earthly tabernacle, which must soon wither away and join its kindred dust from whence it came, the Mason is taught that the soul can never, no, never die; that there is a life beyond the grave; and that though that future life is hid beyond the impenetrable veil of time, amid the unfathomable realities of an endless eternity, he is taught that there is strength in the "lion of the tribe of Judah," and that this perishing mortal shall put on immortality. It teaches the doctrine of rewards and punishments in that life beyond the river; that to gain those rewards a well-spent life and a firm trust in Divine Providence are essential, and that the All-seeing Eye whom the sun, moon and stars obey, and under whose watchful care even comets perform their stupendous revolutions, pervades the inmost recesses of the human heart, and will reward us according to our merits.

These are some of the teachings of Freemasonry; hence we claim that when its teachings are properly heeded, followed and practiced, it will make its votaries wiser and better; better men, better friends, better neighbors, better citizens and better Christians.

Friends, you may perhaps think that I have painted too glowing a picture; that I have given too much stress to these things, but let me say in all candor, and every reflecting Mason will bear me out in it, that they are the truths that are taught in these retreats. Can you wonder then, that we love to meet together in our lodges? That enough stress is not always given to these principles is true, and I am also aware that Masons fail to put into practice in their lives the lessons they hear repeated from time to time. With sects and isms we have nothing to do; politics are forever banished from our midst; sectarianism cannot enter here; and consequently Greek and Jew and Christian, whoever he be, so that he bows to the rule of Almighty God, can here meet upon a common level, and find loving hands, and sympathizing hearts, whether in joy or sorrow, happiness or grief.

Brethren, I appeal to you to see to it that these monsters of iniquity, profanity and intemperance, are driven from our midst. Already are our hearts cheered by the evidences which come to us from every quarter, of a determination to root out these evils from our lodges.

Let the good work go on. Have you a brother who after having so solemnly declared his trust in God, as all must do before they are admitted within our walls, dares take the sacred name of Deity in vain, go to him in love, and in the most tender manner remind him of his faults in private; show him his errors; save him if possible. If all efforts fail, then enforce the full penalty of the violated law, for he that so far forgets his duty to his God, will in time of temptation fail in his duty to his brethren, and prove unworthy to be taken by the hand as a brother. Yes, he who will dare take the name of his Maker in vain, cannot be a good Mason.

Furthermore, brethren, beware of the first appearance among you, of that great moral and social evil, intemperance. It is the greatest enemy of Freemasonry in the whole earth, far more to be feared in its pernicious influences than all other foes of Masonry combined. It debases the man; it perverts his morals; it destroys his intellect; it unfits him for intercourse with his fellow-men; it overthrows his reason; it undermines his health; it destroys his honor and his integrity; it brings disgrace upon himself, his family, and his friends; it makes him the slave of his passions; it renders it impossible for him to govern himself; it leads the Mason to violate his obligations; it unfits him to pay that rational homage which is due from the creature to his Creator; it forever debars him from the paradise of God. Fly from it I beseech you, as from the most deadly pestilence. If your brother stands upon its slippery foundation unnerved, trembling, tottering upon the brink of its awful precipice, stretch forth the friendly hand to save that falling brother; whisper good counsel, and aid in his reformation. Then, if all your efforts are unavailing; when forbearance ceases to be a virtue, cut off the diseased member, even though it be the right hand. and cast it from you. Be ye first pure, then peaceable. Brethren, attend the lodge, root out these tares. Make Masonry what it was intended by its great founders, a benevolent institution, whose great object is to make men wiser and better, and consequently happier.

Brethren, we have, in a great measure, brought reproach upon our own heads in allowing these pernicious and leprous evils to gain a foothold within our sacred retreats, which are dedicated to Almighty God. Let us see to it that we purge thoroughly our lodges. Let us draw taut the reins of Masonic law. Let us cut off from the body every diseased member that will not yield to milder remedies before the fell destroyer permeates the whole, and render us a by-word and reproach to the civilized, not to say Christian world.

And finally, my brethren. and you, W. M., whose head is already whitening for the grave, and whose days are drawing to a close, you who have stood beside the last resting-place of departed friends, permit me in all brotherly love and kindness, in view of all these important teachings of Masonry; in the light of God's Holy Word, and in view of the solemn fact that God will assuredly judge us according to the "great light" He has given us, to ask you, are you prepared to teach those truths and exemplify, by practice, before your brethren and each other, the requirements of Freemasonry, as they should be to give the weight, without a heart attuned to God's praise and His Divine assistance? Ponder this well. Search the Scriptures, for in them "ye think ye have eternal life," and they are they which testify of God's love and mercy; they bring to light the only "way of the truth and the life;" they will not mislead or deceive you, but will guide you to that Glorious Lodge Above, where our Supreme Grand Master forever presides, and they furnish the only password whereby we can gain admission. The Grand Tyler stands at the door armed with the sword of eternal justice, and unless we are found to be worthy and well qualified, having put off the rags of our own righteousness, and having on the shining robes of God's righteousness, we cannot pass its portals and enter into and enjoy its everlasting refreshments. Be ye, therefore, ready, for in the day ye think not, the summons will come, and well will it be with you if ye shall be found truly prepared to gain an entrance there.

Masonry Based Upon the Holy Bible.

Having concluded, in last issue of Pomeroy's Democrat, the series of articles we wrote on "What Freemasonry Is," in which we positively stated that the principles of the Masonic Society were based upon the teachings of the Holy Writings—our object in doing so being to prove that all the assertions of the fanatics of the Oberlin school, or illiberal religionists, were but the emanations of fools or knaves—we shall give proof of the correctness of our statements by a reference to some of the ceremonial—exoteric—of the Master Masons degree, as one which is universal, and practiced in all Masonic rites,

As the degree of Entered Apprentice implies the first knowledge of God, acquired by man in a state of nature, so the degree of Fellow Craft has reference to the state of the human mind, and to the acquaintance of men with their Creator. The degree of Master Mason is considered as analogous to a dispensation far more perfect and sublime. Its ceremonies are exceedingly solemn and impressive, calculated to awaken strong feelings of reverential awe, and to excite all the energies of the soul to acts of fervent and profound devotion. It recognizes, as do the preceding degrees, the existence and sovereignty of Jehovah; but the truths it most prominently presents are, the resurrection of the body and the immortality of the soul. It is also considered as plainly indicating the resurrection of the soul from the deadly sleep of ignorance of God and violation of his laws, to the life and liberty dispensed by the Gospel.

The first section of the lecture particularly specifies the ceremonies used in raising a candidate to this sublime degree.

The following passages of Scripture are read during the ceremonies:

Eccl. xii. 1-7. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them:

"While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain:

"In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened:

"And the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low; and he shall rise up at the voice of the bird; and all the daughters of music shall be laid low:

"Also, when they shall be afraid. of that which is high; and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail; because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets:

"Or even the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern:

"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall listen unto God who gave it."

The above selection from the Great Light of Masonry, is a beautiful and affecting description of the body of man suffering under the infirmities of old age, and metaphorically compared to a worn-out house about to fall into decay. How appropriate is such an introduction to the sublime and awful ceremonies of that degree, in which death, the resurrection, and life eternal are the lessons to be taught by all its symbols and allegories.

In this sublime degree are illustrated the implements, which are those of the preceding degrees, with the addition of the Trowel. From this implement, by adverting to its use among operative Masons, we are reminded that the materials of society are united only by the cement of harmony and social affection; for which virtues Masons ought, above all other men, to be ever distinguished.

There is an historical tradition in this degree, which exemplifies the nature and extent of Masonic obligations, by an affecting example. in which the following prayer is said:

"Thou, O God, who knowest our down sitting and uprising and understandest our thoughts afar off. shield and defend us, we humbly beseech thee, from the evil intentions of our enemies, and support us under the trials and afflictions we are destined to endure, while traveling through this vale of tears. For man, that is born of a woman, is of few days and full of trouble. He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not. Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee, thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass; turn from him, that he may rest, till he shall accomplish, as an hireling, his day. For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost. and where is he? As the waters fall from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down and riseth not up, till the heavens be no more. Yet. O Lord, have compassion on the children of thy creation; administer comfort in time of trouble, and save them with an everlasting salvation. Amen."

Is there anything infidel, or antagonistic to sound morality, in that prayer? Is it not better in every sense of the word than the mouthings of ignorant fanatics, and bigoted fools? Common sense dictates without hesitancy the answer.

The three steps, delineated in a lodge, are emblematical of youth, manhood and old age; and teach us that in youth, as Entered Apprentices, we should industriously bend our minds to the acquisition of useful knowledge, which in manhood, as Fellow Crafts, we ought to apply to the discharge of our respective duties to our Creator, our neighbor and ourselves—that in old age, as Master Masons, we may enjoy the consolation of a life spent in the service of God.

It is apparent from the preceding considerations, that Masonry is not an association of merely operative artists. nor a society instituted for purposes of general and undefined beneficence: but that it is rather a holy institution—a mystery of ancient times—teaching. under various figures and symbols, some of the most interesting and sublime truths in religion; inculcating a pure worship of the one living and true God; enjoining personal holiness—a habit of constant devotion and intercourse with Heaven; the strictest watch over our passions; an unbounded benevolence to the whole brotherhood of the human family; an unwearied practice of the most exalted moral virtue; and the necessity of a faithful and habitual preparation for another state of interminable existence.

In order that we may commence the eleventh volume on the first of June, the twelfth number of this volume—being the next—will not be issued until April 20, and no paper will be issued in May. This will give us time to make contemplated arrangements, and clear off a mass of work which has accumulated in the office.

The Ballot for Each Degree.

Our co-laborer, Bro. Rounseville, having given his views in an article published in the February number of THE TROWEL, entitled "The Triune Ballot," we now propose to give a history of the matter in the Grand Lodge of Illinois, with our own views. And here we take occasion to remark, that Bro. Rounseville is as thoroughly independent in his department of THE TROWEL as we are in ours, and that we are not responsible for his opinions, but both of us are at full liberty to traverse each other's views "to the top of our bent." In most things we shall concur, and in the things in which we do not, and which we see fit to discuss, our readers will find how two fast friends can amicably disagree.

Now to the subject in hand. The first constitution and by-laws made no allusion to the subject.

An inquiry addressed to M. W. Bro. Lusk, in 1844, elicited the following decision:

"That a rejection upon a ballot for a degree did not amount to a suspension or expulsion from the lodge, nor did it divest the applicant of the rights, privileges or benefits of the degree or degrees which he might have taken; that if he was rejected for want of skill, whenever he perfected himself in the degree or degrees he had taken, he had a right to demand and receive a higher degree, unless there were other objections; in that case the objections should be embodied in the form of charges, to which he should be required to answer."

In response to this, the committee on the address reported, and the Grand Lodge adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the privileges of our Institution are embraced in the three degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason, to which a single ballot in favor of a candidate entitles him; and the last two of which he may receive, when qualified by suitable proficiency, unless by apostacy from duty after the degree last taken, he be proved unworthy."

This was the first legislation upon this subject. The inference is plain that the lodges, at least some of them, balloted for each degree. The doctrine of the decision and of the resolution, was the doctrine then held by a majority of the Grand Lodges, and which has found its way in works on Masonic law, down to the present time, although the decisions of a large majority of the Grand Lodges are now to the contrary. That it ignored the rights of individual Masons, set aside the old salutary usage that a ballot may be demanded at any time, and repudiated the right of protest, are manifest from the sweeping character of the resolution.

At the grand communication in 1846, Bodley Lodge No. 1, protested against the resolution, and demanded a ballot for each degree. The matter was referred to a committee, who reported as follows:

"In relation to the resolution inserted on pages 13 and 14 of the printed proceedings of the last Grand Lodge, your committee would also observe that they are of the opinion that a general compliance therewith is calculated to be more injurious than beneficial to the Fraternity. It appears to us that danger is far more likely to arise from the inconsiderate admission of improper persons into the Masonic family, than from the exclusion of such as may be truly worthy. It seldom if ever happens, that every member of a lodge is present when a candidate is balloted for; and it is very possible that the only one in possession of reasons sufficient for the rejection of the applicant, may be absent when his petition is acted upon. It is, consequently, very proper, whenever such is the case, that the brother who would have opposed his reception in the first instance, had he been present, should be allowed another opportunity for the purpose, and to have his objections removed, if not well founded, or the further advancement of the candidate arrested, should it appear, upon mature deliberation, that he is unworthy of the privilege he seeks to obtain. Besides, it may be received as a sound maxim, that no one who has been once admitted within the portals of the lodge, and initiated as an Entered Apprentice, will, on slight grounds, be refused further light; or, that one who has been admitted to the first and second degrees will be rejected on his application for the third, except from an imperative sense of duty to the Masonic Institution. Your committee, therefore, can see no necessity for the resolution in question, and respectfully recommend its repeal."

The Grand Lodge concurred in the report, and suspended the operation of the resolution until the following year.

At the Grand Communication of 1847, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the resolution in Grand Lodge proceedings of 1845 (page 13 of printed minutes) be rescinded, and that subordinate lodges be required to ballot for candidates in every degree."

At the Grand Communication in 1850, at Shawneetown, Grand Master Hobbs brought the resolution before the Grand Lodge, and suggested that it be rescinded, or that another be adopted explaining it. He then entered into a lengthy, labored and able argument to show that having passed the one ordeal, the candidate was entitled to all the symbolic degrees. But his very radicalism and undisguised charity, proposing to consider the Institution a school of "reformation," rebounded, and caused the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the standing resolution which requires a unanimous ballot for each of the three degrees, should be understood literally; and that it should be the same in each, and unanimous in all; upon the moral, intellectual and Masonic qualifications of the applicant."

In 1854, this resolution was again re-adopted, and so the matter rested until 1858, when Past Grand Master Hobbs went into Grand Lodge, caused a committee to be appointed, and wrested the pending by-laws from the committee which had had them in charge for several months, and with strong hand, backed by some of the ablest men in the body but mostly unacquainted with its history and the workings of this very question, and caused the following by-law to be adopted:

"One ballot on a petition to be made a Mason, if clear, entitles the applicant to the three degrees of symbolic Masonry."

Dr. Buck was one of the committee, and helped to pass the by-law, and was elected Grand Master.

In 1859, he said: "I am now satisfied from one year's experience as Grand Master, that it does not answer the purpose intended."

Two amendments were offered, one the resolution of 1850 and 1854, and the other in these words:

"Strike out section 51, and insert in lieu thereof the following—the ballot shall be spread for each degree, and shall be unanimous."

In 1860, Dr. Buck further urged the ballot for each degree, and both the amendments proposed the year previous were adopted and consolidated in form following:

"The ballot shall be spread for each degree and shall be unanimous. A unanimous ballot for each of the three degrees, should be understood literally, and should be the same in each, and unanimous in all, upon the moral, intellectual and Masonic qualifications of the applicant."

And from October, 1860, down to October, 1871, this law has remained undisturbed, and will, of necessity, so remain until October, 1873, a period of thirteen years. From our first entrance into the Grand Lodge in 1848, we have steadfastly stood by the doctrine, and have lived under it as the law, with the exception of two—may be three—years, and more to that law than any other one thing are we indebted for the strength and power of our Fraternity in Illinois, and our glory and fame abroad.

Whenever it has not been the law, individuals have been forced upon the Fraternity in defiance of protests, in defiance of demands for a ballot denied, and resulting in the unseating of members, and the destruction of lodges.

The greater contains the less. It may be true that injustice is often done to applicants for initiation and candidates for advancement by their rejection. It is true. The very fact that it is true, only shows that a proper use of the ballot has not been made on a previous occasion. The good and worthy are not the only ones who apply for admission to our temples. And if any others apply and gain admission, woe betide the worthy applicant when any feeling of malice, revenge or interest may ininfluence them, secretly and silently to say no!

It is alleged that the malice and the interests of such men should be frustrated. How? Are we to prejudge our brethren? Are we to give certainty to even reasonable suspicions, and say that they have acted wrongly without a hearing? Are we to violate Masonic comity, Masonic courtesy and Masonic law, and force even an E. A. or F. C. upon the lodge, because we fancy that objections may be unjust or frivolous?

Admit that appearances justify the idea that the rejection of an E. A. or F. C. is unjust. How are we to know? But you must prefer charges; suppose that I know things professionally, how am I to prefer charges? Suppose that I know things which no one else knows, and which I cannot disclose without personal hazard or danger?

The truth, stripped of all meretricious coverings is this; the admission that candidates for advancement may be unjustly stopped by a negative ballot is an admission that an unjust man is in the lodge who should not be there, and that the ballot has not been properly used; a lodge made up of just men, will not let an unjust rejection remain, but will quickly and surely repair even a temporary wrong; the triune ballot is a safe instrument in the hands of good men; the Masonic presumption is that every member is a good man, and this presumption must stand until charges are preferred and the contrary is shown; and it is better to stay the advancement of good men, than to sully our fair fame by the admission of bad men, at any time.

Review of Proceedings.

MISSOURI.—Grand Lodge.—Met at St. Louis, October 10, Thos. E. Garrett, G. M.; Geo. Frank Gouley. G. Secretary. Two hundred and six lodges represented by 284 representatives. Among the distinguished brethren present, were P. G. Masters Penick, Vincil, Whitcomb, Carnegy, Foster, Saunders, and Rolls, and Bro. Martin Collins, Representative for Illinois. The address of the Grand Master is the most thoroughly practical and business-like document we have ever seen emanating from any officer in Missouri, and it is wise and able also. He granted thiriy dispensations for new lodges.

His allusion to the Chicago fire, which commenced on the 8th. and closed only on the 9th, is both noble and beautiful:

RELIEF FOR CHICAGO.

The most terrible of all destroyers has just accomplished his master-piece in the world's history, and chose for his field a sister city in our neighboring jurisdiction of Illinois. The fire-king has swept a great metropolis out of existence, and made houseless and homeless two hundred thousand people. Chicago is a story of yesterday. Little or nothing is left of one of the wonders of our continent, but a vast waste of coals and ashes, and a quarter of a million suffering people, who lived in or depended upon the doomed city for support. The jaws of an earthquake never opened and closed with such crushing effect upon the lives and substance of men, as the habitations and fortunes of our brethren of Chicago have been swallowed up by this dire calamity. I have no words to express what I feel in this connection, and what I know must be the sense of the Grand Lodge of Missouri. Let us not give play to our feelings but in action. The misfortunes and needs of so large a mass of humanity appeal, not alone to our charity as Masons, but to our manhood. Let us do all we can do promptly, and, while we lament the necessity, be proud of our condition to respond to the cry for sympathy and aid. Chicago was of wood. What we give now will contribute to rebuild the city of more enduring marble. I recommend the reference of the matter to a special committee, with instructions to act at once.

The Grand Lodge responded the same day by appropriating the sum of one thousand dollars for Chicago relief.

The Committee on Jurisprudence, M. W. Bro. S. H. Saunders, Chairman, in response to the action of the Grand Lodge of Illinois in the matter of Arthur Daniel Tappan, reported as follows:

The committee to whom was referred the question of jurisdiction between this Grand Lodge, and that of our sister Grand Lodge of Illinois, in the making of Bro. Arthur D. Tappan a Mason in Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, have given this subject a careful and thorough examination and will briefly review the facts in the case, and the conclusions they have arrived at.

The M. W. Jno. D. Vincil, when Grand Master of Missouri, was officially informed by his D. D. G. M. Bro. R. Frank Green, of New Mexico, that A. D. Tappan, a citizen of Santa Fe, had returned, after a four months' absence, a Master Mason, having been made so in Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, in the State of Illinois, and as Montezuma Lodge No. 100, was chartered by this Grand Lodge, and there being no Grand Lodge in New Mexico, through and by which this infringement of jurisdiction could be brought before the Grand Lodge of Illinois, it was reported to this Grand Lodge for such action as it might deem best in protecting the rights of one of its subordinates.

While we heartily endorse the protests of Past Grand Master Vincil against infringement of jurisdiction, we must in all candor say, we differ from him in the way and manner that this question was brought before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. When the complaint was made by his Deputy, of this infringement of jurisdiction by a subordinate lodge in Illinois, would it not have been better to have officially informed the Grand Master of Illinois of the complaint made against one of the subordinate lodges of that State, and fraternally requested his investigation of the matter complained of? Such your committee are of opinion would have been the true Masonic course to have been pursued, and might have led to a satisfactory explanation of the differences, as the Grand Lodge of Illinois complains that this Grand Lodge made the charge, tried the case, and passed sentence without giving them notice. While we have the highest opinion of the Masonic knowledge and fraternal spirit that controlled the committee of this Grand Lodge, to whom this part of Grand Master Vincil's address was referred, we must fraternally differ from the conclusions they arrived at, that Bro. A. D. Tappan, should "be recognized only as clandestine until (he) be properly healed by the lodge to whose jurisdiction he properly belongs."

A clandestine Mason is one made in a lodge without a charter, and no one will deny that Mt. Nebo Lodge is and was a regularly chartered lodge, and that a Mason made in that lodge cannot be clandestine; the error was in the action of the lodge, and it should be held responsible if its acts were not delegated by a higher authority, which was the case in this instance, as the Grand Master of Masons of Illinois, M. W. H. G. Reynolds, granted a dispensation for this lodge to confer the degrees on Bro. A. D. Tappan.

Permit us here to say before we enter into a review of the reasons assigned by the Grand Master of Illinois, for his act in this case, that his communication to this Grand Body defending his action has the true ring of Masonry in it; while he defends his own action, and that of Mt. Nebo Lodge, he does it in that fraternal spirit that should animate all Masons, and while we shall attempt to show that some of the positions assumed by him are not sustained by law or usage, we shall do it in the same spirit that animated him.

The whole issue in this difference of opinion between this Grand Lodge and our sister Grand Lodge of Illinois, is, what is legitimately Masonic residence?

If Bro. A. D. Tappan, was a resident of Illinois (and we will quote the by-law of the Grand Lodge of Illinois governing this question—Sec. 38. "The subordinate lodges under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge are instructed not to initiate any candidate who has not resided in the State of Illinois twelve calendar months before such application be made,") at the time that by the Grand Master's dispensation he was made a Mason in Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, then Montezuma Lodge No. 100, New Mexico, has no cause of complaint of an infringement upon its rights; but if Bro. A. D. Tappan was a citizen of Santa Fe, and under the jurisdiction of Montezuma Lodge, and was only on a visit to Illinois, then its rights were infringed by Mt. Nebo Lodge making him a Mason.

We will here say, that we do not believe there was any intentional wrong intended by the M. W. Grand Master of Illinois, or by Mt. Nebo Lodge, in the making of Bro. Tappan a Mason, yet the intention does not do away a wrong—intention and fact are two different things—and had Bro. Tappan carried out his intention as expressed to the Grand Master, and upon which we presume he based the granting of the dispensation, then it would have become a fact, and this difference of opinion upon jurisdiction would never have arisen.

Grand Master Reynolds, in summing up his conclusions near the close of his communication, in the fifth point, shows that this case is not as clear as the noonday's sun, when he says: "Bro. Arthur Daniel Tappan was a single man, with no fixed determinate residence, but with a constant idea of home in Illinois; it has been the custom to respect that idea, and to permit some flexibility in such cases."

From the subsequent action of Bro. Tappan, we would naturally suppose that Past Grand Master Reynolds thinks that there was a great deal more ideal than actual fact where Bro. Tappan did reside. "He was initiated and passed June 6th, and raised June 13th, and was dimitted the same day." His dimitting the same day naturally leads to a doubt of his intention as expressed to the M. W. Grand Master of becoming a citizen of Illinois—was the true cause of his asking for the dispensation—for if he was a citizen of Illinois, and only going back to New Mexico to settle up his business, why dimit? It was either to save paying dues, or some other cause.

The endorsement of the M. W. Grand Master of Illinois, and of Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, and also the fact of Bro. Tappan having been exalted in Santa Fe R. A. Chapter, is sufficient evidence that he was worthy of being made a Mason, and that no injury to our Order has resulted from it. We would recommend that no further action be taken in this case, hoping and believing that this difference of opinion upon this question of jurisdiction may make both jurisdictions more careful in respecting each others rights; and should any difference arise in the future, we will settle it in the true spirit of Masonry, that animates both Grand Lodges, and the fraternal regard that has characterized the past, may ever prevail in the future.

We are gratified with the action of the Grand Lodge in adopting the foregoing calm and carefully prepared report. The dispensation alluded to was issued by our predecessor.

We are afraid that the Masonic Hall is a pretty heavy load; while it appears as if the Grand Lodge ought to own it, and would be made rich by it, yet it does not take it, and others seem anxious to get rid of what they own in it. We here express the hope that the Grand Lodge of Illinois, and every other Grand Lodge, will refuse to pledge its faith to any hall project, until the funds are provided. A strong report was made in favor of building a temple in Chicago, but failed because suitable ground in sufficient quantity could not be procured. Then it was found that halls, ample and reasonably convenient, could be had for $300, which is the interest on $3,000.

Thomas E. Garrett was elected Grand Master; R. E. Anderson, Deputy; Samuel H. Owens, S. G. W.; John E. Ryland, J. G. W.; Wm. N. Loker, Grand Treasurer; Geo. Frank Gouley, Grand Secretary.

The Grand Lodge of Missouri is in a prosperous condition.

KANSAS.—Grand Commandery.—The third annual conclave was held at Topeka, Oct. 16. William O. Gould, G. C.; E. T. Carr, Grand Recorder. Four commanderies, one represented by the then Grand Master Brown, and another by the present Grand Master, Judge Price, were represented. The address was eloquent. The proceedings at Baltimore were reviewed. The proceedings embraced the usual routine. The Grand Commandery, as are all the Masonic bodies in Kansas, is in a prosperous condition. John H. Brown was elected Grand Commander; John M. Price, Deputy; Thos. J. Anderson, G. G.; Jacob D. Rush, G. C. G.; P. G. M. Moses Adams, G. P.; Richard A Hayes, G. S. W.; Richard B. Morris, G. J. W.; Christian Beck, G. Treasurer; Erasmus T. Carr, Leavenworth, Grand Recorder.

The next meeting is to be held at Leavenworth, on the Wednesday next preceding Ascension Day, 1873.

The five commanderies are located at Leavenworth, Atchison, Fort Scott, Lawrence and Topeka; aggregate membership, 175.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. — Grand Chapter.—Annual convention at Washington, Nov. 14. Seven chapters were represented. J. Lockie, G. H. P.; N. D. Larner, Grand Secretary.

The committee on correspondence stated positively that the representation from Illinois did not have pluck enough to obey instructions. This is a sorry return for the assistance rendered the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, in 1868. We were not present, and do not know what influenced our representation, but we do know this, that the resolution had the effect we intended; it secured a high standing in the Grand Council, and the proceedings were approved by the Grand Chapter of Illinois.

We are glad to notice that the eloquent and courteous gentleman, J. Daniels, was elected Grand High Priest. A. T. Longley was elected Deputy; R. W. Hardy, G. K.; D. S. Jones, G. S.; C. W. Hancock, Grand Recorder. Seven chapters show a membership of 910; average, 130.

MISSOURI.—Grand Council.—Met in St. Louis, Oct. 6, Martin Collins, presiding; Geo. Frank Gouley, Grand Reoorder. Three councils represented. The Grand Puissant reported that he had granted dispensations for new councils at St. Joseph, Phelps City, Warrensburg, Knob Noster, Oregon, Platte City, Harrisonville, and for two in St. Louis. Charters were granted to all of them. William A. Prall, was elected Grand Master; Allen McDowell, Deputy; B. G. Wilkerson, D. G. T. Ill.; M. L. Cohn, G. P. C. W.; J. E. Carter. G. C. G.; Thomas E. Shepherd, Grand Chaplain; W. N. Loker, Grand Treasurer; Geo. Frank Gouley, St. Louis, Grand Recorder. Seventeen councils; 531 members; average 31.

That noble craftsman. Grand Master Garrett, is Grand Lecturer.

KANSAS.—Grand Chapter.—The seventh annual convocation was held at Topeka, Oct. 17, E. T. Hilyer, Deputy, presiding; E. T. Carr, Grand Secretary. The Grand High Priest was absent, but forwarded an able address. He reported dispensations granted at Salina, Paola and Burlington. The H. P. and K. at Salina, Comps. C. R. Underwood and B. J. F. Hanna, will be quickly recognized by Illinois Masons. E. D. Hillyer was elected G. H. P.; R. A. Hayes, Deputy; J. D. Rush, G. K.; I. N. Smallwood, G. S.; M. S. Adams, Grand Treasurer, and E. T. Carr, Leavenworth, Grand Secretary. One hundred dollars was sent to Chicago. Nineteen chapters; 650 members; average 34.

P. G. H. P. Bassett presides over the Grand Council of High Priests.

MASSACHUSETTS AND RHODE ISLAND—Grand Commandery.—The proceedings for 1871 contain a beautifully engraved portrait of the distinguished Grand Master, of Templars and Christian gentleman, Wm. Sewall Gardner, of Boston.

November 18. 1870, Wm. Parkman Commandery was constituted, and a rare case of jewels was presented by Grand Treasurer, Wm. Parkman, in whose honor the Commandery was named. The semi-annual assembly met in Boston, May 22. By a report made at this meeting, we learn that the first seven Grand Commanders, Thomas Smith Webb, William Wilkinson, Henry Fowle, John Carlile, John James Loring, Robert Lash, and Edward Asa Raymond, are all dead; that Abraham Annis Dame is the oldest living, now in his 79th year. Sir Charles W. Moore, the veteran editor of the Magazine, was the tenth Grand Commander.

October 16, the Grand Commandery, supported by twenty-nine commanderies, performed escort duty to the Grand Lodge, in laying the corner-stone of the new post-office at Boston.

The sixty-first annual assembly was held in Boston, Oct. 27, Benjamin Dean, presiding; Wm. F. Chapman, Grand Recorder. The reports of the Grand Commander, and other officers, show a marked activity in Templar matters in Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

R. E. Sir Nicholas Van Slyck, of Providence, R. I., was elected Grand Commander, and Wm. F. Chapman, of Boston, Grand Recorder. See elections. Thirty-one commanderies; 4,266 members; average, 137.

NEW YORK—Grand Lodge.—These proceedings have been noticed before. John H. Anthon is Grand Master; Jas. M. Austin, M. D., Grand Secretary.

GEORGIA—Grand Lodge.—The annual communication was held Oct. 31, 1871, at Macon; Samuel Lawrence, G. M.; J. E. Blackshear, Grand Secretary.

Two hundred and twenty lodges were represented. The Grand Master declared the mission of Freemasonry to be "a good message of good tidings to mankind." Well said. The Grand Lodge is building a hall to be completed next April at a cost, including lot, of $60,000. And that is $20,000 to $30,000 more than is necessary.

The Southern Female College, under the care of the Grand Lodge, is reported in good condition, and doing an excellent work.

The Grand Secretary presented the report on correspondence, in which the proceedings of Illinois receivec proper notice.

The Grand Master and Grand Secretary were re-elected.

IOWA.—Grand Commandery.—The annual meeting was held at Council Bluffs, Oct. 14, Robert F. Brower, presiding: 19 commanderies represented. The Grand Commander touchingly alludes to the loss of two of his daughters, and to the severe sickness of his wife; of the meeting of the national bodies and the display at Baltimore, he speaks in no measured terms of praise. Nor did he forget Chicago. Ivanhoe Commandery raised the sum of six hundred dollars for a banquet in honor of the Grand Commandery, but upon learning of the fire in Chicago, the amount was sent to Grand Master Cregier. This act received high commendation in the Grand Commandery. Pitkin G. Wright was elected Grand Commander, and Wm. B. Langridge, of Muscatine, Grand Recorder.

The next meeting will be held at Oskaloosa, Oct. 11, 1872. Twenty-one subordinates; 843 Sir Knights.

COLORADO.—Grand Lodge.—The Grand Lodge met at Denver, Tuesday, Sept. 29th, H. M. Teller, Grand Master. In his able address, the Grand Master remarked that he had served the Grand Lodge one-half of the period of its existence, and asked to be excused from further service. But he was elected again, and undoubtedly, as in the past, so in the future, Freemasonry will prosper under the guiding hand of so able and wise a ruler. Edward C. Parmalee, of Georgetown, is Grand Secretary. M. W. Bro. H. P. H. Bromwell, was received with grand honors, and officiated as Grand Chaplain, Grand Orator, and installing Grand Master. Seventeen lodges; 993 members; increase 139.

Another Veteran Gone.

J. W. Spaulding, M. D., recently departed this life at Galesburg. The deceased had filled the chief places in lodge, chapter and commandery, and no inconsiderable space in our grand bodies. In his best days, few excelled him as a physician, and his keen power of analysis and subtle grasp of every logical point made him a dangerous adversary. In their newspaper controversy, he demolished President Blanchard effectually.

The Eastern Star.

Its Social Character.

In the first settlement of any country there are few artificial distinctions. The necessity for society inherent in the constitution of man, disposes men of dissimilar habits, variant tastes, and differences in education to mingle freely together. And this reaches families, and pervades churches, and it is not uncommon to find those who respect fidelity to general and practical religion more than they do the dogmas of their sects, confederating in church relationship under the banner of those most numerous. The effect of this social feeling may be quite largely seen in our rural neighborhoods, now quite thickly populated, even at the present time.

The Roman Church professes to be the Church Universal, and that all other sects are dissenters. Not agreeing to this idea in any sense, yet, it is to be confessed that the Protestant people, who are supposed to represent toleration and freedom of conscience, are very much separated from each other, and, if the pulpit teachings were literally followed, there would be less Christian unity between different Protestant persuasions, than there is between the German Catholic and Lutheran churches. These narrow teachings are born of a tendency to fill up and close up the ranks of a church, and all society becomes more or less influenced by its growing narrowness and exclusiveness. We regret exceedingly that such is the tendency in the Protestant churches, which, as a rule, are alive to progress, culture, civilization and intelligence.

Again, as cities expand, towns grow, and the farming districts become populous, the circles of acquaintance become restricted, and society is classed, and each class is governed more or less by rules of its own. And nothing is more tyrannical, or more at variance with humanity, than the etiquette of society. In consequence of it, the rich are not brought into contact with the humble, and the educated exercise but little influence among those less fortunate. This should not be so. The rich should heed the necessities and calamities of the poor, and the educated and cultured should respect the cravings and longings of those less informed and help by their means, their learning and influence, to relieve want and elevate humanity. In a republic like ours, if classed society is carried too far, poverty and ignorance will find their revenges, in a way that but few would like to contemplate.

Our Masonic societies are cosmopolitan. The men of different political views, and belonging to churches of variant creeds, or to no church at all, meet in the lodge-room upon a common level. The teachings which they there receive, are carried into practice in their daily lives, and hence, they are tolerant towards each other, and towards differences of opinion generally. But this does not reach their families. The wife, surrounded by her family, sees the persons of her set, the members of her church, and but few others. Near neighbors seldom see each other, and the etiquette of society is scrupulously observed. Here and there may be found a high-souled woman, who scorns such boundaries and breaks through conventionalities to minister to suffering and want. They are the few, and are like the few among men who in great emergencies assume command while others neither question or disobey.

The organization of the Order of the Eastern Star, will, in the families of Masons, and greatly in society in general, break down these bars, and bring good women and their families into a closer relationship and familiarity. By means of it, the educated and the cultured will communicate their information and refinement to those less fortunate, the rich will find worthy objects of compassion, sorrowful ones needing sympathy, and needy ones deserving aid and intelligent direction. Thus they will communicate good to others without impoverishing themselves, but the rather, gathering to themselves a harvest of good deeds, righteous acts, and reflex influence upon their own lives.

Such lives will carry a spirit of tolerance into all society, and all churches, and these women, animated by a common sentiment of philanthropy, will find their influence largely increased with their husbands and families, homes made happier, and thus the rugged character of the man, may be trained by the winning gentleness and confidence of woman, to higher grades of excellence, more exalted conceptions of his own power, and nobler aspirations for well-doing in every department of life.

Women? do you desire that your children shall be saved from anarchy or despotism? That this fair fabric of government and freedom shall continue? Break loose from the slavery of fashion, and do your part in preserving the heritage received from our fathers to be transmitted to your children. You who are so fortunate as to be eligible to the Order of the Eastern Star, will do well to form chapters, and by the aid of your husbands, brothers, fathers and sons, to perfect this organization for your own benefit, for the benefit of your sisters, and for the general benefit of society.

In these chapters you will learn important lessons of fortitude and persistence, constancy and fidelity, loyalty and purity, faith and humility, beneficence and heroism, all combined.

Accept, we pray you, the boon prepared to your hands, and help to crush corruption and vice, and to bring about that glorious time when all the nations, kindreds and peoples of the earth shall live in harmony and peace, and shall worship one common Father, the Only Living and True God.

Correction.

New York, February 15th, 1872.

H. G. Reynolds, Esq.:

M. W. Sir and Dear Bro.:—In The Masonic Trowel, of this month, I find the following paragraph:

> "Gen. Robert Anderson, of the U. S. Army, who died recently at Nice, France, was made a Knight Templar, in Trenton, N. J."

Gen. Anderson received the Orders of Knighthood, in Columbian Commandery No. 1, stationed in this city, in the year 1863, and was a member of said Commandery at the time of his death.

I write simply to correct the error into which you have fallen.

Truly and fraternally yours,
Fred'k W. Herring,
E. C. Columbian Commandery No. 1.

Philip Swigert.

One by one, the men who have filled an important space in the Masonic world are passing away. THE THREE—neither of them ever Grand Masters—Charles W. Moore, Albert G. Mackey and Albert Pike, twenty years since, were the intellectual suns, and none surpass them now, here or elsewhere. But they are rapidly becoming old men. Of those nearest them, twenty years ago, Philip Swigert, one of nature's noblemen, was one. In youth, compelled to rely upon his own exertions, he worked his way up through clerk's offices, bank positions, places of public trust and large business connections, and became one of the foremost men in Kentucky. In 1819 he received the symbolic degrees in Landmark Lodge, at Versailles; in 1820, he was in Grand Lodge, and Henry Clay was elected Grand Master; was elected Master in 1823; exalted to the degree of R. A. Mason at Frankfort, in 1820; was elected Grand Recorder Grand Council R. and S. Masters in 1827, and held the position until 1842, when he was elected Grand Puissant, in which position he remained until 1870.

In the Grand Lodge he held the office of Grand Treasurer from 1828 to 1833, and the office of Grand Secretary from that time until 1854, when he passed successively through all the stations from Junior Grand Warden to Grand Master. Subsequently, the present Grand Secretary being unable to attend, he was elected Grand Secretary as a military necessity for one year. In 1822 he was elected Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter, and held the office at the time of his death.

The deceased was also a Knight Templar. In his later years he was a member of the State Senate.

In religious faith, a zealous Methodist, but his heart held every good man. His wealth was large and his benefactions liberal. We remember well when he came to Springfield and provided a home for his widowed sister and her children. It was fitting that such a man, aged seventy-eight years and four days, should die on the last day of the year, "like a shock of corn fully ripe and ready for his Master's use."

Every class of people by thousands attended his funeral. The Templars did watch and ward. The companions and brethren bore testimony to his worth and the Grand Lodge, the craftsmen and the people, mournfully, tearfully and tenderly placed him in his "narrow house."

One daughter, and perhaps his wife, survive.

Any man may well say "may my end be like his."

Thanks

For the reprint of the proceedings of Grand Lodge of Maine, 1839—1844.

To M. W. Bro. Cregier, for a copy of the report of the Board of Public Works, March 31, 1871: "The gold has become dim," but the "daybreak" and a splendid noonday sun is at hand.

To Bro. James Morrison, Secretary to Masonic Board of Relief, for important Chicago papers.

Senator Carpenter—one of our pupils—has our thanks for his able speech on the "power of appointment."

Widow's Certificate.

Messrs. Parson & Co., 716 North Fourth street, St. Louis, have gotten up a certificate for the widows of Master Masons, to be signed by the proper officers of the lodge, accompanied by an attestation certificate from the Grand Secretary, which has long been needed and will be very useful.

Those printed on paper are, per dozen, fifty cents; on bank-note paper, per dozen, seventy-five cents; on card board, per dozen, $1.50; on parchment, seventy-five cents each.

We advise lodges to order them in such quantities as they may need.

Caught.

The inspiration of the moment caused us to do, as is often done under such circumstances, an indefensible thing. We asked Grand Tyler Schreiner, of Iowa, to help out our Grand Tyler Ferns. He responded nobly. But Bro. Parvin, in the Evergreen, thinks we disregarded comity and law in doing so, and interfered with the prerogative of the Grand Master of Iowa. We shan't stop to haggle about it. Bro. Parvin is right, and we apologise all round, to all the Masons in Iowa in general, and the Grand Master in particular. We plead good and philanthropic motives, which, in case of an error, is not much of a plea either. We hope Bro. Parvin will not make so big a "boo" at us again.

Grand Lodge of Utah.

The lodges in Utah Territory organized a Grand Lodge at Salt Lake City, on the 16th of January. A. F. Strickland, District Judge, was elected Grand Master; E. B. Zabriskie, S. G. W.; Alfred S. Gould, J. G. W.

WE made allusion to the initiation of M. E. Comp. Jas. H. Miles, in a recent number, and find that our informant, who was present, was mistaken as to the lodge. Comp. Miles received the degrees at the hands of that Master Workman, M. W. Bro. Thomas J. Pickett, at the organization of Taylor Lodge No. 98, at Washington. At a subsequent time he represented Pekin Lodge No. 29, in Grand Lodge, and served on committee on credentials. The chapter degrees were conferred on him at Toledo, by G. H. P. Brown, and he also received the commandery degrees in the same city. The council degrees were conferred by Comp. Starkweather, and the degrees of the Scottish Rite by Ill. K. H. Van Rensselaer, at Chicago.

Please Forward Subscriptions.

Those who were subscribers when the fire occurred, commenced with January, 1871, or earlier; they are all entitled to this number to complete their year. We hope that every one will renew. The subscriptions of those who commenced after the fire, expire in April. We are in sore need of what is due us, and of money on subscriptions. The hard times affect us as they do others, and we experience the effects of the fire in Chicago very much. Besides all this, the whole of the past year, and up to this present time, has been a rough, hard time. We look for substantial aid for real value received.

The International Railroad.

The State of Texas agreed to give a subsidy of ten thousand dollars per mile to build the above road from its boundary near the northeast corner of the State, to Laredo, on the Rio Grande. Three heavy companies joined hands under the name of Douglas, Brown, Reynolds & Co., and took a contract to build 104 miles, which will be entirely completed within eighteen months from the time of commencement. The bonds due have been issued. This road is intended to form a direct line from Chicago via Cairo, Little Rock, Austin and Laredo, below to the foot of California Gulf, in Mexico. We are in receipt of important information from our son, H. G., Jr., who is now sub-contracting under his uncle, Elisha P. Reynolds of Rock Island.

Mackey's National Freemason,

For February, is at hand. The editor crowds Comp. Gouley very hard upon the matter of inchoate or incomplete chapters. He has given our St. Louis frater an ample chance to display his learning.

Bro. Henry M. Look has a valuable treatise upon the law and practice of Masonic trials. Bro. Mackey makes some statements in regard to the use of his matter in the treatise, which, if true, places Bro. Look in an awkward position. And in all matters of fact Bro. Mackey is pretty likely to be believed.

The magazine displays much learning, valuable to students and thinkers.

The Kentucky Freemason

Comes in a beautiful new dress, and bears evidence of prosperity. Bro. Henderson is a genial, competent editor, a good writer, full of good humor, and can give "savage hits."

WE are in receipt of No. 6, of La Tolerancia, the organ of the National Mexican Rite, published at the city of Mexico. In spite of the Pope's interdict, there are several prosperous lodges in Mexico.

No. 1, Vol. 2, Masonic Jewel, published at Memphis Tenn., by an old friend, Bro. A. J. Wheeler, monthly, at $1.00, comes to us in a cover, with 16 pages of reading matter, and in the popular TROWEL form. It is the official Masonic organ of the State of Tennessee, and worthy to be so.

The Song Messenger,

By Root and Cady, 612 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, has sprung from the debris, purified and more beautiful than ever. Wares do not travel eastward for for a market, and as this journal is as good as any of its kind, we hope that the great west will give it a munificent support, $1.00 per year.

Briggs' Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs and Plants; Illustrated Catalogue.

This is a beautiful pamphlet of 128 pages, and has a large amount of valuable information. Nearly all the flowers are beautifuly pictured to the eye, arranged in alphabetical order, and carefully described. The garden is also well looked after, and the display is very good.

Published by Briggs and Bro., Rochester, N. Y. We do not see any price stated for the catalogue. Every florist and gardener should have it.

MILLERS and grain dealers will find the Milling Journal, published by J. D. Nolan & Co., 58 Liberty street, New York City, semi-monthly, at $2.00 per year, to be a valuable auxiliary in their business.

PROCEEDINGS hereafter sent us from any Grand Masonic Body, will find early mention in our notice of proceedings.

The Rock of Masonry.

We are indebted to the courtesy of Bro. Robert Macoy for the present of a fine chromo bearing this title, for which we tender our thanks. It represents the great rock of Masonry amid the tempest-tossed ocean. On its permanent basis rests the sacred Altar, sustaining the Three Great Lights of Masonry, and surrounded by the Three Lesser; while in the distance floats the Ark, typical of the transmission of the principles of the Institution from the antediluvian world; the whole being emblematic of the permanence of the Order, and was executed from an original design by Bro. Macoy. We well remember the history of that design, how it was prepared many years ago as a vignette for the title page of the Quarterly Review of Freemasonry, a labor in which we were both engaged—he as the publisher, and we as the editor; and we think that we ourselves, struck by the beauty of the design, applied to it, as a motto, the words adopted from Johnson's eulogium of Shakspeare, when he said that "Time, which is continually washing away the dissoluble fabric of other poets, passes by the adamant of Shakspeare without injury." The present came to us in the genial season of Christmas, and brought with it many kindly recollections of the past. It is for sale by the Masonic Publication Company, 620 Broadway, New York. Price $5.00 mounted.—Mackey's Magazine.

Flower Culture.

The taste and culture of a community may be quite safely estimated from its attention to esthetic effects, and rural adornments. We have lately noticed Vick's Floral Guide, and in this number we allude to Brigg's annual of a similar character. The engravings in both, are of a very high order; those in Vick, are true to nature but lighter, more airy and fanciful, and therefore more attractive to feminine tastes than those in Briggs; the engravings in the latter catalogue are rather more ornate and gorgeous and better suited to masculine richness than Vick's. On the whole we express no opinion as to superiority, but our better half prefers Vick, while our mischievous blonde is peering over our shoulder and clamoring for Vick, Vick. And as it lies in the line of woman's ideas to attend to the beautiful and graceful, we shall let them have their way, because, in fact, we can't help it, and because we want them in all such matters to rule.

For all that, however, we confess to a strong liking for the bold and strong hand of Briggs, and we will probably manage to introduce him among the delicacies and beauties of Vick.

But we want to write a little upon another point. Both of these beautiful gardens are located in New York, and while both have large improvements in the West, yet it must be manifest, that every thing done is from a New York stand-point.

The soils, climate and surface of the west are essentially different from those on the Atlantic, Pacific or Gulf slopes. The great west, lying between the Alleghenies and the Rocky Mountains, has a kingdom of soil, surface and climate of its own and what is adapted to the salt water slopes, becomes entirely secondary here. To say nothing of the field, orchard or forests we now call up this matter of flower culture. We have seen upon our prairies, and along the base of our bluffs, glorious displays of flowers, indigenous to the soil, revelling amid the rich grasses, at all seasons of spring, summer and fall, and in and around the heads of ravines, collections of rare beauty and elegance. These should be rescued and transplanted before the hand of cultivation drives them out forever.

If some party would invest in an extensive and artistic floral, horticultural and gardening enterprise, near some large combination of rail roads, and gather the riches of our praries, ravines and rich bottom lands at all seasons, and adapt their work to western climate, western soil and western surface, they would find a rich and generous return in good time upon their investment. To do this well, and preserve the fast disappearing flowers of the west, both particular and general knowledge are requisite, combined with generous culture, broad ideas, and liberal learning. Will some far-seeing, nature-loving, monied men, take hold of this? The tastes, the habits, the culture, the morals and the piety of this whole country would be improved and many homes unadorned with flower or tree would become the homes of beauty, taste and happiness.

Rail Roads.

Main Trunks—Branches and Extensions—Miles—Connections—Principal Towns—Country—Character.

CARBONDALE AND SHAWNEETOWN.

Completed from Carbondale to Marion, 18 miles, and is practically an extension of the Grand Tower and Carbondale. When completed to Shawneetown, it will put the counties of Jackson, Williamson, Saline and Gallatin, in direct communication with the iron mines west, and with the Ohio River and railway transit east. Marion is the county seat of Williamson county, and was for many years, a representative town, as it is now again. The county is adapted to cotton, tobacco, fruits, wheat, and has a large supply of fine timber for coopers, carriage or boat manufacturers.

GRAND TOWER AND CARBONDALE.

Twenty-eight miles. This road follows the general course of the Big Muddy River, and was originally built as an outlet for coal. Tower Hill, on the Mississippi River, is the seat of extensive rolling mills and foundries. The iron is taken from Missouri, and the coal from Murphysboro, which is an old town, and the county seat of Jackson county. This was the home of John Logan, father of Gen. Logan, U. S. Senator. The father was a noted man in the early history of this State. Of the beautiful town of Carbondale, we have heretofore written. This and the Carbondale and Shawneetown, are practically the same road, and what may be said generally of one, may also be said of the other. They connect with the Illinois Central at Carbondale, and have water connection at Grand Tower.

CHESTER AND TAMAROA.

This road is built from Tamaroa, on the Illinois Central to Pinckneyville, where it connects with the St. L., B. & S. I. R. R. It is intended to be completed to Chester, in Randolph county, and will open a fertile and valuable country. Chester is situated on the Mississippi River, and is the county seat of Randolph county; Pinckneyville is the county seat of Perry county, and an old town. Tamaroa is a flourishing place.

CHICAGO AND IOWA.

This road is sompleted from Aurora to Oregon, 62 miles. It makes direct connections with Chicago by the C., B. & Q., at Aurora; and further connections east and west at Rochelle, on the road from Chicago to Dixon and Fulton. Oregon is on Rock River, is the county seat of Ogle county, and a flourishing place. It gives facilities to a large scope of country in Kane, DeKalb and Ogle counties. It will probably be built to Savannah, in Carroll county, on the Mississippi River.

CHICAGO, DANVILLE AND VINCENNES.

Completed from Chicago to Danville, 128 miles. Connects with all the roads in Chicago, the T., P. & W. at Watseka, and the T., W. & W. and the I., B. & W. at Danville. It opens up the country lying between the Illinois Central and State line, and passes through the counties of Cook, Kankakee, Iroquois and Vermilion. Watseka is the county seat of Iroquois, and Danville, of Vermilion counties. In Kankakee county, the road passes through the French settlements, represented by the towns of Momence, St. Ann, and Papineau. It also passes through the flourishing towns of Glenwood, Milford and Rossville. The road leaves Illinois below Danville, and passes through the rich coal fields of Indiana.

HANNIBAL AND NAPLES.

This road is built from the Bluffs, in Scott county, through Pike, to Hannibal, on the Mississippi, and thence to Moberly, Mo., 120 miles. A branch in Pike county, is built from Maysville to Pittsfield, the county seat. The Mississippi is spanned by a splendid bridge. This road is operated by the Toledo, Wabash and Western, and is thus far its only arm reaching across the Mississippi river; at Moberly it makes direct connections with Kansas City, by the North Missouri. It connects with both the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers. Hannibal is one of the important cities in Missouri; Griggsville and Barry are large places, and Naples is a large place in Scott county.

PARIS AND DECATUR.

Built from Paris, the county seat of Edgar, to the flourishing town of Oakland, in Coles county, 18 miles. At Paris, it connects with the Indianapolis and St. Louis. It is to connect with the Central at Arcola, and when completed to Decatur, will be 75 miles in length. It is in the grain and cattle region.

ST. LOUIS, BELLEVILLE AND SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

From East St. Louis to Duquoin, 81 miles. It connects with all roads at St. Louis and East St. Louis, and at Duquoin it makes direct connection with the Illinois Central. It also connects for Tamaroa at Pinckneyville. It passes through the old, wealthy and growing city of Belleville, the county seat of St. Clair; also, through Pinckneyville, an old town and the county seat of Perry, which is revived and renovated through the impetus given by railroads. It traverses a fine grain, fruit, cattle and coal region.

ST. LOUIS AND SOUTHEASTERN.

This is a very important road from St. Louis, via Mascoutah in St. Clair; Nashville, the important county seat of Washington county; Ashley, on the Central Railroad; Mt. Vernon, the county seat of Jefferson county, and the place for holding the sessions of the supreme court in the Southern Grand Division; McLeansboro, the county seat of Hamilton county; Enfield, at the junction with the S., & I. S. E., and Carmi, the ancient county seat of White county, to Evansville, on the Ohio River, 160 miles. It opens up what were once empire counties, but more recently overshadowed by the influence of railroads in other directions. The important water communications at Evansville and St. Louis, are large additions to its power and success.

SYCAMORE AND CORTLAND.

This is a short road from the flourishing town of Sycamore, the county seat of DeKalb county, to Cortland, on the C. & N. W. R. W., and there makes close connections east and west. It is also a convenient outlet for the products of a rich agricultural and dairy country.

WESTERN UNION.

Familiarly known as the Scotchman's road, from Racine, on Lake Michigan, Wisconsin, via Freeport, to Rock Island, Illinois, on the Mississippi River, 197 miles in length. At Clinton, it connects with the C. & N. W.; at Freeport, with the I. C. main line; at Savannah, with boats for Dubuque; at Fulton, with the C. & N. W. from Chicago to Omaha; and at Rock Island, with the C., R. I. & P., the P. & R. I. and the R., R. I. & St. L. It has water connections at Racine, and at every important station from Savannah to Rock Island, on the Mississippi River. Its general course is southwest and northeast. Of Rock Island, Moline, Fulton and Freeport, we have already made mention. Mt. Carroll is the pleasant county seat of Carroll county; Hampton, Port Byron, Cordova, Albany, Thomson, Savannah, Lanark, Shannon, Durand, Rockton and Shirland, are flourishing places in Illinois. Racine is one of the principal ciites in Wisconsin. This road traverses a country abounding in stock, grain, and the products of the dairy. Its transportation of lumber, both ways, is enormous. From Elkhorn, trains run by an extension track to Milwaukee, which makes it a favorite passenger road. It is now managed by the Milwaukee and St. Paul R. W. Company.

OTHER ROADS.

We believe that we have named all the roads principally in Illinois, mentioned in the "Traveler's Guide." We know that a road is built from Jacksonville to Virden, and another is being built from Quincy to St. Louis, and think it is completed to the road from Naples to Hannibal, but we do not know its designation. Perhaps, it is a part of the C., B. & Q.

Several of the roads named, are making important additions and extensions, of which it is difficult to keep an accurate account.

Of the roads not mentioned, which run into Chicago, we name the following: Chicago and Michigan Lake Shore; Michigan Central; Michigan Southern; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago; there are others building.

The Joliet cut-off runs from Joliet to the Lake, in Indiana, where it connects with the Michigan Southern. We suppose, but are not sure, that a road is building from Aurora to Joliet.

Another road from Terre Haute, Indiana, to Cape Girardeau, Missouri, is in contemplation.

The Mattoon and Decatur Railroad is completed from Mattoon to Sullivan, and we suppose that a road from Bement to Sullivan, is also built; that one is, or soon will be, constructed from Champaign to Monticello.

REVIEW.

Number of miles of railroad, as stated...	5,470
Estimated miles, not stated........	300
Estimated number of miles that will be ready for cars by April 1........................	250
Total..	6,020

By the 1st of January next, the number of miles of railway in Illinois will reach 7,000. The branches and arms and water carriage bring to the main lines, and the main lines themselves gather up cattle, horses, hogs, wheat, corn, oats, hay, tobacco, cotton, butter, cheese, sheep, lumber, stone, brick, coal, lead, lime, and a vast amount of manufactured articles and raw material, which are conveyed in long lines of thundering freight trains to their home or foreign destination; hither come merchandise, and vast quantities of material for home consumption.

Connecting Link.

The only one who connects the Grand Lodge at its organization with the present time, in any active or affiliated sense, is M. W. Bro. Harrison Dills, of Quincy. He was present at the organization, April 6, 1840, as the representative of Bodley Lodge No. 1, and again as W. M., October 20, 1840, at which time he was elected Junior Grand Warden. Since then he has held the positions of Senior Grand Warden and Grand Master, and in 1863 was elected Grand Treasurer, in which office he still remains.

Died.

In Johnson county, Mo., on the 25th day of August last, Bro. JOSEPH M. GRAY, a member of Green River Lodge No. 203.

The deceased was born in Kentucky, July 16, 1813, and was, consequently, fifty-eight years of age. He was an excellent brother, humane and charitable, greatly beloved, and died without an enemy. He was buried with Masonic honors.

Near Jerseyville, Ill., February 10th, Bro. DANIEL S. KEELEY, of Carrollton Lodge No. 50, aged thirty-seven years.

Maj. Keeley was a good citizen, and an exemplary Mason. He left a wife and four children. He was buried with Masonic honors by his lodge, assisted by King Solomon's Lodge No. 197, W. Bro. Geo. W. Davis, D. D. G. M., officiating.

At Fairbury, Ill., January 14, Comp. W. C. PECKHAM; January 19, Comp. JOHN RAYBURN; both members of Fairbury Chapter No. 99, R. A. M.

Comp. Peckham left a widow and children, and both many warm friends to mourn their loss. The chapter passed resolutions of respect in the usual form.

In this city, Febrnary 13, the amiable Mrs. BATES, wife of Gen. E. N. Bates, State Treasurer, and a member of St. Paul's Lodge No. 500.

February 14, Bro. THOMAS F. DOCKSON, a member of Tyrian Lodge No. 333, aged 46 years. He was buried with Masonic honors.

FREEMASONRY IN THE HOLY LAND.

THESE interesting lectures became so popular last winter that I found it impossible to fill engagements required in this State, and at the earnest solicitation of friends, have concluded to spend a portion of the winter here. I therefore make the following proposition to the several Masonic lodges in Illinois and elsewhere.

To deliver my Lodge Lecture on Masonic Researches in the Holy Land, verifying the truth of Masonic ritual and tradition, and exhibit some interesting relics from Jerusalem. I will also give an account of my visit to the English lodges, with the forms of initiation, passing, raising, schools of instruction, banquets, signs, passes, &c., &c. My charge for this Lecture is twenty dollars and expenses while at your place.

My Public Lecture is descriptive of Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Easter Week in the Holy City, Gethsemane the Mount of Olives, and the surrounding country.

My charge for the two Lectures is thirty dollars and expenses while at your place. For admission to the public lectures you can charge such sum as you see fit. Properly managed, it will pay the entire expenses and ought to leave a fair surplus for the benefit of the Lodge.

☞ Address the subscriber, at Fulton, Whiteside county, Illinois, or the editor of THE MASONIC TROWEL, at Springfield, for engagements or further information.

FULTON, November 1, 1871.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section 3, relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are sedown the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

EASTERN STAR CARDS.

I HAVE A SURPASSINGLY beautiful card, which will answer the purpose of a certificate as a member of a Chapter of the Eastern Star, three inches wide and four and a quarter inches long. On the face side is

THE STAR,

with its five points in Blue, Yellow, White Red and Green colors, with the emblems in each and the Pentagon in the center, with its usual divisions, letters and devices.

Over the Star, in Gold are the words,

"I have seen His Star in the East,"

while beneath it, in Green are the words,

"And have come to worship Him."

The border is blue and red, and the spaces are filled with ornaments in gold.

On the opposite side is a certificate embordered in Red and Blue, with large letters "E. S.," in light shading, in the centre, over which is printed a blank certificate, with room in one corner for seal, to be signed by the Matron and attested by the Secretary. On the end is a line for a signature of the lady receiving this certificate. The thought came from Bro. Hubbard—the design is our own.

THE MASONIC LIBRARY, published in two volumes, of 768 pages each. Orders for either will be received to suit convenience or as may be desired. PRICE, (neatly and substantially bound in blue cloth), $8.00 for the two volumes. The volumes may be had separately or together.

Each Volume is Complete in Itself.

This "Library" is not only the Cheapest, but comprises the best Selections of Masonic Works ever published. Some of the books contained in this "Library" cannot be obtained from any other source. "The Masonic Library contains the following Valuable Works:"

VOLUME 1.

"OLIVER'S ANTIQITIES OF FREEMASONRY."

"ANDERSON'S CONSTITUTIONS, HISTORY, &c."—(Embracing the entire Work as published by the Grand Lodge of England, in 1723, the first reprint of the whole Work, since 1784.)

"ILLUSTRATIONS OF FREEMASONRY,"—(A most important Work, the study of which is necesary to complete a knowledge of the History of Freemasonry and its Mysteries.)

"HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY," (by Oliver,—Containing an elaborate History of the Craft in England.)

"BOOK OF THE LODGE."

"MANT'S POCKET COMPANION."

"SANDY'S HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY."

VOLUME 2.

*"DERMOTT'S AHIMAN REZON,"—(With Lithographic Plate of the Arms of the Operative and of Speculative Masons, published in 1764, and not published in any other Library.)

"SYMBOLIC DICTIONARY OF FREEMASONRY."

"HISTORY OF INITIATION,"—(In which the Mysteries of Initiation into all the Mystic Orders of the Ancient Nations are revealed and compared.)

"HALLIWELL'S ANCIENT POEM,"—(A most remarkable publication. Supposed to have been written no later than the Fourteenth Century.)

*"CONSTITUTIONS OF FREEMASONRY."—(1738 Edition. This Work, in a Historical point, is of the highest value. There is a mystery involved in the "Charges of a Freemason," which differ from the 1723 Edition. This Work is not pnblished in any other Library.)

"CONSTITUTIONS OF THE GRAND LODGE of Scotland."

The highest Masonic authorities in the country have patronised and recommended the Masonic Library to the Craft.

*Not reprinted in any other Library.

LEON HYNEMAN.

The Night of Life.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

Well, I reckon you're tellin' the truth on't, Bess—
I find you most allers right;
We are gettin' along in the even' of life,
And are pretty nigh on to the night.

A pretty hard day's work it has been for us, Bess,
This labor of life's long day;
And many a time I eneamost thought
We must falter and fall by the way.

D'ye mind the winter when Tommy died?
That was my rheumatis year—
Not much was done towards providin' by me,
But there was never a lack of good cheer.

But Tommy died and nought for a shroud
We possessed, and the best we could do,
Was to lay him down in his well worn clothes,
To await the grand review.

I remember, Bess, just what you said,
When we left him in the graveyard cold:
"His soul will be good and as beautiful
As if buried in cloth of gold!"

And then our Nettie was called away,
And none were to bear her bier;
The neighbors were few, and all were sick,
Or tending their own most dear.

And I bore the precious burden alone
To the cold and silent grave,
Feeling the while that our lot was hard—
That none remained to save.

D'ye mind what you said on my return,
When from tears I could not refrain?
"That thousands of angels followed the bier
In that viewless funeral train."

And now we have reached the eve of the day,
And soon must repose for the night;
Say what have you now to cheer us on,
To make the dark pathway light?

"Why, this, old man—we rest till the morn,
And then we shall surely find
We have more dear ones on the farther shore
Than ever we leave behind."

A Ballot for Each Degree.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

And now comes M. W. P. Grand Master Reynolds, and throws a cloud over our brightest lucubrations. Little did we imagine as we sat inditing our solemn convictions on a point in Masonic practice to which we had given considerable thought, that those convictions would be deemed of sufficient importance to call forth the labored answer of one of the best Masonic jurists and writers that our country has produced. But so it is, and "we moun e'en mak' the best o't."

M. W. Bro. Reynolds deserves the thanks of the Fraternity for giving a history of the ups and downs of the doctrine of the triune ballot in our jurisdiction. It shows that the original practice in this State was to allow one ballot to suffice for the degrees. It might be a fair conclusion from the premises, that that was the original practice of Masonry, but we do not choose to urge that point now.

M. W. Bro. Reynolds gives it as his opinion, "that more to that law than any other one thing, are we indebted for the strength and power of our Fraternity in Illinois, and our glory and fame abroad." In answer to this, I have only to say, that my opinion does not coincide with his. Allowing it to have all the force and effect which he claims, it is not easy to see how so great a work could be performed by it, when we consider the small number that are stopped by the second or third ballot. Then coupling the fact that Bro. Reynolds admits to be a fact, "that injustice is often done to candidates for initiation and advancement," with the small number which are rejected for all causes, and the statement is hardly less than absurd. Injustice is often done those rejected for advancement. But few are rejected. Then these must be exceeding few and deserve to be rejected for advancement, and get it. To us, this does not look as though it was of magnitude sufficient to give us power and strength, and honor and fame, and glory abroad, to any great extent. The number righteously rejected for advancement could easily be counted on the fingers.

Bro. Reynolds urges that the very fact that good men are rejected on the second ballot, shows that a proper use of the ballot had not been made on the previous occasion. We suppose this applies to those who have passed the ordeal of the three ballots, when they ought to have been rejected. If this be the meaning, then it is not a very cogent argument for the three ballots, since it shows them to have failed to keep out unworthy members. One ballot could scarcely have done much worse than that.

Bro. Reynolds wishes to know how the malice and interests of such men may be frustrated, and asks if we are to say they have acted wrong without a hearing. Certainly not! We would shape the laws in such a manner that they could not act wrong without a hearing, because the hearing should be had. The proposition supported by Bro. Reynolds does this very thing; it places an Entered Apprentice or a Fellow Craft in a condition where we are compelled to pass upon his character without a hearing. As the law now is, his character is subjected to scrutiny, and he has no opportunity to answer.

We have yet to learn that the character of a Master Mason is any more dear to him than that of an Entered Apprentice to the brother who happens to bear it, and if we would not condemn without hearing, we must do away with the triune ballot, which Bro. Reynolds says often does injustice to candidates for the Fellow Craft and Master's degrees.

Bro. Reynolds says "the triune ballot is a safe instrument in the hands of good men." This no one contradicts; but the distinguished logician has just admitted that it often gets into the hands of bad men, when it works great injustice. The single ballot is a safe instrument in the hands of good men, and does not give so great a latitude for bad ones to commit injustice as the other, and hence we prefer it to the treble vote. Again, it is said that a "lodge made up of just men will not let an unjust rejection remain." But how can they avoid it? The unjust rejection could not exist unless there was a bad man in the lodge. Under the present law, how can the "just men" "quickly and surely repair the wrong?" Just as long as the bad man is in the lodge, he can keep out the man who has been wronged, and the just men are powerless to prevent it.

We like the next to the last sentence in the article we examine, because it most clearly expresses the principle for which we contend: "The Masonic presumption is that any member is a good man, and this presumption must stand until charges are preferred and the contrary is shown." These are golden words. They enunciate a truly just principle. Now apply them to the Entered Apprentice when he asks for the degree of Fellow Craft, or to the Fellow Craft when he aspires to the Master's degree, and no one is injured; the principle is preserved and no lodge is likely to receive a bad member, because he is proved to be unfit if he is so.

We look upon the present law as little less than a swindle upon those who, for no cause assigned, and no chance given to reply to charges, are debarred from an advance in Masonry. Therefore have we written.

Again the Triune Ballot.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

It can be no very pleasurable sensation when a painter has bestowed what genius nature may have given him, upon a cartoon for the window of a cathedral, to find the creation of his pencil doing duty as the curtain of a saloon; neither would it naturally be supposed that a sculptor who had fashioned a bust of some great man, in the hope that it would occupy a niche in the pantheon of works of art, would be immensely gratified to find it standing at the street corner transformed into a hitching-post; nor yet would it be likely to be altogether lovely for one who had elaborated what he believed to be rather a fair and quite a conclusive argument on a subject which he deemed of some importance, to find it used by another, in support of a position that had no relevancy, no importance, and which he does not care which way it is decided.

The writer of this article pleads guilty to a little of this feeling when he finds an argument written by him in support of the unity of the ballot for the three degrees, used by Bro. Gouley, of the Freemason, as a proof that no lodge is regularly opened which is first opened in the lower degrees. It may be mental dullness—it is possible that we cannot see into a millstone that has no hole in it, as far as our Missouri brother, but it appears to us there is about the same congruity in the application that there would be in shutting in an eating-stall in a saloon with "Bierstadt's Yo-Semite," or in making the statue of Lincoln a hitching-post on the corner of the square in Springfield.

Our argument was not founded upon former usage. It was not even based upon the present law. It was established, if established at all, upon justice and right. We did not argue that because the former practice was to ballot for the three degrees at once, we should, therefore, do so now. And how an argument founded upon the abstract principle that the conferring of the first degree gives the neophyte some rights which he does not before possess, can be tortured to mean that a lodge is not a lodge if opened in the first degree before it is in the third, we have not, as yet, been clearly able to discover. But, we believe, that we do clearly see that an Entered Apprentice Mason may have the right to know why he is rejected for promotion, and defend his character against such charges as may be brought against it; and still think the theory of Bro. Gouley, that a lodge to be a lodge must be first opened in the Master's degree to be a fallacy, as destitute of truth as nursery tales. That is about all there is of it.

A Trying Situation.

BY WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE.

The time was, and not many years gone by, when there was an intense and longing desire among the curious people, to know the secrets of the Masonic Order. The terrible stories that were circulated about our mysteries, the fearful oaths which it was believed were taken, the horrid rites and the awful ceremonies that were reported to be attached to the proceedings of the Craft, all served to whet the edge of curiosity, and caused many attempts to be made to verify or disprove these remarkable scenes. As a matter of course, the anti-Masonic element was most anxious, as it is now, to get the work for the purpose of publishing it to the world.

In the times to which we refer, it was common for the lodges to hold their communications in the halls of hotels, as being most convenient of access, and most commodious for lodge purposes. Though this practice could hardly be said to be favorable to concealment and secresy, yet in the State of New York, where the circumstance below narrated, took place, probably at least half of the lodges were accommodated in the village inn. As the country became more densely settled and better buildings were erected, halls were finished in the upper stories, where they could better accommodate the Craft, and the practice of hotel meetings was discountenanced and finally generally abolished.

It was in one of these hotels situated in western New York, that the following incident occurred. Two ladies, the wife of the hotel-keeper and his intimate friend, were very curious to acquire the secrets of Freemasonry. Both were wives of Masons, and it is but fair and just to conclude that each had pumped the husband until they had tired of > "Dropping empty buckets into wells,

> And growing old by drawing nothing up."

So they left off that method and relied more upon their own acts to lead them to success. The hall in which the brethren assembled, was, of course, in the upper story of the building, but above that, in the angle of the roof, was a garret. This was selected as the point from which the desirable demonstrations should be made. The advances were made with the greatest secresy, and with the most consummate skill. A day's absence of the landlord gave the female conspirators the needed opportunity to perforate the plastered ceiling over the lodge room. There was no floor to the garret, and this perforation was accomplished with much labor and considerable danger. That the view should be full, several of these perforations were made.

On the night of the meeting of the lodge, the hostess, of course, had to be on hand to attend to customers, so the visitor was detailed to reconnoiter. Accordingly, late in the afternoon, she took her post of observation in the garret. As that apartment was too low to admit of a standing position, and as there was no place to sit except upon the joists that sustained the ceiling, it seemed very likely that she would pay for what information she would acquire, all it would be worth. It was emphatically a pursuit of knowledge under difficulties. But the good lady waited with what patience she could muster, until the brethren arrived. Her attitude was not very favorable to hearing, but she thought she heard an invocation to Deity, and Aaron and St. John were spoken of in the opening. She heard mysterious raps, and at length saw a candidate introduced within the room.

But when the candidate moved towards the center of the hall, he passed beyond the line of her vision, and if she would make a full expose of Masonry, she must see him through. Accordingly, she made her way over the timbers in not the most cautious manner, until she arrived at the orifice which had been made over the altar. But just then she made a misstep. Her feet failed to stand upon the timbers, but fell with the full weight of her one hundred and fifty pounds, upon the little lath, which, alas, proved unfaithful to the trust reposed in it. It broke. The observer went through, taking with her such portion of the ceiling as might naturally be in the way of her successful descent, and alighted, in all the majesty of blushing matronhood and female curiosity, plump upon the altar of Masonry.

The exhibition was too much, either for the sobriety or the gallantry of the brethren. A moment of silence to take in the full extent of the joke, and a shout of laughter, such as seldom disturbs a lodge of Masons, rang through the village hostelrie, during which the lady departed as abruptly as she had entered, though not by the same passage. There was no more work done in that body on that night. The spell of secresy had been broken, and a serious frame of mind was out of the question.

Names and dates are in our possession, but as the principal lady actor in the comedy is still living, we suppress both. We may say, that she is a virulent and bitter opponent of Masonry.

Masonic Ethics.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW, 32°.

Man is a tripartite being, of soul, body and spirit—the soul being to the spirit what the outward body is to both. This threefold nature of man is a trinity in unity—being a micro-cosmos of the macro-cosmos—a synthesis of the analysis of the triniverse.

Man is called Man, because he was created in the image of God—God being in the form of a man. God says of himself, I AM THAT I AM. The word Jehovah is a compound of the past, present and future tenses of the verb to be, of which this past, present and future, namely, "which is, which was, and which is to come," are only a definition.

As it is only by knowing what God is that we can truly understand His divine laws, so is it only by understanding what man is that we can appreciate the dignity of his divine nature. Let man forget that he is the image of God—the Existere of His divine Esse—and Ichabod, instead of Know Thyself, will be written on the Delphos of his worship.

Over the porch of the temple of Apollo, the god of knowledge and light, was engraven, in letters of gold, this sentence, KNOW THYSELF, signifying that no one should be admitted into the temple of Wisdom who was not a proficient in this sublime knowledge.

Man must necessarily know himself before he can be of any use to others. It was because of this knowledge that Socrates was called the wisest of mankind. Man must first drown himself in HIMSELF before he can arise, clearly baptized, into a perfect knowledge of others.

By realizing, here on earth, to its fullest extent, the threefold object of his creation, namely, the living in harmony with man, with nature and with God, can man assimilate himself to the angels in Heaven. This shows not only the infinite regard which God had for him in his creation, but prophesies of that exalted destiny which awaits him in the world to come.

As he is the express image of God, how can he live in harmony with the external universe, by which he can understand all her sublime mysteries, without becoming acquainted with God, and experiencing some of those divine emotions which actuated Him in the creation? The creation of the universe—that glorious hierarchy of numberless worlds which roll in harmony throughout the unfenced fields of Heaven—is the rythmical expression of God's love for man.

This is Masonic theology—the doctrine which is comprehended in the formula: "In whom do you put your trust? IN GOD!"

Bro. Rounseville's Protest Against the Protest.

GALESBURG, March 22, 1872.

Bro. Reynolds: The March number of the TROWEL, shows that Bro. Rounseville's modesty not only bespeaks, but equals his merits. Every one who knows him as well as I do, knows full well that he is the peer of any Mason in this State, whatever may be the title or rank of such. So Bro. R., your story of the peasant and king, is quite out of place in this latitude.

It is said that Homer sometimes nods; why should not Bro. R., able as he is, sometimes trip in his logic? But, really, there is so much in his writings to admire, that I confess I feel almost guilty for calling attention to what, to me, appears to be so palpable an error.

He substantially admits the point I insisted on, "that no one shall be made a Mason, who is offensive to any member of the lodge," and that is really all I contended for; and here the seeming controversy would have ended, had not Bro. R. so pointedly challenged a reply, that from fear of offending him by the omission, I am compelled to wade in.

He asks, "does not the unanimous ballot, if not clear, effectually exclude the objectionable candidate?" I answer that, for the time being, it does; but whether it is as effectual as the protest, is quite another thing. If I can rely only on the ballot to keep out a candidate, I must always be present when the ballot is passed; but sickness, or necessary business (and we are admonished, on no account, to neglect our usual avocations) may prevent my attending to cast the black ball. And so the offensive person comes in. Just here is seen the importance and greater value of the protest. When the Master or lodge has been notified of my objection, my rights will and must be protected in my absence as well as if I were present. A neglect to do so would be a most gross violation of Masonic law, and my rights as a Mason and a member of the lodge.

Bro. R. claims that the ballot is as effectual in excluding the offensive candidate, as the protest. He says: "Does not the unanimous ballot, if not clear, most effectually exclude the objectionable candidate? * * * What more effectual result has the protest?" I answer, the black ball certainly excludes but for one year; the protest forever, if I do not withdraw it. Bro. R must see that the ballot is not as effective as the protest.

I may be mistaken in supposing that his argument went upon "the ground, either that the candidate had a right to be admitted, or that the lodge had a right to have him admitted," but I submit, that a careful reading of his article would naturally lead to that conclusion. However, inasmuch as he disclaims any such meaning, I cheerfully withdraw my charge.

Bro. R. is remarkably tender of the rejected candidate; he speaks of his character as being "soiled by the negative ballot." That is indeed handling the subject with kid gloves, and Alexanders at that. When a candidate is rejected, the presumption is that he is unworthy, and therefore, properly rejected. As well might the thief, convicted of horse stealing, complain that the jury had "soiled his character." It strikes me that his character was already soiled; and that the verdict of the jury was but the certificate of that fact. I stand by my own "kith and kin." The lodge to me is right, rather than an outsider. Charity is a good thing, but it is sometimes awfully abused. Bro. R. tugs away at his mantle of charity, to draw it over the rejected candidate, until he pulls it clean off of the lodge. This certainly is not my idea of the "eternal fitness of things." It savors too much of that namby pamby sentimentalism of the times, that makes the murderer the "poor victim of circumstances."

When the candidate, by his well ordered life, has convinced every member of the lodge that he is worthy, he should come in, and not till then. I know very well, that, as a matter of fact, the lodge may, and often does err in passing upon candidates; but the great trouble is, that it too often "errs on mercy's side." When one good man is rejected, many unworthy are admitted: No one objects to the rejected good man having an opportunity of proving himself worthy: but the question is, where is he to have this opportunity? I hold that the proof should be made outside the lodge, by a well ordered life; my Bro. R. seems to think that it can only be done inside. There's the difference.

Of course, if the candidate convinces the objector by words or acts that he is worthy, the protest will be withdrawn. To think otherwise, is, to say the least, to have a very bad opinion of Masons.

G. C. LANPHERE.

Drunkenness Considered as a Disease, and How it Affects Masonry.

Masonry demands, as a prerequisite qualification, that the candidate who seeks admission into its mysteries shall be a perfect man and free-born. The word perfect is not here used in its literal, but in a typical sense, and means that he shall possess all those members of the body which are necessarily brought into use in the ceremonies of the Order. This is, so far, well. But Masonry, being a moral edifice, its builders should demand greater perfection in the material of which it is composed, if they would preserve the true beauty and purity of its form and structure. To be free-born should include far more than does the word in its political sense, and it should be so construed as to demand not only that the individual had not been born subject to that coercive or physical form of force that comes from without, but that he is also endowed with that physical or will force which emanates from the individual, and gives him that full control over his tastes and passions which constitutes him, in the fullest sense, a responsible being. And this latter qualification we should consider as of far more importance than is the former. Many conditions justly render men unfit subjects for the honors of Masonry. Besides the defects of mind and person, there are certain moral defects—habitual drunkenness, libertinism, etc. Of these, drunkenness is most common, and often brings deserved censure upon the Order. Of course, no lodge would think of considering the petition of an applicant who was known as an habitual drunkard, until he had reformed, and a sufficient time had elapsed to show the sincerity of his change. But in those very candidates lies the great danger. These are in most all cases the persons who return to the pernicious practice after they have become members of the Order. Certainly there are exceptions to this: But "exceptio affirmat regulam." And in this case, as in all others, does the exceptions affirm the rule. For, speaking in a general sense, men who were not drunkards before their admission into the Order, do not become so afterwards. There is certainly a reason for this. Men will not persist in doing wrong for the mere sake of wrong itself; and there must be hidden behind all this an unseen but appreciable cause, of which this habit is the visible effect. There is no doubt but that habitual drunkenness is a disease which, like many other diseases, may be either inherited or acquired. And when we speak of this, as of many other diseases, as being inherited, we do not wish to be understood as asserting that the disease is transmitted as such; but that there is that peculiar change impressed upon the organization which causes a want or craving for stimuli. And as all changes of function in the body are primarily dependent upon nutritive changes in the cells of which its tissues are composed, so may the like changes which an already diseased organization has impressed upon the germ, be acquired by constantly supplying to the individual the element which caused those changes in the tissues of the parent, and of which the peculiar change impressed upon his offspring, is a consequence. We would not desire to extend those views so as to include under the definition of a disease, occasional and brief periods of intoxication, no more than we would wish to call the temporary delirium of fever, insanity. Though speaking literally it is. But it is in those cases where the cause has been acting for a prolonged period, that the effect becomes permanent; and it is especially to those cases that we refer. We think that the brethren would do well to think more seriously of the matter than is usually done; for there is more in it of vital interest to the peace and harmony of the Order than appears at first sight. And by looking more carefully into the antecedents of all applicants for admission into our Order, there would soon be fewer brethren who would, by their acts, bring censure upon it. Some brothers may object, and say that they are aware of many exceptions to this, and that many who are now among the most useful members of the Order came from this very class. We admit their exceptions, but must still hold the opinion expressed, as it is in accordance with experience and physiological laws; and if the brothers search carefully into the history of their exceptions, they will find cause to exclude some, and many reasons to modify their opinions concerning others. We admit again, that objections of the above character might, in a few cases, be a great hardship, and deprive the Order of some excellent members, who, by the aid of the moral support which the lodge would throw about them, would be enabled to forsake their downward course, and who otherwise might be lost. This is also true. But nothing can make just such a sacrifice of the welfare of the many for the good of a few, and as there would be no objections made unless there was good ground upon which to base those objections, while the evidence upon the other side rests entirely upon questionable exceptions. Though some wrong might be done; though the light which our precepts might cast upon the moral vision of a few, might enable them to walk upright, yet the good done the Order would so far outweigh the evil, that the latter might, with safety, be lost sight of. As this application of the subject is new, and as we are yet young in Masonry, we would be pleased if some of the older and better informed brethren would elucidate this subject more fully, as we are certain that many, if not all, of our more progressive medical brethren hold these views.

Observations of a Frontiersman.

It was in the month of April, 186—, that your subscriber was keeping a ranch, or in other words a station, on the then great trans-continental thoroughfare which united the States east of the Missouri River with the gold and silver mines of the Rocky mountains and the States and Territories on the Pacific slope. It was before the two extremes of our glorious Republic were bound together by the iron rails of the U. P. R. R. that two brothers were each keeping a ranch at two different localities on this overland route. One of them was accused of having committed some offense, and there being no settlement where civil authority existed within a radius of two hundred miles, the commander at Fort S—— determined to prosecute and ferret out the case—such is the custom where there is no existing civil authority. He ordered a squad of men to go to the ranch and make prisoners of all that could be found on or about the premises. The accused and some half-dozen laborers were secured, taken to the guard-house and confined. At this time the two brothers were not on such terms of intimacy as should exist from their near relationship, but when the one heard of the other's misfortune he hastened to offer whatever assistance was in his power to give. So upon the following day he proceeded to the ranch for the purpose of placing the stock, goods and valuables in a place of security. While he was engaged in taking down and packing away the goods, a company of soldiers under Lieutenant Spencer, of the 30th Infantry, arrived, and after posting guards he entered the ranch with drawn sword, at the head of a file of men, and commanded the unoffending brother to surrender. He was bound and placed in a military conveyance, under a strong guard, and started for the fort. After going a short distance Lieutenant S. noticed a Masonic jewel on the vest of his prisoner. Upon that discovery he ordered his guards ahead, when a conversation ensued between the Lieutenant and his charge. They were Masons. The Lieutenant made immediate inquiries and became satisfied that he was not implicated in the case and he was liberated within an hour. Thus he enjoyed the blessing of liberty through immediate investigation. Had he not been a Mason there is not the least doubt but he would have been confined in a military prison for six months, as the others were, when they were finally all honorably acquitted.

From Forrest Lodge No. 614.

Bro. Reynolds: A little episode in the history of our lodge occurred on last Thursday evening, February 29th, which will long be remembered by all who were present. Pursuant to previous arrangements, the brethren, their wives, sisters, children, and sweethearts to the number of about fifty, met at our hall, ostensibly for a social festival, but really for the purpose of presenting our W. M., Lucian Bullard, with a collar and P. M's jewel. After supper he was conducted to the east by Bro. J. L. Spoor, when the testimonials were presented by Bro. W. M. Lockwood, in a brief and neat speech. Bro. Bullard attempted to respond, but being taken completely by surprise, seemed overcome with emotion, and, after a few words, was compelled to let the emotions of the heart tell what the lips could not express. A deep silence ensued, which was relieved by a quartette under the leadership of Bro. T. J. Kerr.

After this, the following sentiments were responded to:

"The perpetuity of Masonry"—Bro. B. P. Mount.

"Adoptive Masonry"—E L. Booth.

"First Impressions of an Initiate"—W. H. Crocker.

"The Ladies"—A. Havenhill. In silence.

"Free Governments favorable to Benevolent Institutions"—Bro. Wm. W. Lockwood.

After which the W. M. made a few remarks, when we closed with a fine glee. and dispersed greatly benefitted, socially.

Our lodge is in a flourishing financial condition, and "neither envy, discord, or confusion" are suffered to disturb the peace and good fellowship which prevails.

Alsace and Lorraine.

We learn from La Chaine D' Union of Paris, for December, that five of the lodges located in the recently conquered provinces of Alsace and Lorraine have united for the purpose of forming an independent Grand Lodge, taking for their fundamental law the constitution and rules of the Grand Orient of France. It is thought, however, that the new Grand Lodge will allie itself with the Grand Lodge of Germany, and work only the three degrees of Ancient Masonry; in which event the remaining lodges in the provinces will enroll themselves under it. The Bauhutte (the German Masonic periodical), adds, however, that "The government of Berlin desires that the lodges of Alsace and Lorraine unite themselves to a German Grand Lodge, or that they cease to exist." There would seem therefore to be very little doubt how the matter will end. There are three Grand Lodges in the Empire which are recognized by the government, and the Emperor will not be likely to consent to any increase of this number.—F. M. Magazine, Boston.

Selected Poetry.

The Beacon-Light.

A city set upon a hill,
  Cannot be hid;
Exposed to every eye, it will,
Over surrounding plain and vale,
  An influence shed,
And spread the light of peace afar,
Or blight the land with horrid war.

Each Mason's lodge is planted so,
  For high display;
Each is a BEACON-LIGHT, to show
Life's weary wanderers, as they go,
  The better way;
To show by ties of earthly love,
How perfect is the Lodge Above!

Be this your willing task, dear friends,
  While laboring here;
Borrow from Him who kindly lends,
The HEAVENLY LADDER that ascends
  The higher sphere:
And let the world your progress see,
Upward, by FAITH, HOPE, CHARITY.

Special Report of the Board of Masonic Relief.

CHICAGO, February 1st, 1872.

To the Masonic Fraternity throughout the United States, Canada and elsewhere:

BRETHREN: The calamity which laid waste and destroyed the fairest portion of our city in October last, entailed upon all classes of our people a degree of misfortune and distress which has evoked the sympathy and condolence of the civilized world.

The Masonic Fraternity, as such, of this city, have, in common with others, experienced a sad reverse.

A number of beautiful halls, together with the records, jewels, paraphernalia and other property of seventeen lodges, two chapters, one council, two commanderies and four bodies of the Scottish Rite, were totally destroyed. Thus, in a few hours the Craft of Chicago were reduced from a condition of comparative affluence and comfort, to that of poverty and distress.

For a moment the brethren of our city were enveloped in a dark cloud of misfortune, whose density was indeed appalling. But, happily, in every community there are hundreds of Freemasons who soon dispelled the darkness; as citizens they have not only manifested a deep and heartfelt interest in the welfare of our stricken people by generous contributions of money and supplies for the relief of our citizens generally, but in addition to this, the great Brotherhood, from every quarter, have sent munificent gifts of money and supplies for the relief of their needy brethren, and the widows and orphans of deceased Masons.

Brethren, the promptness with which your noble charity has been forwarded, has proved most effectual, and the kind words accompanying your acceptable gifts, will linger in the hearts of those who have felt the warm glow of fraternal charity, long after the black and hideous monuments, which are evidences of our calamity, have passed away.

Charity has ever been esteemed among Masons the crowning virtue, and its practical exemplification illustrates your devotion to the principles of our benign Institution, and goes far to strengthen and embellish the character of a fraternity, who have for so many, many years given proofs of powerful and generous qualities.

The brethren of Chicago find themselves confronted with a debt of gratitude, alike profound, formidable and sacred. It is this sacredness that induces us to state, that, although our task of caring for the needy is not by any means finished, yet we deem it not only just and proper, but a most agreeable duty to say that your unequalled beneficence and liberality have placed in our hands a fund that we believe to be ample to meet the demands which can be legitimately made upon it. We, therefore, with that gratitude which words are inadequate to express, take pleasure in announcing that further contributions to our present resources will not be necessary.

It is not our purpose at this time to render a detailed report of our agency in your behalf; this we hope to do to every donor as soon as practicable, but we may give a synopsis of what has been done, to date.

The Board of Relief is composed of a President, Vice President, Treasurer, Recording and Corresponding Secretary, Superintendent and thirteen members, who hold meetings once each week.

The rooms of the Board are kept open daily (except Sunday), from 9 A. M., until 5 P. M. The business is conducted by the Recording Secretary and Superintendent, with such assistance as is found necessary to dispense your bounty.

The Board have endeavored to devote the funds pursuant to instructions, viz., to those who are worthy and rendered needy by the great fire.

Since the organization, about three thousand (3,000) persons, consisting of brethren, widows and children, have been substantially aided with everything calculated to relieve their wants and enhance comfort.

A very full and minute record has been kept of all our transactions, which, in due time, will be submitted to you, giving the name of lodge or person, and amount of each contribution received.

The total cash receipts, from all sources, which have been deposed with the Treasurer, is	$68,556.00
In hands of brethren at various locations, subject to order of Treasurer	9,696.43
Total cash	$78,252.43

Aid to fifty-six of the foregoing has been declined.

It will be observed that none of the lodges, as such, have received any assistance from the above fund, although the majority of them, by reason of the total destruction of their halls and property, including in many cases their accumulated funds, (making a loss in the aggregate of over $90,000.00,) together with the worthlessness of their insurance, involves much embarassment. Nevertheless, the terrible ordeal through which the Craft of Chicago have passed, has neither scorched their zeal nor abated their energy, but through your sympathy and aid, Freemasonry still survives in our city, and we trust that in the future, as in the past, brethren from wheresoever they may hail, will find in Chicago a continuation of generous hospitality, created by warm and grateful hearts, and evinced by the strong grip of friendship and brotherly love.

Anti-Secret Society Convention, Rochester.

The assembly at Rochester a short time ago, which was proclaimed by its projectors as a "great success," and should be followed by another convention, and which was intended to crush out all secret associations, has had a beneficent effect in having aroused the attention and examination of the thoughtful and the good to the teachings and charitable objects and purposes of the Masonic Fraternity. This is particularly exemplified in the case of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. It was pursuing the even tenor of its way, undisturbed, and the poor quietly receiving the droppings from its sanctuary, when, like a tidal wave, the anti-secret society, scarcely closing its doors, the crowding of the well-appointed rooms of the rite, and the pressing throng for admission as initiates, required increased accommodation.

The presiding officers of the various bodies were found equal to the occasion, and we commend them for their action. A new, commodious, and elegantly equipped hall and apartments have been selected and prepared at great expense, the bodies have more funds than they scarcely know how to lay out, and more initiates at their doors than they ever had before; and this is mainly if not entirely due to the "great success" (?) of the anti-secret society holding its convention in Rochester.

We send our congratulations to P. S. Wilson, Master of the Lodge of Perfection, A. J. Warner, of the Council, G. W. Aldridge, of the Rose Croix, and Otis Cole, Commander-in-Chief of the Consistory, for their prompt, energetic, and successful action.—Dispatch.

Masonic Progress in England.

In accordance with our custom at the commencement of a new year, we shall now proceed to review the present status and recent progress of the several branches of the Masonic family in England.

To the increase of the Craft in general we referred last week, and it only remains to add that forty-one lodges appear to have been added to the roll of the Grand Lodge during the past year, making the nominal total 1,375. We say "nominal total" because, as we pointed out in No. 43 of The Freemason, many lodges have surrendered their warrants in consequence of the formation of independent Grand Lodges in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; and these "defections," as some would call them—although the lodges still exist on the muster-roll of the Craft Universal—reduce the number of lodges under the jurisdiction of England to about twelve hundred and eighty—a sufficiently formidable array, and one which is not approached by any other grand Masonic body in the world. Each of these lodges, if within the London district, pays the sum of four shillings annually to the Fund of Benevolence for every one of its subscribing members, and the country lodges contribute two shillings, in like manner, to the same Fund. Lodges in the colonies and foreign parts are not required to subscribe to the fund, although their members are equally eligible to participate in its benefits. The administration of the vast sums thus collected is confided to a committee, technically called the "Lodge of Benevolence," and which consists of a President, who is nominated by the Grand Master, two Vice Presidents, and twelve Past Masters, elected by Grand Lodge—all present and past Grand Officers, and the Masters of lodges during the tenure of office. This committee meets every month for the consideration and disposal of the various petitions for relief, which are frequently very numerous. Owing, however, to some excellent alterations in the laws—mainly originated by the worthy President, Bro. Clabon, and one of the Vice Presidents, Bro. Nunn—the classification of applicants has become much simplified, and the amount of relief extended by the lodge is now, in some degree, adequate to the claims and services exhibited on behalf of the majority of cases placed on record. Temporary relief is thus afforded to many deserving brethren, enabling them to make a fresh start in life; nor is substantial aid withheld from those whose meritorious labors in Freemasonry demand greater recognition—an instance having occurred recently, when the handsome sum of two hundred and fifty pounds was voted to a poor, but worthy, brother.

In Royal Arch Masonry, there is no annual levy for benevolent purposes, and although we are not prepared to advocate the adoption of the system, it may be doubted whether a portion of the fifteen shillings paid for each companion's registration might not be very properly devoted to the establishment and perpetuation of a fund for distressed Royal Arch Masons. It is a fact that some men, from fancy or otherwise, take a more active part in promoting the prosperity of Capitular Masonry than in advancing the interests of the blue degrees. Hence, their claims upon the Fund of Benevolence—measured by their career in the Craft—may appear but insignificant, whereas, if a Grand Chapter Fund existed, they would be enabled to have their additional claims more fully investigated, and, possibly, better appreciated. We throw out this suggestion in a tentative manner; but, as English Royal Arch Masonry can now boast some 400 chapters—twenty of which have been founded during the past year—the time seems to have arrived when the Order should be more closely identified with the great cause of charity. Let it not be said of Royal Arch Masonry that "here we have labored in vain, and wasted our strength for nought."

Our review of the progress of the Craft and Capitular degrees shows that our illustrious Grand Master and Grand Principal, the Marquis of Ripon, presides over nearly seventeen hundred lodges and chapters, the membership of which bodies, combined, is estimated at about one hundred and forty thousand. It must be remembered, however, that the Royal Arch Masons are included in duplicate, they being, almost to a man, members of lodges as well as of chapters.

The "Mark" degree, although not the oldest of the unrecognized Masonic organizations, in England, is so intimately allied with the Craft, that its rapid increase in influence and numerical strength is somewhat accounted for. The number of Mark lodges under the Mark Grand Lodge is now 139, representing an advance within the year of twenty lodges. The jurisdiction of the Mark governing body in England is now recognized by the Grand Chapters of Ireland and Canada, and by several American Grand Chapters, and, beyond question, when the present Mark Grand Master, our energetic Bro. Portal, hands over his sceptre of office to his successor, Earl Percy, he may fairly congratulate himself and the "Mark" Degree upon the very splendid success which has attended his exertions, and those of his officials, during the period of his presidency as Grand Master.

We are unable to say much as to the position of the various degrees recently annexed to the "Mark," some of which are good, some bad, and one or two indifferent. With careful manipulation, the degrees of "Royal and Select Masters" may be taken kindly to in England, but we much doubt if the melodramatic "high falutin" of the "Super-Excellent" degree will ever find favor in the sight of English Masons. As to the inane farce of "Admiral Noah" and his coxswain "Ham," with the Ark and the other beasts, as our poor friend Artemus Ward would say—why, the sooner it and all its accompaniments are swept away in a Masonic deluge the better, even if we have to deplore the consequent disappearance of a more than proportionate number of the sons of Issachar.

Taking the "Cosmopolitan Masonic Calendar for 1872," as our guide, we find that the Order of Knights Templar stand next in numerical strength to the Mark Masters, numbering, as it does, 121 encampments, an increase of six during the year 1871. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is now identified with the English Templars, and we have no hesitation in adding. that the Order is eminently worthy of the esteem with which it is regarded by the prince.

The "Knights of the Red Cross of Constantine," another old chivalric Order, stand next to the Templars in the Calendar, with 62 conclaves on the roll, an increase of no less than twenty-eight during the annual period About a dozen of these conclaves are, however, located in the United States of America, where it is only reasonable to suppose, independent Grand Councils of the Order will, in due course, be established. It is noteworthy that the meetings of the "Red Cross" and "Temple" Orders are expressly permitted by the articles of union between the two Grand Lodges in 1813, at which time his Royal Highness the late Duke of Sussex was Grand Master of the "Knights Templar," and also of the "Knights of the Red Cross of Constantine."

The "Ancient and Accepted Rite" is the last of the great Masonic powers whose position we have under review. Under the Supreme Council 33°, forty-two Rose Croix chapters are working, eight having been added during the past year. This rite will soon possess a splendid hall of its own in Golden-square, and has lately exhibited other signs of increasing vitality, which augur well for its future prosperity.

On the whole, we are proud to record our satisfaction at the progress of Freemasonry, and its attendant orders, in England during the past year, believing, as we do, that there is room enough for all; and so long as the unrecognized degrees are conducted in unison with the broad principles of the Craft, we shall not only maintain their right to exist, but emphatically wish them God-speed in their career.—The Freemason, London.

Grand Lodge of Hanover.

We have on another occasion noticed the dissolution of the Grand Lodge of Hanover, but as the following contains some particulars and historical data not then mentioned, we give it a place in our pages as a matter of future reference.

After an active existence of forty years, the Grand Lodge of Hanover has ceased to exist. It held its last session March 28, 1868. The war of 1866, between Austria and Prussia, resulted in the annexation of the kingdom of Hanover to Prussia, and in its train followed the question of the future existence of the Grand Lodge. According to an edict issued by a former king of Prussia, October 20, 1798, three grand lodges only are permitted to exist in his dominions. It was supposed by many, however, that inasmuch as Hanover possessed an independent grand lodge before its annexation to Prussia, its quiet continuance would be permitted, particularly as the edict before alluded to seemed to have been modified in 1848, by the enactment of a law which permitted Prussian subjects to assemble without arms in a closed room, and form societies not prohibited by law. This anticipation was not realized. The Grand Lodge of Hanover was swept away by a Cabinet order, February 17, 1867, whether justly or otherwise we cannot say, nor how much the dissensions which sprung up in the Grand Lodge itself contributed to this result.—F. M. Mag., Boston.

Opposition to Masonry.

"Calvin," the Chicago correspondent of The Presbyterian, Philadelphia, in his notes from the interior, in speaking of the operations of the Relief and Aid Society of the former city, says: "What is a church worth that leaves to the world the work of caring for its destitute and suffering poor, and fails to do their very work as a church of Christ? The course of the Masons, Odd Fellows, and other similar societies should make us blush for our shortcomings in this matter. We read Scripture, as if the words of our Lord were sufficient authority for allowing the children of this world to be wiser in their generation than the children of light."

Some twenty years ago Calvin and the writer were members of the same church; he an Odd Fellow of high position—Grand Secretary, we believe—and we, of course, a Mason. Among the poor of our church was the widow of a Master Mason, whom the lodge had long supported from its scanty means, aided by individual contribution. She, too, was a member, as her husband had been, of the same church, the pastor of which was so bitter an anti-Mason that he had compelled the resignation of one of his elders, because he had joined the Masons. When we remonstrated, he justified himself upon this singular plea—he "did not object to the Masons joining his church, and continuing active Masons; but rather that his active church members should join the Masons." He was always "down on the Masons and their pretended acts of charity and deeds of love"—the church was the institution to take care of the poor and needy, and such like arguments as every Mason has heard time and again. Such arguments, if carried into practice as Calvin, a churchman, on this ground, declares, would have left the unfortunate citizens of Chicago destitute of real and practical aid in these days of church influence and power. We determined to give our minister an opportunity of testing his "creed," and so, after conferring with our widowed sister, we suggested next lodge night to withhold our stated supplies for a time, and throw her upon the warm charities of the church. The old lady—for she had seen her three-score and ten years of earthly pilgrimage—went to her (our) pastor and related to him what the Masons had done, and appealed to him and his church for immediate and constant aid. The next Sabbath, our "anti" friend preached a most eloquent (for he was really an able man) discourse upon "Charity and the obligations of the church to its poor." A contribution of thirty pieces of silver (dollars)—'twas in the days of specie payments—was the verdict of the preacher's power over the feelings, not judgment of his members. Then he boasted to us of what the church was doing and going to do—vain boast! While her money lasted, the "lone widow" and her dependent grandchild fared sumptuously several days. But there is an end to all things, and soon he found an end to that "collection." Then he called upon the office bearers, next upon the members, one by one, but the money came slowly, and soon none at all. Still the widow called for help, and at last we, too, added our importunities to hers to him for the much needed and more entitled aid, which came not. In his extremity the minister came to us for help. We told him simply, because he ought to know, that while in moderate circumstances we had all the while done our mite, more than he or any of his exclusive church members had done, though far abler to do. In truth, we had never neglected our weekly visits with a basket of stores to make her heart glad. "He could not," he said, "preach a charity sermon every month or so," and finally, though reluctantly, suggested the hope that "the Masons should renew their aid."

This "confession" was all we wanted. The supplies were forthcoming, and the Masons supported her well while living, and buried her decently, because she was the widow of their brother.

Years passed; the opposition of our preacher to the "secret societies" had rendered him unpopular, and he had left, and returned to the east. There we found him during one of our eastern trips, and as he drove us along to the depot, from our most pleasant visit to himself and truly lovely family, he remarked to us: "What would you think, brother," giving to the word a Masonic rather than ecclesiastical emphasis, "Brother Parvin, were I to tell you that I, too, am a Mason?" We expressed our astonishment, when he added: "I am not only a brother, but a companion of the Holy Royal Arch, and was Grand Orator at our last annual convocation, and have not only learned, but know more of 'charity' than I once did, and respect men of honest opinions, though I may not accord with them."—The Evergreen.

Important Meeting.

We call attention to the notice of Comp. Drummond, calling a convention from the several Grand Councils in the Union, for consultation upon important matters:

GRAND COUNCIL OF R. AND S. MASTERS,
PORTLAND, ME., May 10, 1871.

M. P. Companion:

At the session of the Grand Council of Maine, held on the third instant, after a conference with companions from Massachusetts, I was directed to call a convention of representatives from the several Grand Councils of Royal and Select Masters, to meet in New York, in June, 1872, for the purpose of securing uniformity in the ritual &c. of the Cryptic Rite.

Accordingly, I have fixed upon the second Wednesday in June of that year, and your Grand Council is hereby invited to be represented on that occasion; or if your Grand Council declines or neglects to act in the premises, we shall be happy to meet there any of the companions in your State.

Massachusetts and Maine will be there prepared to exemplify their ritual, even if they have only themselves to witness it.

Due notice of the place* of meeting will be given.

Yours fraternally,
JOSIAH H. DRUMMOND.

MISFORTUNE seems to have given additional strength to those of our contemporaries who have suffered so severely—in America by fire, and in France by the war. THE MASONIC TROWEL has risen from its ashes, and is now printed on better paper and type, and has got together a host of talented contributors, chief among whom is W. Bro. W. Rounseville, whose vigorous articles on all points of Masonic law and discipline are attracting deserved attention both in America and Europe. The November number contains no less than five articles from Bro. Rounseville's pen on the following subjects: "What man is a Mason," "Uniformity of Work," "Election of Officers," "An Incident in the Plains," "Perjurer put to Shame," the last of which we have extracted into our present number.—Masonic Record of Western India.

THE MASONIC TROWEL,

IS PUBLISHED BETWEEN THE FIRST AND FIFTEENTH OF EVERY MONTH.

Price per year, - - - - - - $1.25.

THE TROWEL is the oldest Masonic Journal in America now published in its present form, and is again presented to the Masonic Fraternity for renewed and generous support.

It has ever been the organ of the masonic people and their families—such it will remain. It has been the friend and advocate of law, order, morality, intelligence—of improvement, progress and toleration, and will continue so to be.

It is now printed on new type, superior paper, and will give the latest Masonic tidings.

Memorial Volume.

Many, if not most of our readers are apprised that we will publish one more volume, commencing on the first of June next, and with that—the eleventh—THE TROWEL will end. Various considerations lead us to this conclusion.

Financial.—There are two Masonic periodicals published in Michigan, one in Illinois, one in Iowa, one in Missouri, one in Indiana, one in Kentucky, one in Tennessee, one in Texas, and one in California, covering ground once occupied almost exclusively by THE MASONIC TROWEL. This has narrowed our circulation, and the prospect of permanent and material increase is improbable, and at the price of our paper, the circulation must be large, or it cannot be a success. We have no capital to push with, and we labor at much disadvantage.

Personal.—We know full well that our physical and mental powers are declining. We are in debt; we must try to pay. We have a family to support, and two children yet to educate; the business we are in, as a continuous, exclusive business, will not furnish the means for both, and keep itself in good condition. We had better close our editorial career, humiliating though it may be, while we may do so with credit, and before our brethren admonish us that we are too old to serve them efficiently any longer. We could retire now, and enter into business near our second son, did not both duty and honor demand that we remain at our post one year longer.

Duty.—Many subscribers have paid for another year. We have on hand an immense stock of blanks, and some other goods. The paper must be furnished according to agreement, and our stock in trade disposed of. We, therefore, propose that the eleventh shall be the

and its columns will be devoted almost exclusively to Masonic history, reviews of the past, reminiscences of our own, contributions from Bro. Rounseville, "Past Grand Lecturer," "Grandfather Graybeard," and other able contributors and correspondents. We shall give, at least, one-fourth, perhaps one-third of our space to historical matters in the Mississippi valley and west of it, and when this memorial volume shall close, we trust that our brethren, our lodges, chapters, councils and commanderies will all have a volume they will be careful to preserve, and that we will have performed a work which our brethren will pronounce good and square, and we may hope that they may say, that it is the best work of our life. We shall try to merit such a verdict.

Our cotemporaries can. and we trust will aid us in this work; will join in giving us a benefit. What we may leave, when our labor is completed, may be useful to them in the future, while their good words to swell our circulation for one year more, cannot materially damage them. Rather, we feel quite sure, will it benefit them.

We desire to have our subscriptions for the eleventh volume, wherever possible, taken by lodges or Masonic bodies, to one address. To this end we make the following special offers:

One copy, $1.25; two copies, $2.25; three copies, $3.25; five copies, $5.00; ten copies, $9.00; fifteen, $13.00; twenty, $18.00, one copy to be bound at the end of the year; thirty copies, $27, two of the copies to be bound at the end of the year. We have the earnest recommendations of Grand Master Cregier, Grand High Priest Hawley, Grand Puissant Levanway and Grand Commander Egan, and hope to receive a substantial reward for one year more of honest, exacting and expensive toil. We hope that in every case, possible, the subscriptions may reach us by the 15th of May.

Please Renew or Subscribe.

While we shall be very glad to have subscriptions from Masonic lodges and bodies sent to one address, we are most anxious that our old friends and subscribers should renew their subscriptions for the last volume of THE MASONIC TROWEL, and every subscriber is authorized to send his own and any other subscription he can get. We hope that the ordinary pleas of inability, other papers, no time, etc., may all—one and all—be utterly forgotten for the coming year. It is a small pittance, but one year more, and a general uprising of our brethren with a hearty greeting and material aid everywhere, will give nerve and vigor to our pen, joy and comfort to our heart, and something to keep the wolf from our door at the end of the year, while we may be in transition from this to some other employment. One lift more, and altogether, brethren, and now!

End of the Tenth Volume.

After the great catastrophe which destroyed the records and archives of the Grand Lodge, the State bindery, and the entire TROWEL office, on the 22d of February, 1871, we set ourselves to the task of reconstruction. Two numbers of the tenth volume had already been issued, but after some reflection we resolved to commence the volume anew, and made arrangements to that end. The contributions in our aid at home and abroad, were carefully expended in procuring a new office, insufficient in quantity and variety, and wanting a power press for our paper. The subscriptions were far less than we anticipated, being less than 2,500, and with the money received and the business we have done, we have brought through the year more than 4,000 subscribers whose names were on our books when the fire occurred, and find ourselves in debt for the year's operations about $1,200. In other words, we were in debt to subscribers on our books at the time of the fire, and to the new subscribers about $7,000, with only about $3,000 of the new subscription in hand, and we have come through the year with the amount reduced to $1,200. And we have stock and goods enough on hand to cover that amount, outside of the printing office. In addition to that we have paid a large amount of debts, and a large amount, including paid subscriptions, is still due from us.

While we have great reason to be thankful—and are thankful—while we do not complain, and will not complain, we feel obliged to say, that our reasonable expectations, based upon former experience, have, by no means, been realized. The business will not carry itself, make a living for our family, and leave any margin. Duty and honor require us to provide an honest subsistence and education for our family and the means to pay what we justly owe.

In sadness and sorrow we must say, that this business does not furnish such an outlook. We have had, and still have great pride in THE MASONIC TROWEL, but the time has come for us to listen to the demands of duty rather than our pleasure or pride. It is our duty, as matters now are, Providence smiling, to publish one more volume, and then THE MASONIC TROWEL will end. Had we foreseen what is now plainly apparent, we should have stopped with the fire. But the tenth volume is published, notwithstanding the calumnious assertions of an untruthful and mercenary rival in some places that we were rich, and in others that we were thoroughly broken and utterly unable to go forward, and we have kept our promise to our brethren, in act, letter and spirit. Our wishes, our final purposes and closing work, for the last volume, we will set forth in another article. In the meantime, with not an envious thought or an unkind wish towards any human being, we tender our most grateful thanks to the good brethren who have aided us by their contributions, their subscriptions and their patronage. May God bless them always.

Another Past Grand Officer Gone.

Doctor and Rev. F. A. McNeil, of Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., recently departed this life, full of years, laden with good deeds and a useful life. In his early years he was a Methodist travelling preacher, but afterwards settled in Springfield and practiced medicine. He served as Master of Springfield Lodge No. 4, H. P. of Springfield Chapter No. 1, and subsequently, while residing in Peoria, was Master of Peoria Lodge No. 15. In the early history of the Grand Lodge, he wore the honors of Grand Chaplain well. He distinguished himself as surgeon in the Mexican war, and was an efficient chaplain in our late civil strife. Upon his death bed, he said "all is peace."

Masonic Hall Dedication in Troy, New York.

We are under obligations to Bro. E. B. Cox for a copy of the Troy daily Times, which contains twelve pages, mostly in fine type, giving a description and account of the dedication of the new Masonic Hall on the 2d inst. The building is 134 feet long by 50 wide, four stories, and a Mansard and tower. The fourth story is occupied by the Fraternity, and the rooms and appointments are among the finest in the country. The day was fine and the scene enjoyable.

A Chair Presented.

Thomas J. Reynolds, a very old man, an excellent citizen and zealous Mason, for three years nearly helpless, who resides in the vicinity of Miles Hart Lodge and Amaranth Chapter of the Eastern Star, near the lines of Shelby and Coles, was taken entirely by surprise on the last day of January, at his own house. The ladies of the Chapter, aided by the brethren, procured a chair worth $37, prepared a dinner, went in a body to the house, placed the old gentleman in the chair and at the table loaded with just such things as farmers' women know how to provide and prepare. The Worthy Patron—Bro. Worley—presented the chair in the name of the donors. For some time the aged brother was unable to respond, but when he did, it was worthy of a noble and generous man. The meeting was a good and profitable one, and we are rejoiced to learn that the venerable brother has been improving ever since. Such deeds befit the name of Amaranth Chapter and Miles Hart Lodge.

Daniel Bonar.

Those who knew him in his boyhood, and in his manhood will regret to learn of the death of the pure and upright man, Daniel Bonar, for a long time county Clerk of Henry Co., at Cambridge. It was his rule to return good for evil. He held every position in Cambridge Lodge No. 49, and relentless and merciless as was the war upon Masonry at that place, detraction could not reach him. In his boyhood, he was the playmate of the Messrs. Gross in this city, then resident in the northeast corner of Knox county. He died a short time since at the age of forty-two; beloved in life; lamented in death.

Terrible Casualty.

By a letter from W. Bro. John G. Harvey, M. D., of Grove City, Christian county, we learn that a lad (son of Bro. H. C. Webb, J. W. of the lodge at Grove City) fell across a circular saw, and was instantly cut in two, and so great was the force that one part of the body was thrown ten feet, and fell at the father's feet. The boy was about thirteen years old. The case created great sympathy, and our bereaved brother and father and family will have the heartfelt commisseration of the Fraternity.

"The Triune Ballot."

In the February number Bro. Rounseville went to the country with his declaration against the present rule; we plead to his declaration in March; in this number Bro. Rounseville replies; we will rejoin in June. In the meantime let our cotemporaries keep "hands off" until our pleas are exhausted.

Knights of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine and Appendant Orders.

We learn from the Freeport Journal, that Em. Sir Jona. J. Young, Divisional Inspector General for Illinois, formed a conclave in Freeport, recently, with gratifying prospects of success. Loyal L. Munn is Sovereign; N. F. Prentice, Viceroy; M. D. Chamberlin, Senior General; Geo. Thompson, Junior General; James S. McCall, High Prelate; Robert Little, Treasurer; Leonard T. Lemon, Recorder. The orders are conferred on Knights Templar only.

A body was formed some time since in Chicago, of which Em. Sir J. J. Young is Sovereign, and our good friend, G. W. Barnard, is Viceroy. We should be pleased to receive a list of the officers.

Knights Templar Tactics and Drill.

We are in receipt of a neat pocket manual of 215 pages improved edition of Templar Tactics, by Sir Orrin Welch, Past Grand Commander of New York, and published by the Masonic Publishing Company, at 626 Broadway, New York. The School of the Knight embraces the elementary principles of military movements; Tactics for public parades is the second division, followed by "Manual of the Sword;" "Small Sword Exercise;" "Tactics for the Asylum;" "Ceremonial Parades" and "Burial Service." At the close, the uniform of a Templar is given at length. The work is well illustrated with diagrams and figures.

Send to Him.

If any brother has need of legal services in Jones Co., Iowa, he will do well to employ Bro. M. M. Moulton, Attorney at Law, and Real Estate agent at Monticello.

And to Him.

Any matter for collection, tax payment, or in connection with real estate, may be safely entrusted to Hon. Wm. Rounseville, City Judge, Peoria, Ill.

Thanks.

For the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Maine, in advance sheets, up to 1847.

WE get letters constantly from friends and acquaintances who have moved west. And now W. Bro. T. B. Mitchele, W. M. of Magnolia Lodge, 103, is about removing to Nebraska. He has served the lodge faithfully as Senior Deacon, Secretary, Warden, Master and Representative in Grand Lodge. Our brother received the third degree in Oct. 1864. We wish him, and his wife and five young children a pleasant journey, and much prosperity in their new land of promise.

Order of the Eastern Star.

Means and Benefits of Recognition.

There are certain positive and negative benefits to which the wives, daughters, mothers, sisters and widows of Master Masons are entitled. Freemasons have a mode of communication with each other, unknown to any written or spoken language, and everywhere certain, universal and instantaneous. This unwritten, thorough and certain language, is known only to its initiates, who must be men of lawful age, freeborn, and of good report. The rules of the Institution are unchangeable. To profit by the benefits, the privileges and protection to which such ladies are entitled at their own homes, no means of recognition are necessary, for there they are personally known, and where so known, identity is not necessary.

The Means.—This must be by some diploma, certificate or token. Neither the diploma or certificate are indisputable evidence of themselves, for either may be purloined or counterfeited. The possession of a diploma under a lodge seal as the wife, daughter, mother, sister or widow of a Master Mason, is prima facie proof, and goes far in favor of the holder, but other evidence often becomes essential and necessary. We advise every such lady to get a diploma in her proper character from the lodge of which her husband, father, son, or brother is (or was at the time of decease), a member. Indeed, such male relatives should see that they have them. Then absolute and unconditional modes of recognition become important. It is the intention, as well for the benefit of Freemasons, incidental and direct, as for their lady relatives, to make the Order of the Eastern Star as universal as Freemasonry; not of it, but dependent upon it, its adjunct and co-operator. The tokens, cabala, and certificates of the Order of the Eastern Star, are means of recognition by any lady in possession of the same, or by any brother who may understand them. By her certificate as a member of a chapter of the Eastern Star, the way is paved for an introduction, and doubly so, if in addition she has a diploma from a Masonic lodge. Then her examination proves her relationship, and thenceforth she can make known her wishes, and by the guidance of friendly hands, intelligently proceed and act.

The Benefits.—A lady traveling, finds herself in distress, in need of advice, of professional, personal or pecuniary assistance; well posted, she finds some one of either sex, who understands her, and her way is clear. We could enlarge upon this point in detail, by incidents and by argument. Space will not allow, neither is it necessary.

The benefits at home, were pointed out in our article in the March number, while commenting upon the social character of the Order.

Capitol Chapter No. 100, E. S.

Upon a visit of R. W. Bro. D. W. Thomson to this city, a long talked of event took place at Masonic Hall, March 15. On that occasion about sixty brethren and ladies assembled at Masonic Hall, and were organized under the name of Capitol Chapter No. 100. Hon. Orlin H. Miner was elected Worthy Patron; Mrs. O. H. Miner, Worthy Matron; Mrs. Laura N. Young, Associate Matron; Mrs. Abigail L. Bradley, Treasurer; Mrs. Julia L. Ives, Secretary; Mrs. Ellen A. Nafew, Conductress; Miss Lillie Fisher, Associate Conductress; Miss Lizzie Adams, Adah.; —, Ruth; Mrs. Adelaide V. Woods, Esther; Miss Annie Schuck, Martha; Mrs. Katie A. Eldredge, Electa; Samuel H. Claspill, Warder; J. W. Watson, Sentinel.

The Patron, Bro. Miner, is our present Grand Secretary. Left an orphan at an early age, he has worked his way unaided, alone, up to vigorous manhood, high position, and a proud citizenship. In his position as W. M. of Tyrian Lodge, H. P. of Springfield Chapter, Grand Puissant of the Grand Council, Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter, Auditor of State, and various other positions, he has proven himself equal to any position as an administrative or executive officer, from the lowest to the highest in our Masonic councils, in our State or in our nation, not excepting any. Money is safer in his hands than in any bank vault. Honor and integrity mark every act, and he has reached such a condition, that no honest Tyrian is permitted to go to the wall. Such is the beloved brother who presides over the interests of the Eastern Star in Springfield. His accomplished lady is thoroughly his help-meet.

Mrs. Young is the sister of the late lamented William A. Dickey, the most accomplished workman in nine degrees, that Illinois has ever seen. In every movement of Mrs. Young, the modest grace, capacity and self-poise of the brother is seen.

Mrs. Bradley is the wife of W. Bro. L. H. Bradley, W. M. of St. Paul's Lodge No. 500, a talented lawyer and most worthy gentleman. She is also the daughter of the late Hon. Uri Manley, for several sessions member of the House from Clark, and a conspicuous member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847. The wife and daughter is equal to either.

Mrs. Ives is the daughter of the late Josiah Francis, for a long time a noted citizen, one of the publishers of the Illinois Journal, and for several years, Sheriff of Sangamon county.

Mrs. Nafew is a native of Springfield, has all her work perfect, and conducts her candidates through the labyrinth with perfect ease and grace. Miss Lillie Fisher is the daughter of R. W. Bro. Chas. Fisher, now W. M. of 71, H. P. of Springfield Chapter. No. 1, and late Deputy Grand Master. Such is the make up. Neither storm or adverse circumstances can keep the members away, and the Chapter already numbers over 100 members.

Proceedings of Grand Bodies.

WISCONSIN.—Grand Chapter.—Forty chapters represented at Milwaukee, Jan. 17. Joseph Yates, G. H. P. Seven P. G. H. Priests present.

The G. H. P. reported a new chapter formed at Oconomowoc.

Comp. J. P. C. Cottrill submitted the report on correspondence. He is a thorough reporter; with a dash of humor, a spice of wit, excellent good nature, but with a vigorous, thoughtful mind, and ability to put good ideas in a most readable form. Illinois gets a fair showing; Iowa more; Missouri cleverly and Indiana ditto. Minnesota gets an examination and Michigan is kindly noticed. In noticing legal matters the judicial faculty is apparent, but no reporter is more thoroughly a gentleman. His statistics of thirty-six grand chapters show a membership of 105,623.

One hundred and fifty dollars was given to Comp. E. D. Campbell, a resident of La Crosse, now seventy years of age.

The number of R. A. Masons reported is 2,488; exalted during the year, 157.

Two hundred dollars was also donated for the relief of Comp. Joel C. Squires.

G. F. G. Collins, of Beloit, was elected G. H. P.; J. H. Evans, Deputy; Joseph Keyes, G. K.; Jos. Winslow, G. S.; D. H. Wright, G. Treasurer; W. T. Palmer, Milwaukee, G. Secretary.

Decided, that a protest against advancement has the same effect as a ballot; straight lines rule in jurisdiction.

Four chapters in Milwaukee with 428 members.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—Grand Lodge.—All the lodges being situated in the District, and mostly in Washington, special and stated communications are frequent.

The book before us has a large space devoted to the reception of the Grand Master of England, the Earl De Grey and Ripon, now Marquis of Ripon.

The annual meeting was held Nov. 8, Chas. F. Stansbury, Grand Master. Eighteen lodges were represented. Bro. Larner, who had served five years as Grand Secretary with great ability, declined a re-election.

Chas. F. Stansbury was elected G. M.; J. B. Gibbs, Deputy; I. L. Johnson, S. G. W.; L. D. Wine, J. G. W.; C. Cammack, Sr., G. Treasurer; C. W. Hancock, G. Secretary.

The report on correspondence by Bro. W. R. Singleton, is certainly very able, and completely exhaustive, covering 148 pages. Bro. Rounseville's report covered only 26 pages, but it was full and complete. Bro. Singleton complains of the paucity of that report. Every editor, reporter and lecturer can testify to the labor of a short but full report, and the ease of making a long one, and not very full either. Terseness, conciseness, explicitness and clearness are the result of severe mental labor and study. No report presented to a Masonic body in Illinois ever did embrace the qualities of terseness, conciseness, explicitness and clearness like the report presented by Bro. Rounseville, in 1870. It was not appreciated at the time, but was afterwards, and was generally read. Nobody complained of it in Illinois but the printers, who count matter by ems.

The illustrious Bro. Mackey is a member of Lafayette Lodge No. 19.

KANSAS.—Grand Council.—We are under obligations to Comp. John H. Brown, Grand Recorder, for a copy of the proceedings under one cover from 1868 to 1871.

Comp. John Philbrick, succeeded Comp. Rees as Grand Puissant in 1868, and was re-elected in 1869, 1870 and 1871.

The last meeting was held at Lawrence, Oct. 19. The Grand Puissant reported new councils at Topeka, and at Brownsville, Nebraska, both of which were chartered. Comp. Philbrick takes very strong ground in favor of the Super-Excellent degree. Our own opinion in all candor, is, that the Royal Masters degree is essential; that the Super-Excellent is fuss and feathers, and that the Select Masters is indispensable. As the Super-Excellent is introduced it had better be retained, for somebody wants it, and it does no manner of harm. The officers for the present year are as follows: John L. Philbrick, of Atchison, G. P.; M. S. Adams, of Leavenworth, Deputy; John M. Price, of Atchison, P. C. W.; Christian Beck, G. Treasurer, and John H. Brown, Grand Recorder, both of Leavenworth.

ALABAMA.—Grand Lodge.—At Montgomery, Dec. 4th, J. H. Johnson, acting as G. M. Out of 300 lodges, 218 were represented; and of these, thirteen were represented in full, thirty-one by the Master and Warden, one by the Wardens, and 134 by Masters alone, making 175 of the 218 represented by Masters—an unusual thing. And of these Masters four were Past Grand Masters. Past Grand Master William Leigh, then eighty-two years old, more than fifty years a Mason, and elected Grand Master in 1832, appeared as the representative of Florence Lodge No. 14, and was specially introduced by P. G. Master Clopton, and welcomed by the Grand Lodge. The Grand Master's report fully sets forth his work and decisions. He announced the death of Grand Master Wm. P. Chilton, which occurred January 20, 1871.

The Grand Treasurer's report showed receipts and balances, $7,644.35; balance on hand, $1,236.95.

Joseph H. Johnson, of Talladega, was elected Grand Master; Geo. Frank Smith, Deputy; Isaiah A. Wilson, S. G. W.; Palmer J. Pillans, J. G. W.; W. H. Dingley, G. Treasurer; Daniel Sayre, Montgomery, Grand Secretary.

Non-affiliated Masons are not entitled to Masonic burial; the Grand Lodge decided that payment of lodge dues should entitle them to such service. The Grand Lodge of Quebec was recognized.

Bro. R. F. Knott presented the report on correspondence.

MICHIGAN.—Grand Lodge.—Detroit, January 9th, John W. Champlin, G. M.; 264 lodges represented. The recent calamities in Michigan, Wisconsin and Chicago received appropriate mention, and the report of the Grand Master was very full. The act of incorporation with corporate by-laws, forms for application for insurance, for conveyance, bill of sale to Grand Lodge, deed to Grand Lodge, declaration of trust and lease, are given at length.

Bro. Fenton presented the report on correspondence. In his comments upon Illinois, he alludes to the reversal of our decision, that suicides, unless insane, are not entitled to Masonic burial. The Grand Lodge of Illinois decided that all Masons who commit suicide are entitled to Masonic burial, and Bro. Fenton remarks that our Grand Lodge stands alone upon that subject. It is a monstrous doctrine to us. Murder is murder, and self-murder in a state of sanity admits of neither excuse or palliation.

Grand Treasurer's balances and receipts, $20,532.71; balance in hand, $10,937.71.

The representative system was adopted.

The death of P. G. M. Fenton was suitably noticed. We made a lengthy reference to it in a previous number.

The Michigan Freemason was very strongly indorsed. Henry Chamberlin, of Three Oaks, was elected G. M.; Hugh McCurdy, Deputy; William Dunham, S. G. W.; D. W. Clemmer, J. G. W.; R. W. Landon, Grand Treasurer; James Fenton, Detroit, Grand Secretary, and Henry M. Look, of Pontiac, Grand Lecturer; 296 lodges; 23,996 members; average eighty-one.

New Jersey—Grand Council.—Trenton, Jan. 16th, Edward Goeller, G. M. All peaceful and prosperous. J. P. Doremus, Patterson, elected G. M.; T. H. R. Redway, Deputy; J. W. Preston, G. I. M.; C. W. Chase, P. C. W.; C. H. Leonard, G. Treasurer; T. J. Corson, Trenton, G. Recorder; seven councils; 479 members. Comp. Corson's report on correspondence is brimfull of good things, wit, humor and poetry.

Mississippi.—Grand Commandery.—Annual conclave at Holly Springs, Jan. 20. Wm. S. Patton, Grand Commander, who delivered an eloquent address.

Receipts, $544.09; balance, $17.09.

The Grand Body objects to the term Red Cross Knights, as improperly representing a Christian, instead of a Jewish degree, and the term, "The Order of Knights of Jerusalem" is preferred. Such is our own view of the case.

George Delap, of Natchez, was elected Grand Commander; John T. Buck, Deputy; P. M. Savery, G. G.; John Nelson, G. C. G.; Rev. A. H. Barkley, G. P.; J. L. Power, Jackson, Grand Recorder. Nine commanderies; 262 members.

Virginia. — Grand Chapter. — At Richmond, Dec. 13. John P. Little, G. H. P., who reported that he had visited thirteen chapters. Robert E. Withers, of Richmond, was elected G. H. P.; B. M. Harris, G. K.; W. H. Lambert, G. S.; T. A. Dudley, G. Treasurer; John Dove, M. D., Richmond, Grand Secretary.

Funds received $1,326.62; balance after disbursements, $55.96.

Forty chapters made returns; membership, 1841.

Kentucky—Grand Lodge.—At Louisville, Oct. 16, Charles Eginton, G. M.; 336 lodges represented. The annual address was able. Nine dispensations were granted for new lodges, and thirteen received charters.

The Treasurer's report showed the sum of $28,798.74 from all sources.

Bro. Thos. J. Pickett, P. G. M. of Illinois, was appointed chairman of Committee on Grievances, and presented a very able and exhaustive report. The Grand Lodge holds $78,615 stock in Masonic Temple, at Louisville.

Edward B. Jones, of Paducah, was elected G. M.; E. W. Turner, Deputy; W. E. Woodruff, G. S. W.; Thos. J. Pickett, J. G. W.; A. G. Hodges, G. Treasurer; J. M. S. McCorcle, Louisville, Grand Secretary. One thousand dollars was donated to sufferers at various localities by the great fires.

The number of members is $20,162.

The Kentucky Freemason was indorsed in well-merited compliment.

Illinois.—Grand Chapter.—The recapitulation shows 145 chapters; 833 exaltations; 9,000 members.

We clip the following from the January number of The Michigan Freemason:

INDORSEMENT BY GRAND DODGE.

The Grand Lodge at its recent session at Detroit, gave The Michigan Freemason the following hearty indorsement:

To the M. W. G. M. of Grand Lodge of F. and A. M. of the State of Michigan:

Your committee would respectfully report that they have had under consideration that portion of the Grand Master's address relating to the subject of Masonic literature, and concur in the wish expressed that there should be some ably conducted journal which should serve as well as an organ of this Grand Lodge, and as a means of intimate communication between the Grand Officers and the subordinate lodges throughout the State.

The Michigan Freemason has heretofore received the approval of this Grand Body, and your committee would recommend it to the patronage of all Masons. We are assured that the publishers will use every effort to improve its character and make it a credit to the Fraternity.

The establishment of this journal was attended with difficulties which would by many have been regarded as insurmountable, and at present nothing but constant effort and personal sacrifice enables the enterprise to be carried forward. Such a support as the Fraternity in this jurisdiction can give such a journal, would enable the publishers to send out a publication that would be at once our credit and pride. We would urge upon our brethren to give it a cordial support, and would recommend that the G. M. make it the organ of his public communications to the Craft.

A slip, evidently resenting this action, placed upon the seats by a rival, was declared to be contumacious and insulting to the Grand Lodge. We congratulate Bro. Chaplin upon the result. He is a gentleman, a good writer, and in every sense, an exemplary and worthy Mason and Christian minister. He had the misfortune once, like Peter and John, to fall in company with a knave and a liar, by whom he ought not to have been deceived, for greed, falsehood and malignity are indelibly stamped upon his face. But we hope our brother is well out of that, and we know that prosperity must now attend him.

Well Done.

W. Bro. T. Schreiner, Grand Tyler Grand Lodge of Iowa, has collected and presented $150.00 to W. Bro. John P. Ferns, Grand Tyler Grand Lodge of Illinois, and a large sufferer by the Chicago fire.

Transactions.

Just as we are ready for the press, we have received from Grand Secretary Miner, advanced sheets of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge, for which he has our thanks. The full copy will be out soon.

We are also under obligations to Grand Secretary Miles, for beautiful copies of the proceedings of the Grand Chapter for 1871, and of the Grand Council for 1870 and 187I.

"Extent of a Protest."

This article by Bro. Rounseville is copied into the Masonic department of the Herald, published at Plattsmouth, Nebraska.

We have received a beautiful tribute to the memory of Bro. L. A. McKinstry, late a member of Momence Lodge No. 481. He died Feb. 13, aged 39 years. Initiated March 2, 1867, passed April 5, and raised May 18, the same year. A page in the Book of Records was set apart as a memento.

Michael Eloi Girard, of Vermillionville, is G. H. P. of the Grand Chapter, R. A. M., of Louisiana, and James C. Batchelor, M. D., lock box 872, New Orleans, is Grand Secretary. We await the arrival of the Transactions.

H. D. Sherman is E. C., and W. M. Moulton, Recorder, of Trinity Commandery No. 16, K. T., at Monticello, Jones county, Iowa.

Masonic Jewel.

"The Happy Surprise," contributed to the Trowel by Past Grand Lecturer, one of a series of costly articles, is copied into the Masonic Jewel without credit to him or to the Trowel. "The Perjurer put to shame," is credited "Rounseville," while his name appears as Associate Editor, and all his articles are published as Edititoral in his department.

Masonic Monitor.

We are in receipt of No. 1, Vol. 1, of the Masonic Monitor, published monthly at Goldsboro, N. C., by Bro. J. A. Bonitz, at $1.50 per year. It starts out well; if it holds out as well, it will be a success. The Monitor is welcome.

The Atlas,

Published at Seward, Nebraska, has departments for the Patrons of Husbandry, Masonry, Odd-Fellowship, the Good Templars, and Education.

The Voice of Masonry

Indorses Bro. Rounseville's views on the "Protest" and the "Triune Ballot." We indorse neither. We have had no little experience in both, and experience is a good schoolmaster. We wish there were more bars than there are. Every bar, bolt, lock and key added are aids to Masonry; every one taken away lets in an enemy.

The Council Bluffs Weekly Times,

A thirty-six column paper, comes full of news, local matters, spicy editorials and live notices and advertisements of business. Among them is a well-prepared article setting forth the articles and their qualities in the immense agricultural store of Messrs. Shugart & Lininger. Our numerous readers in Western Iowa and Nebraska will do well to look in upon their stock.

THE Editor of the Kentucky Freemason publishes and comments upon several discourteous letters received. It will not pay, Bro. Henderson. The brothers who can write such letters, will not only rejoice in the notoriety you give them, but will go into ecstacies at the idea that "they hurt." Twenty years or more of editorial life has learned us to cherish the good, and throw the bad in the fire. If noticed at all, we usually do it in a form that brings "no returns."

THROUGH the politeness of Gen. J. C. Smith, we are in receipt of a valuable communication from Capt. H. H. Gear, who settled in the mining district near Galena in 1827, but now resides, at the great age of eighty years, at St. Donatus. Iowa. His communication is difficult to read, but if this venerable brother. at his age, will take the pains to put important facts on record, we hold it to be our duty to decypher them, and hope to put them in a readable and attractive form before our readers at an early day.

Rail Roads.

ILLINOIS.

The official Railway Guide contains notices of railroads in its April issue, not heretofore known beyond their immediate locality. The Decatur. Sullivan and Mattoon railroad is finished from the junction of the Illinois Central and Indianapolis and St. Louis railroad at Mattoon to Sullivan, the county seat of Moultrie county, and thence to Bethany, 23 miles.

The Quincy, Alton and St. Louis railroad runs along the base of the bluffs, from Quincy through Adams and Pike counties to Pike, opposite Louisiana, on the Louisiana route of the Chicago and Alton railway diverging at Roadhouse, for Kansas City. From Pike, passengers and freight are taken to St. Louis via Roadhouse and Alton. The distance from Quincy to Pike is 42 miles, and supplies the link for a direct through route to St. Louis, from Burlington, Iowa.

The Monticello railroad is built from Monticello, Piatt county, to Urbana and Champaign.

The Chester and Tamaroa railroad is built from Tamaroa, in Perry county, via Pinckneyville, the county seat, to Chester on the Mississippi, forty-one miles. and furnishes the great outlet from the Chester coal fields.

There are other railroads not yet known to fame, which pass through fine agricultural and mineral regions, among which we mention:

The Illinois Farmers and the Jacksonville and Illinois Southeastern united, connecting Jacksonville with Virden. on the main stem of the Chicago and Alton, via Waverly—a most beautiful town—30 miles in length.

Also, a road from Bement, complete to Windsor, passing through Sullivan, the county seat of Moultrie county.

And, a road full thirty miles in length, from Fairbury in Livingston county, via Pontiac, the county seat, to Streator La Salle county.

MISSOURI AND IOWA.

From St Louis.—The Pacific, of Missouri, runs via Jefferson to Kansas City. and thence to Atchison, Kansas, 330 miles, with branches from Tipton to Boonville, 25 miles, from Sedalia to Lexington, 55 miles, from Pleasant Hill to Lawrence, Kansas, 64 miles, making. by the Pacific line and branches, 474 miles; the Atlantic and Pacific diverges from the Pacific at Pacific, 37 miles west of St. Louis, and runs, southwestardly via Springfield, to Vinita. in the Indian Territory, a distance of 364 miles, making in the whole, 838 miles.

The St. Louis and Iron Mountain railroad runs via Mineral Point to Belmont. opposite Columbus, Ky., 196 miles.

The St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern railway runs via Moberly and Brunswick to Kansas City, 275 miles, with branches from Moberly, via Macon, to Ottumwa, Iowa, 131 miles; from Centralia to Columbia, 22 miles; from Brunswick to Pattonsburg, 80 miles, and from North Lexington to St. Joseph, 76 miles, making in all, 584 miles.

From Hannibal and Quincy.—The Hannibal and St. Joseph starts by two stems from Hannibal and Quincy, and unite at Palmyra, and run via Macon, Brookfield, Chillicothe and Cameron to St. Joseph; 221 miles, with a branch from Cameron to Kansas City, 47 miles; total 268 miles.

The Hannibal and Missouri Central runs to Moberly, 70 miles, and is operated in connection with the Hannibal and Naples, by the T., W. & W. railroad.

The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific in Iowa, runs from Davenport to Council Bluffs, via Des Moines, 310 miles, with branch from Wilton to Leavenworth, Kansas, via Cameron, 321 miles, making 631 miles.

The Burlington and Missouri River railroad, connects at Burlington, Iowa. with the C., B. & Q. railroad, and runs thence to Plattsmouth, 279 miles; thence to Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska.

The C., B. & Q. railroad has a branch from Burlington to Keokuk, Iowa, 43 miles.

The Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs railroad reaches from Kansas City, via St. Joseph. to Council Bluffs and Omaha, 204 miles, with a branch from St. Joseph to Creston, 60 miles; total 264.

The Des Moines Valley railroad runs from Keokuk northward, to Fort Dodge, 249 miles. This road passes Des Moines.

The Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota railway runs from Burlington to Cedar Rapids, 161 miles.

The Chicago and Alton railroad operates the road from Louisiana to Mexico, Mo., 48 miles.

The Mississippi Valley and Western railroad is built from Quincy to Canton, Mo.

The Missouri, Kansas and Texas railway, starts from Sedalia and unites with the stem from Junction City at Parsons, via Fort Scott, 159 miles.

The Central railroad of Iowa runs from Mason City, via Marshalltown, to Albia, 169 miles.

Starting from Davenport, the Davenport and St. Paul railway is built to Wyoming, 54 miles.

The Chicago, Dubuque and Minnesota railroad is built from Dubuque, via McGregor, to La Crescent, 117 miles.

Railroading is in its infancy in Missouri and Iowa.

Statutes of Illinois.

27th General Assembly, 1871--2.

Immediately after the adjournment, we will issue in one volume the New Constitution and all the laws of general and permanent interest passed by the 27th General Assembly, arranged, classified and indexed to correspond with our Statutes.

The same care will be used to make the text a literal copy of the enrolled law, as in previous publications; while the paper and printing will be of the same excellent character. The binding will be strong but not expensive. The intention being to present a cheap but serviceable edition of the laws in advance of other publications, and possessing the further advantage of being uniform with the Statutes, now in general use in this State.

It should be borne in mind that the publication of the acts of this General Assembly by the State, cannot be made in less than six months from the date of adjournment. Some of the acts contain "Emergency" clauses and take effect at once, and all others take effect on 1 July, 1872, thereby rendering it necessary for the profession and others interested to secure for immediate use a reliable edition of these laws.

This edition we shall endeavor to make in every way worthy the confidence of the people and the profession.

Old Grandfather Graybeard's Corner.

Dear Bro. Reynolds:

The other day in looking over an old scrap book, I came across one containing a brief sketch of that gifted but unfortunate Masonic genius, Bro. David Vinton; and were it not that I am only hunting up and reproducing old Masonic poems, I might be tempted to turn aside and tell the story of his eventful life. But I only desire now to speak of his works, not of him. He was the author of that grand old dirge, "Soleman Strikes the Fun'ral Chime," which is known and sung wherever the York rite is practised, having by almost universal consent been adopted into the third degree.

This beautiful poem was originally intended to fill up an apparent gap in our ceremonies, viz.: in our burial services, and the words and the air—Pleyel's Hymn—were so faith-inspiring, that its introduction into the third degree is not to be wondered at, as up to that time (we may say) we had nothing to fill up this space, and when, as in some lodges (for the lack of singers) it is omitted, I feel as if half the degree was wanting. Then again how disappointed, when in such a lodge-room, as old Oriental (before the fire), with a hundred and fifty in grand procession, their voices blending with the deep tones of the organ, and your soul being wafted up as on angel's wings, to have them stop, yes, stop right in the middle, or having sung but two or three verses. Now, I am an old fogy, and do not like this cutting, this dropping out, and so propose to give it as it was originally, with Bro. Vinton's

FUNERAL DIRGE.

Solemn strikes the fun'ral chime,
Notes of our departing time;
As we journey here below,
Through a pilgrimage of woe.

Mortals now indulge a tear,
For mortality is here;
See how wide her trophies wave
O'er the slumbers of the grave.

Here another Guest we bring!
Seraphs, of celestial wing,
To our fun'ral altar come;
Waft a friend and brother home.

Far beyond the grave, there lie
Brighter mansions in the sky;
Where enthroned, the Deity
Gives man immortality.

There, enlarged, his soul will see
[illegible] was veiled in mystery;
[illegible] glories of the place
Show [illegible] Maker "face to face."

God of life's ETERNAL DAY!
Guide us, lest from Thee we stray,
By a false, delusive light,
To the shades of endless night.

Calm, the GOOD MAN meets his fate;
Guards celestial round him wait.
See! he bursts these mortal chains,
And o'er Death the victory gains!

Lord of all below, above,
Fill our souls with truth and love;
As dissolves our earthly tie,
Take us to Thy LODGE ON HIGH!

There, now, you see new life and beauty, and Masonry, and Christianity, and you will sing it with a zest entirely new.

I have never thought this the best that might be got for the third degree, but like most things, we have got so used to it that it can never be displaced only for a better.

Some lodges use the following:

Ah! when shall we three meet like them
Who last were at Jerusalem?
For three there were and one is not—
He lies where Cassia marks the spot.

Tho' poor he was, with kings he trod,
Tho' great, he humbly knelt to God,
Ah! when shall those restore again
The broken links of friendship's chain?

Behold! where mourning beauty bent
In silence o'er his monument,
And wildly spread in sorrow there,
The ringlets of the flowing hair!

The future sons of grief shall sigh,
While standing round in Mystic Tie,
And raise their hands, alas! to Heaven,
In anguish that no hope is given.

From whence we come, or whither go,
Ask me no more, nor seek to know,
Till three shall meet, who form'd like them,
The Grand Lodge at Jerusalem.

But this, even, does not come up to the sublimity of the occasion; but I trust that some day, not far distant, some Masonic-inspired soul will give us in words (the music must remain the same), fitted for the occasion, the GRAND MASONIC DIRGE, and let us consecrate Bro. Vinton, as he intended, to our honored dead.

In my last, I gave the Master's and Warden's songs, and the Funeral Ode was so closely connected with this branch of Masonry, that I thought it best to insert it here, and trust that the hint given will set some of our Masonic poets to work.

It is still an unsettled question as to what is the next degree above that of Master, so I shall decide for myself, and have it Past Master. As the Past Master's degree throws but little light on the history of Masonry, so I find but little in the line of poetry to grace the degree. The following is one of the oldest, if not the best that I can find, and so I will give the PAST MASTER'S SONG.

Let Masonry from pole to pole
Her sacred laws expand,
Far as the mighty waters roll,
To wash remotest land;
That virtue has not left mankind,
Her social maxims prove,
For stamped upon the Mason's mind,
Are unity and love.

Ascending to her native sky,
Let Masonry increase;
A glorious pillar rais'd on high,
Integrity its base.
Peace adds to olive boughs entwined,
An emblematic dove
As stamped upon the Masonic mind,
Is unity and love.

MASONIC TROWEL.—The above work is published monthly at Springfield, Illinois, and is ably edited by Harman G. Reynolds. It is printed on new type, excellent paper, and gives the latest Masonic tidings. The low price, $1.25 per year, puts it in the reach of all. Every Mason should subscribe for it at once.—Wyandotte Herald

WE are glad to hear of the prosperity of Bro. Reynolds, of THE MASONIC TROWEL, who recently lost his office and everything pertaining thereto in a devastating fire. He is at work again, and THE TROWEL is even more attractive than formerly. It is one of our very best publications.—Michigan Freemason.

Died.

At his residence in Jacksonville, Ill., February 5th, 1872, Bro. CYRUS MATHEWS, born in the State of Kentucky, A. D. 1806.

He was a member of Harmony Lodge No. 3, for twenty years or more, having filled the highest office in the Lodge, and was its principal support in its weakest days. He was buried with Masonic honors, and resolutions of respect passed and spread upon the record of the Lodge.

FREEMASONRY IN THE HOLY LAND.

THESE interesting lectures became so popular last winter that I found it impossible to fill engagements required in this State, and at the earnest solicitation of friends, have concluded to spend a portion of the winter here. I therefore make the following proposition to the several Masonic lodges in Illinois and elsewhere.

To deliver my Lodge Lecture on Masonic Researches in the Holy Land, verifying the truth of Masonic ritual and tradition, and exhibit some interesting relics from Jerusalem. I will also give an account of my visit to the English lodges, with the forms of initiation, passing, raising, schools of instruction, banquets, signs, passes, &c., &c. My charge for this Lecture is twenty dollars and expenses while at your place.

My Public Lecture is descriptive of Jerusalem, the Mosque of Omar, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Easter Week in the Holy City, Gethsemane the Mount of Olives, and the surrounding country.

My charge for the two Lectures is thirty dollars and expenses while at your place. For admission to the public lectures you can charge such sum as you see fit. Properly managed, it will pay the entire expenses and ought to leave a fair surplus for the benefit of the Lodge.

☞ Address the subscriber, at Fulton, Whiteside county, Illinois, or the editor of THE MASONIC TROWEL, Springfield, for engagements or further information.

Manual of the Lodge.

The Manual of the Lodge, by R. W. Bro. ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., now of Washington, is now published by Messrs. Clark & Maynard, of New York, in a very attractive and useful form.

In the first part of the book are twenty pages of beautiful and highly suggestive engravings, followed by the Manual of the Lodge in the same form, and with the same plates as heretofore. Then follows Section 1, embracing the ceremonies of consecration, dedication, constitution and installation of the officers of a new lodge; Section 2, relating to annual installations; Section [illegible] relating to installations in Grand Lodge; Section 5, in regard to festivals of the Order; Section 6, embracing ceremonies at laying foundation-stones of public structures; Section 7, with complete ceremonies for dedication of Masonic halls; Section 8, funeral service; Section 9, regulations for processions, with an appendix in which are set down the twenty-five landmarks of Masonry, the charges of a Freemason, the general regulations, and forms of documents. The book has 274 pages embracing the twenty pages of engravings, conforms almost literally to the standard work of Illinois, and is beyond all question the lodge manual far superior to any other for the work of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Arkansas and Mississippi, and probably in several other jurisdictions. For sale at this office, and will be sent to any address for $2.00, post paid.

EASTERN STAR CARDS.

I HAVE A SURPASSINGLY beautiful card, which will answer the purpose of a certificate as a member of a Chapter of the Eastern Star, three inches wide and four and a quarter inches long. On the face side is

THE STAR,

with its five points in Blue, Yellow, White Red and Green colors, with the emblems in each and the Pentagon in the center, with its usual divisions, letters and devices.

Over the Star, in Gold are the words,

"I have seen His Star in the East,"

while beneath it, in Green are the words,

"And have come to worship Him."

The border is blue and red, and the spaces are filled with ornaments in gold.

On the opposite side is a certificate embordered in Red and Blue, with large letters "E. S.," in light shading, in the centre, over which is printed a blank certificate, with room in one corner for seal, to be signed by the Matron and attested by the Secretary. On the end is a line for a signature of the lady receiving this certificate. The thought came from Bro. Hubbard—the design is our own.

THE MASONIC LIBRARY, published in two volumes, of 768 pages each. Orders for either will be received to suit convenience or as may be desired. PRICE, (neatly and substantially bound in blue cloth), $8.00 for the two volumes. The volumes may be had separately or together.

Each Volume is Complete in Itself.

This "Library" is not only the Cheapest, but comprises the best Selections of Masonic Works ever published. Some of the books contained in this "Library" cannot be obtained from any other source. "The Masonic Library contains the following Valuable Works:"

VOLUME 1.

"OLIVER'S ANTIQITIES OF FREEMASONRY."

"ANDERSON'S CONSTITUTIONS, HISTORY, &c."—(Embracing the entire Work as published by the Grand Lodge of England, in 1723, the first reprint of the whole Work, since 1734.)

"ILLUSTRATIONS OF FREEMASONRY."—(A most important Work, the study of which is necesary to complete a knowledge of the History of Freemasonry and its Mysteries.)

"HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY," (by Oliver,—Containing an elaborate History of the Craft in England.)

"BOOK OF THE LODGE."

"MANT'S POCKET COMPANION."

"SANDY'S HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY."

VOLUME 2.

*"DERMOTT'S AHIMAN REZON,"—(With Lithographic Plate of the Arms of the Operative and of Speculative Masons, published in 1764, and not published in any other Library.)

"SYMBOLIC DICTIONARY OF FREEMASONRY."

"HISTORY OF INITIATION,"—(In which the Mysteries of Initiation into all the Mystic Orders of the Ancient Nations are revealed and compared.)

"HALLIWELL'S ANCIENT POEM,"—(A most remarkable publication. Supposed to have been written no later than the Fourteenth Century.)

*"CONSTITUTIONS OF FREEMASONRY."—(1738 Edition. This Work, in a Historical point, is of the highest value. There is a mystery involved in the "Charges of a Freemason," which differ from the 1723 Edition. This Work is not published in any other Library.)

"CONSTITUTIONS OF THE GRAND LODGE of Scotland."

The highest Masonic authorities in the country have patronised and recommended the Masonic Library to the Craft.

*Not reprinted in any other Library.

LEON HYNEMAN.

Orders, accompanied by the money, will be received at this office, and the books sent by mail or express, and, in the United States, free from postal or express charges.
